As far back as he or anyone else can remember, William Hawkins, Lagrange (Ga.) negro, was cross-eyed. Recently he was run down by a truck, suffering injuries about the head that sent him to a hospital. His injuries healed, the bandages were removed from over his eyes and about his head. To the amazement of the doctors, nurses and William, himself, it was discovered his eyes were perfectly normal and uncrossed.

WILL MARK SITE OF AARON BURR'S PLOT

Blennerhasset Island to Be Site of Memorial.

Chicago.—Historic Blennerhasset island in the Ohio river, rich in early American lore, is to be converted into a park as the fulfillment of a lifelong ambition.

Amos Kilgore Gordon, Standard Oil official, who roamed the island 50 years ago as a boy, recently added the remainder of the island to the 40-acre farm that had been in possession of his family since 1827, says the Chicago Tribune.

Gordon said the historical traditions of the island interested him when he was a boy. Largest and most fertile in the Ohio river, the island became the home of Harmon Blennerhassett, wealthy Irish immigrant who came to America in 1797 to escape the turmoil in Ireland. Blennerhassett's became far-famed as a "paradise in the Ohio."

Burr Visited Island.

It was there that Aaron Burr in 1806, just out of office as Vice President of the United States, met Blennerhassett and interested him in a scheme for creating an empire in the West.

Blennerhassett, tired of scholarly seclusion at his retreat, joined the conspiracy. He furnished boats and provisions for an expedition and traveled with Burr in the South and West attempted to raise a following.

But disaster soon overtook the expedition. In 1806 President Thomas Jefferson issued a warning to citizens against Burr's designs and demanded that he be brought to justice.

Blennerhassett, financially ruined, sought refuge in one place and then another. Finally, despairing of repairing his fortunes in this country, he went to Montreal, then to England and finally to the Island of Guernsey, where he died in 1831.

Noted for Beauty.

In 1827, Gordon's grandfather, George Neal, Jr., bought 140 acres on the island when the Blennerhasset estate was settled. Recently, at Parkersburg, W. Va., Gordon purchased the remaining acres on the island.

During the Civil war the island alternately was in the hands of Union and Confederate soldiers. A large hollow sycamore tree, estimated to be 400 years old, was used by soldiers in hiding.

Even in Colonial days, when George Washington surveyed land in the vicinity and patented a farm nearby, in what was called "Washington's bottoms," the island was a noted beauty spot.

Essentially, Gordon says, it is the same today, and when cleared will be a noteworthy landmark of early American development. He plans to open the park to visitors.

To Hunt for Gold Table Aboard Sunken Galleon

La Plata, Mo.—Two Missourians are planning a trip in search of a 3,800-pound gold table which they believe was aboard a galleon reported to have been sunk in the Caribbean sea about four centuries ago.

Lester Dent, fiction writer, and Kenneth Sloan will sail in Dent's 50-foot schooner, in which the owner made a similar trip several years ago.

The story on which they base their hope for recovery of $1,500,000 in gold is that the Spanish governor of Cuba, called back to Spain to answer charges of plotting against Christopher Columbus, took all the gold available and had it cast into a table, which he took on board his ship.

If the expedition fails, Dent plans to go to Honduras to search for Inca silver.

Taunts of Girls Cause 50 Murders in Kenya

Nairobi, Kenya Colony.—The taunts of native girls, who tell their admirers first to get blood on their spears before courting, has been responsible for 50 murders in the Samburu district in recent months, headmen told a British officer sent to investigate.

The only solution, headmen said, was to "marry them off young." But early marriage is forbidden by the age-grade law, called Ilkileko.

The officer left 15 policemen, to be supported by the headmen, until the murderers are produced. As the headmen's annual incomes average $15, swift justice is expected.

Duckbill Platypus Brings Owner Fame

Washington.—Ellis S. Joseph, 300-pound dealer in strange and rare animals, is famed as the only man who ever brought a duck-bill platypus into captivity.

Aside from this, Joseph once presented an Australian city with the largest chimpanzee in captivity, knows every corner of the earth by heart, and virtually can name every animal that inhabits them.

He has walked from one coast of Africa to the other collecting animals and reptiles.

Born in Bombay and educated in China, Joseph is an Australian citizen.

Lights of New York

by L. L. STEVENSON

John Golden, the proprietor, was in an anecdotal mood recently and told a story concerning the late Charles Frohman. Years ago, in London, Mr. Frohman stopped at the Savoy. The first morning after his arrival, he rang for a waiter and explained that he wanted his morning meal served always at eight o'clock and that it was to consist of half a grape fruit, two eggs boiled two and a half minutes, toast and coffee. He also informed the waiter that he didn't care for conversation early in the morning and wasn't interested either in the weather or politics. Each morning, the waiter arrived on the minute with the breakfast at just the right temperature, served it silently and departed silently. For two weeks, the same thing continued and so impressed with the service was Mr. Frohman that he continued to talk long after his return, of the one perfect waiter he had encountered in all his travels.

* * *

One morning—it was Mr. Frohman's birthday—there came a knock at his door and when he said, "Come in," much to his surprise in walked that same English waiter with the usual Frohman breakfast. The waiter served it silently and departed silently just as he had back in London. Not until later did Mr. Frohman learn that his fellow producer, Charles Dillingham, had arranged to transport the waiter from London to New York as a birthday present to Mr. Frohman. The waiter continued in Mr. Frohman's service until he died, some years later. Then he entered Mr. Dillingham's employ and was in charge of the house until after Mr. Dillingham married.

* * *

Mr. Golden told the story at luncheon in one of the larger hotels. Finding he had forgotten his glasses, in his usual spontaneous manner, he borrowed a pair belonging to the head waiter. Having adjusted them, he looked at the owner.

"There," he said, "is the perfect waiter Mr. Frohman found in London."

When the 100 or more policemen, who work under Deputy Inspector Joseph Bannon, moved out of the Arsenal station in Central park recently to another building in the park farther up town, they left behind a building older than the park itself. The arsenal was built by the state in 1848 as a depository for arms and ammunition. At that time it was in what was practically a wilderness. In 1856, the city purchased the arsenal and the land surrounding it and during the war between the states, it was used to house troops. Then it became a police station as well as headquarters of the park department. Now it is being used solely by the park department.

Maybe a press agent story is o. k. today. A bright young man had a wealthy client who never had done anything worth a single line of publicity. So the press agent undertook a lot of digging and finally assembled a bunch of good, harmless stories to which the name of his boss could be attached. Before he could place any, his employer became blond-involved and hit the tabloids with a bang. So the press agent not only lost his job but also has a file of stories ready for a new name.

Robert Van Rosen, scenic designer, was recently presented with a Tibetan sacrificial dagger by Prof. Nicholas Roerich, of the Roerich museum. It contains one large dagger, two small dirks and a blood wiper. Semi-precious stones ornament the scabbard. Collectors place a value of more than $5,000 on the ancient weapon. The original owner is said to have killed more than 400 men with it. Van Rosen keeps it in his home. I wouldn't.

Quintuplets Get Table Designed in Star Form

Tamaqua, Pa.—A table in the form of a star, designed and built by J. E. Dyer of Frackville, near here, has received recognition from Dr. Allan Roy Dafoe, doctor for the Dionne quintuplets, in their behalf.

Dyer built the table like a star so that each of the quintuplets would have her place apart from the others, and designated the places the girls were to occupy by inlaying a gold letter on each offset.

Washington.—Arctic foxes and polar bears on Zemlya Vrangelya (Wrangel island) may soon prick up their ears at an unfamiliar roar as this lonely island, 300 miles north of the Arctic circle, acquires its first motor vehicle. One of the inhabitants is reported to have ordered a motorcycle.

"Just why any nation should want Wrangel island is not apparent at one's first approach," says the National Geographic society. "Nevertheless the United States, Great Britain and Russia have laid claim to it at various times."

"It lies in the Arctic ocean about 100 miles off the coast of northeastern Siberia and in winter is usually surrounded by glistening white and green sea ice. To reach the island was almost an impossibility until a few years ago. Now its few visitors can push northward in summer across Long strait in an ice-breaker. Sometimes the ship follows cautiously narrow channels of water while on all sides stretch milling ice masses that boom, grind, and crack ominously.

Rescue the Stranded.

"In January 1914 the Stefansson expedition ship, the Karluk, was crushed like an eggshell by the opening and closing of the ice, and sank about 65 miles from Wrangel island. The survivors lived on the island until rescued in September. In 1933 the Soviet ship, Cheliuskin, set out with supplies and a group of scientists to replace the handful of men and women then living on the island. Ninety miles off Cape Vankarem, Siberia, a wall of ice 30 feet high crashed against the ship, split, and sank it. The 104 passengers stranded on the ice were all rescued within two months by airplanes from the Siberian mainland.

"Wrangel island is approximately 60 miles long and 17 miles wide. Approached in winter, it would hardly be reassuring, appearing then as a bleak, white ice floe. But if one were snug in furs and speeding behind a lively dog team, he might find an interesting drama unfolded on the snow-covered island. Shapes, thought to be moving snow drifts, would turn out to be polar bears. Snowy owls would fly silently. And one might see tiny white lemmings, tunneling in the snow, pounced on by Arctic foxes with fluffy white fur.

"Should trans-polar air routes ever become commercially important, Wrangel island, with its position, and its natural plateau, might be a strategic air base for flights connecting northern America with northern Asia, and northern Europe. Proposed flights from the mouth of the Mackenzie river, Canada to the mouths of the Kolyma and Lena rivers which penetrate Siberia, could both be broken advantageously by stop-overs at Wrangel.

Grabbed for Britain.

"In 1921, Stefansson, believing the island would be a valuable air link between Great Britain and the Far East, sent four men and an Eskimo seamstress to hold it for Great Britain. After three men disappeared, and the fourth died, the woman was left alone on the island to be terrified by its polar bears. By trapping foxes and shooting seals and birds, she managed to survive until rescued in 1924. Her rescuers left 13 Eskimos and an American on the island. A Soviet expedition removed these and in 1926 replaced them with a colony of six Russians and about 50 Chukchi settlers.

"The hardships of Wrangel island are no novelty to the Chukchi inhabitants whose relatives thrive on the Arctic shore of the Siberian mainland only 100 miles farther south. Making their living by hunting walruses and seals, or farther inland, by breeding reindeer, many Chukchi families are wealthy, and are occasionally visited by Soviet and American traders. This accounts for the finding in their skin-covered huts of things like phonographs and back copies of American magazines.

"According to one Arctic explorer, Wrangel island is one of the most promising spots in the polar region for self-support. Although it lacks trees, driftwood washes up on its beaches, providing fuel and building material. Its minimum winter temperature is 20 to 40 degrees warmer than that experienced by many farmers near Yakutsk, Siberia. The island's hills are largely bare rock, but their bases and the low lands are covered with lichen, moss, and stunted vegetation that would supply grazing for herds of reindeer.

"Wild life is abundant. On sunny summer days the ice off shore is noisy with the snorting of walruses, and the barking of seals basking in the sun. Thousands of niches in cliff-face rookeries are filled with sea birds. Sea gulls, ducks, and cormorants congregate on white sand and pebble spits, while flocks of geese fly overhead."

Moscow.—A grisly memento of the blood-stained history of Red Square in the days of Ivan the Terrible and other czars famed for their cruelty was unearthed recently by subway workers digging the second line of the Moscow "metro."

Eleven skeletons, eight of them standing upright and the others lying over them in a well 50 feet under the old orthodox monastery on a side street just off Red Square were unearthed. The well was filled with sand and the position of the skeletons and other circumstances indicated they were persons who had been buried alive.

The skeletons were so old they crumbled to dust at the slightest touch. This, together with the depth underground at which the discovery was made, showed they had been there several centuries. Archeologists and historians will study them in an attempt to identify the period.

Oregon Has Mint; Never Made a Coin

The Dalles, Ore.—Oregon has a United States mint that never coined a dime. Constructed here in 1868 at a cost of $100,000, the mint was to be used in handling the heavy flow of money-ore from Idaho and Oregon mines—at one time estimated to be approximately $12,000,000 annually. The mint had just been completed, with H. A. Hogue appointed superintendent, and D. M. French named as disbursing officer, when the mines were exhausted. The "mint" was converted into a grain warehouse.

Calls Role of Heart in Affection a Minor One

Palo Alto, Calif.—If you are in love and want to demonstrate it to the beloved one don't make a melodramatic clutch with both hands at the region of your heart, advises Dr. Calvin P. Stone, Stanford professor of psychology.

If the object of your affections happens to be a modern up-to-date young woman with a thorough knowledge of the latest tendencies of medical science she may think you are merely suffering from heart trouble.

Instead, whatever gymnastics you feel impelled to perform, concentrate them on the region of the pituitary gland at the base of the skull, says Doctor Stone.

The heart may get a little kick out of being in love, he says, with a manifestation of increased blood action, but the real impulses of the emotions of courtship, marriage and love come from the pituitary gland.

Even the increased heart action, he says, is probably due only to the increased secretions of the pituitary gland, and this is what has caused the world in the past to think it was the heart that was responsible for the whole affair.

HEROINE REWARDED

When a T. W. A. air liner crashed recently near Uniontown, Pa., Miss Nellie Granger, the frail hostess, though injured, pluckily dragged from the blazing wreckage the two other survivors of the fourteen persons aboard, ran to a farm house to telephone about the disaster and returned to care for her charges. The company rewarded Nellie with a two weeks' aerial vacation trip to Panama and promotion to the Sky Chief, New York to Los Angeles luxury transport plane.

DAD TELLS SECRET TO REGAIN HIS SON

Shell-Shocked Vet Reveals Paternity of Child.

South Bend, Ind.—Tears streamed from the eyes of Alies Horning, shell-shocked war veteran, in St. Joseph county court, as he gazed at the five-year-old boy the world had known as his adopted son.

Alies Horning was fighting his divorced wife, Mrs. Betty Horning, for custody of blue-eyed, laughing Albert Eugene Horning. She had sought a writ of habeas corpus to take the boy from him.

The veteran had been telling why he should retain the lad in his own home. Suddenly he was shaken with sobs. In a strained voice, he blurted out:

"He is my son—my own son. Do you understand? I am more than his adopted father. I am his natural father!"

Attorneys and even the judge gasped as Horning continued:

"He was born to Mrs. Marjorie Deming in Aurora, Ill., where she registered in a hospital as Mrs. Horning. After the baby was born, her husband, C. W. Deming, also a war veteran, told me:

"That child is yours. You will have to keep him."

Horning said that when he adopted the boy the Demings explained they were giving him away because they already had one child and could not support another.

The tearful plea won at least temporary victory for the father. Judge Bingham said:

"The child would be better off with his father than anyone else. I'll award the father temporary custody."

Horning had taken the boy from the home of Mrs. Horning's mother at Pulaski, Ind., after he and his wife were divorced a few months ago.

Shocking Tale of Mud That Killed Silva Cow

Visalia, Calif.—Here's a shocking story.

A worker on the M. P. Silva ranch in the Liberty district, pitching hay in the barn at evening milking time, was amazed when he saw one of the cows drop dead as she approached the barn. Two cows behind her also fell to the ground.

The hired man sprang down into the corral, catching one of the cows by the tail in an effort to help her up, at the same time hanging onto the corral fence. He received a shock which threw him over the fence.

Mrs. Silva, preparing the evening meal, approached the electric range in the kitchen, only to be hurled back against the drainboard.

A short in a transformer near the barn is believed to have caused mud in the corral to become charged with electricity, and is blamed for the shocking events.

Lad Swallows Toothpick; Gulps His Troubles Away

Newark, N. J.—Fred Mack, sixteen years old, half-way swallowed a toothpick on Newark's busiest corner. A policeman tried to extract it. Two policemen summoned from traffic duty on nearby corners also failed. A half dozen spectators and advisers grew to a half hundred and then 500. A riot squad arrived. An ambulance followed. The physician failed like the policemen. Then Fred gulped, grinned. "It's gone," he said. Doctors are following its progress by X-ray.

Immorality in Apartment Leads Her to Set Fires

Chicago.—Mrs. Isabel Borrell, thirty-eight years old, mother of three children, confessed to Assistant State's Attorney Gordon Nash that she had started several fires in the apartment building where she lives.

"Immorality was going on in one of the apartments," she explained. "I complained to the building owner about it, but nothing was done. I would get to brooding about it and then I would start a fire, call firemen, and warn people out of the building."

BRET HARTE'S famous story, "The Outcasts of Poker Flat," has been a favorite bit of reading matter with the multitudes for years and years; it is one of those tales that grow no less popular with the passing of the years. Now it's to be turned into a picture with Norman Foster playing the lead.

Incidentally, they're pushing Foster right along at RKO, and first thing he knows he's likely to be a very popular leading man.

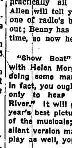
Incidentally, they've recently finished a picture at RKO studio that has everyone who has seen it raving about it. It is "The Ex-Mrs. Bradford," with William Powell, and Jean Arthur, one of our most talented blonds. It's said to be as good as "The Thin Man," which is tops in the way of praise. Powell is a consistent performer, year in and year out. He has won new laurels for his portrayal of Flo Ziegfeld in "The Great Ziegfeld."



Wm. Powell

All of Bill Hart's friends are cheering because he won that case of his against United Artists. He asked for $500,000, claiming that they didn't do right by his last picture, "Tumbleweeds," on which he had spent $300,000, all of his savings. That was way back in 1925. The court gave him the verdict, but cut the amount to $85,000.

Jack Benny didn't mind writing his own script for one brodcast, when the chap who had been doing it fell ill, but he drew the line at writing it every week—for writing a script and then broadcasting a program as well takes practically all your time, as Fred Allen will tell you. So Goodman Ace, one of radio's best writers, is helping out; Benny has wanted him for a long time, so now he's happy.

"Show Boat" is finished at last, with Helen Morgan and Paul Robeson doing some marvelous singing in it; in fact, you ought to see the picture if only to hear him sing "Old Man River." It will probably be one of the year's best pictures, certainly the best of the musicals; even if you saw the silent version made years ago, and the play as well, you must see this one.

Carl Laemmle startled everybody at that final dinner given for him before his retirement, when he announced that, a few years ago, he needed money badly and didn't know where to turn. His company, Universal, could have been sold for something like $80,000,000 a few years before that, but he didn't want to give up picture making.

He borrowed the money from Irving Thalberg, who was his secretary before he became the boy wonder of the movie world and moved to Metro. And now "Uncle Carl" has sold Universal, for less money than he once refused for it, and Junior Laemmle may work for Thalberg.

Sally Eilers had fun when she first reached New York for a vacation, with her husband, Harry Joe Brown, in tow. She was born in New York but left for California when she was six. So she spent her first Sunday seeing sights; riding on Fifth avenue busses, seeing the Empire State building, Radio City, and the Aquarium.

Percy Westmore, one of Hollywood's make-up experts, is going on a lecture tour that certainly ought to appeal to women. He'll take along life masks of 25 stars, and use them as illustrations of the proper way to arrange hair and apply make-up.

Louise Fazenda is loud in her praise of the scenario writers who worked on Kay Francis' newest picture, "The White Angel," which is based on the life of Florence Nightingale, famous nurse of the Crimean war. Says she couldn't see, at first, how they could possibly get a picture out of it. They did; they got a good one, too. But it does seem an awful waste to put Kay, one of our best dressed women, into a nurse's uniform! But here's betting she looks just as lovely in a uniform as she does in one of the latest Paris ensembles.

Bob Davis Reveals

Some "Inside Stuff" Gathered From "Old Man Pyramid."

FED up on rumor, exaggeration and absolute inaccuracy set forth in recent books with reference to the widely known Pyramid family scattered along the Nile, I once called on Cheops, the most important member of the dynasty, and in the language of the late John L. Sullivan, "shot him a few personalities."

"Were you actually built under the supervision of astronomers," I asked, "for casting and measuring the shadows of the sun?"

"That statement is absolute nonsense," replied the pyramid, in no uncertain terms. "At the time I was planned there wasn't an astronomical authority in all Egypt. There wasn't an intelligence that had the slightest idea of what science terms the cardinal points. North, east, south and west meant nothing. It was a mere accident that the Nile at this point flowed north and that I was built on the right bank. East and west didn't exist. It was right and left. Up in Karema Tanganyika where the Nile channel takes a turn and runs southwest there is among the Dongola people a fixed idea that the sun rises in the West."

Astronomy the Bunk.

"Then astronomically you had no significance whatever?"

"Pure bunk, to use a popularized American word," said the pyramid, frowning down upon me from its pinnacle 461 feet aloft. "Now I'll make another important disclosure. When King Cheops, who reigned about 3,000 B. C., became convinced that he would eventually die, he cast about for a final resting place pending the resurrection of his spirit, which he believed would reign in another state. At that time it was customary to place the royal remains under ground and mark the place with a modest monument, in his case a mastaba of eight insets. He summoned his architect and drew up a design, which was about one-fourth the size of my present proportions. A few years later, having come to the belief that the plans weren't up to the caliber of the proposed occupant, he remodeled me over the site of the first design and provided for his interment at a considerable elevation above ground. Space for his imperial bones was provided and the blueprints O. K.'d for a pyramidal construction. The longer Cheops lived the better he thought of himself. In the end he went up several stories and I was erected on the lines and of the dimensions I now enjoy."

Plenty of Building Material.

"But why select a spot in the perpetual sands where there wasn't a square foot of building material?" I asked.

"Who told you that?" asked the pyramid, rather bluntly, I thought.

"Frequent reference is made as to the source of the heroic stones used in your construction," I retorted.

"Listen! Underneath the forty-foot blanket of sand drifted in through the centuries lies a rock dome several thousand acres in extent—enough building material from which to erect more and better pyramids than the demand warrants. All the rock except the black granite brought from Assuan, up the Nile, for the inner tomb, and the white limestone for my casing out of Tura, down the Nile, came from that hole now occupied by the Sphinx, 300 yards down the slope. Beyond that is Kephren Mycerinus and lesser pyramids, all built of indigenous stone. And, furthermore, your countryman, Dr. George Reisner, professor of Egyptology for Harvard university and director of the Harvard-Boston expedition, excavating all around me, is turning up whole cities built of local material. Practically all that you see here, the oldest construction in Egypt, is home product.

Lots of Man Power.

"Why so much speculation as to how you were piled up into such a perfect and enduring mass?" I asked.

"Easy," responded the pyramid. "We had man power by the million, all subject to the king's will. If one boy can pile small blocks of wood into a small pyramid, myriad men can pile large blocks of stone into a large one. We had ropes and timber and were experts in the use of the fulcrum, the square and the plummet. The stones weighed from four to seven or eight tons. A thousand or more slaves for each lift mattered little."

"How did you get your levels?"

"I'll answer that question by informing you that today, 5,000 years after my 13-acre foundation was laid, a survey showed a variation of less than one-fifth of an inch minus and plus over the total acreage. Which proves that the builders must have known what they were about."

"How did you get along without the use of mortar or cement?"

"Very simple indeed. Under each stone at the moment of its laying was spread a thin film of what is now known as plaster of paris, upon which the stone in a sense floated. While this medium was still wet and soft it was a simple matter to shift the stone to the exact position desired, after which the plaster exuded and the blocks, held down by the accumulating burden, stayed put."

Italy Takes Addis Ababa; the Emperor Flees

Haile Selassie

Mussolini's victorious troops soon after marched into the capital, the first to enter being a picked regiment representing all units of the Italian army, the Askari, infantry, artillery, air force, engineers, grenadiers, bersaglieri, Alpini, cavalry, marines and Fascist militiamen.

Their coming was welcomed by the foreigners who remained in the city, for as soon as the negus left, the natives began to pillage, plunder and burn. The business center of the town was speedily wrecked and the government buildings were stormed and ravaged, these including the treasury from which the state's store of gold was stolen, and the armory. The streets were strewn with corpses and the Ethiopians, crazed by liquor, rushed about shooting at random and gathering up their loot to carry it to the hills.

Only one foreigner was reported killed. That was Mrs. N. A. Stadin, American wife of an Adventist missionary, who was struck by a stray bullet. Nearly all other foreigners were gathered in the well fortified British legation, but American Minister Cornelius Van H. Eggert with his wife and the male members of the staff remained in the American compound. They were armed only with rifles and pistols and were under orders from Secretary of State Hull not to risk their lives uselessly; but they were determined to hold the legation and radio station as long as possible. This plucky little group was attacked repeatedly by marauders but repulsed all onslaughts. Mr. Engert was in wireless communication with Washington. The British legation offered to send a detachment of Sikhs to escort the Americans to the British compound, but Mr. Engert declined to leave his legation at that time. Next day he and his staff evacuated the compound.

Haile Selassie went by train to Djibouti, French Somaliland, and was received with all honors at the governor's palace. He and his family boarded the British cruiser Enterprise and sailed for Palestine.

At first it was rumored the French would hold him for a time, but later advices said the French and British governments had decided that he remained a sovereign and must have full liberty of movement.

So ends the military part of Mussolini's African adventure, a success despite the opposition of the League of Nations and the imposition of economic and financial penalties. The duce announced the victory to his country from the chamber of deputies and there was wild rejoicing throughout Italy. It is taken for granted Mussolini will set up an Amharic state in part of Ethiopia under a puppet emperor; and presumably Italy, France and Great Britain will get together and determine their respective zones of influence in the ancient empire. The humiliated league can do nothing except lift the existing sanctions, which proved futile in halting the war. British Foreign Minister Eden and his fellows in the government must admit as gracefully as possible their failure to check Mussolini and get what they can for Britain out of the African tragedy. France probably is not sorry over the outcome, for her opposition to the duce's ambitious scheme always was half-hearted.

Vandenberg's Name Is to Be Presented

SENATOR ARTHUR H. VANDENBERG of Michigan has asked Gov. Frank D. Fitzgerald of that state to present his name to the Republican convention in Cleveland for the Presidential nomination, but the senator insists this does not make him an active candidate.

Senator Vandenberg

"The Michigan state convention generously instructed the Michigan delegation in Cleveland to present my name," the senator said. "But the delegation is unpledged—at my request. It is free to vote as it pleases. I have not sought a delegation here or elsewhere and I shall not do so. I have not sought the nomination and shall not do so. My situation is not changed in the slightest."

Friends of Senator Borah in Utah tried unsuccessfully for a Borah pledged delegation from that state. The Republican state convention in Ogden voted to send an uninstructed group to Cleveland, following the recommendation of the resolutions committee.

The Arkansas delegation also will be uninstructed, though the state convention approved an "expression of good will" toward Gov. Alf Landon.

Col. Henry Breckenridge, who offered himself to the Democrats as a Presidential nominee aspirant merely so that disaffected members of the party might have some place to go, received about one-seventh of the votes in the Maryland preference primary. The rest, of course, went to Mr. Roosevelt. Colonel Breckenridge had made no campaign.

Radicals Control French Chamber of Deputies

FINAL elections in France put complete control of the chamber of deputies in the hands of the revolutionary "Popular Front," a coalition of Communists, Socialists, Radical Socialists and minor left wing groups. The new chamber does not meet until June, and the confusion is so great that there are fears of chaos and financial panic in the interim. Many believe the Popular Front will be unable to form a stable government to succeed that of Premier Sarraut. The lead must be taken by the Socialists, for they now form the largest group in the chamber with 146 seats. The Radical Socialists have 115, the Communists 72 and minor left parties 44. The National bloc, including center and right parties opposed to the leftists, have 236 seats.

Senator Hastings Will Not Seek Re-election

DANIEL O. HASTINGS, senator from Delaware, chairman of the Republican senatorial campaign committee and outspoken opponent of the New Deal, will not seek re-election when his present term expires. He so announced in a letter to the party leaders of his state, giving as his reason the necessity to devote himself to his law practice. This may have influenced his decision, but it is more than suspected that the real reason was the fact that the du Pont family, all-powerful in Delaware Republican politics, had decided that the senatorial seat should go to Gov. C. Douglas Buck, who is related to the du Ponts by marriage. Senator Hastings has always been ready and eloquent in defense of the du Ponts against attacks by the New Dealers.

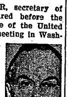
Navy Expansion Measure Passed by the House

SINCE international naval disarmament efforts have failed, those who advocate adequate national defense rejoice in the passage by the house of the bill appropriating approximately $531,000,000 to build our navy up to treaty strength. Representative Marcantonio of New York and a few others put up loud opposition, but a record vote was not necessary. The objectors dwelt especially on a clause authorizing the laying of keels for two 35,000 ton battleships after January 1, 1937, should any foreign signatory to the London naval treaty start a battleship replacement program. Two days later they might have read dispatches from London saying rumors had reached there that Japan was considering laying down a 55,000 ton battleship armed with 21-inch guns.

Appropriations in the bill, along with other available funds, will give the navy a total of $592,237,807 for the next fiscal year, starting July 1.

Business Men Differ With Mr. Roper

DANIEL C. ROPER, secretary of commerce, appeared before the Chamber of Commerce of the United States at its annual meeting in Washington and warned its members, most of whom are persistsent critics, of New Deal policies, that unless private enterprise takes up the slack in employment, business must pay the relief bill out of earnings.



Sec. Roper

"It is the responsibility of all business and industrial enterprises, said Roper, "and not of one particular segment of the government to increase its efforts for greater employment. If a substantial measure of increased re-employment does not take place the taxation for relief purposes will come largely from business earnings. There must be re-employment or a longer period of increased taxation."

Roper admitted that the administration had fostered bureaucracy, but insisted that it was occasioned by an emergency, and responsibility for its increase again lay at the door of private business.

Various members of the chamber replied spiritedly. Roy C. Osgood, vice president of the First National bank of Chicago, predicted that if the administration embarked on a sound fiscal program that would inspire confidence, business would make rapid strides toward recovery. He criticized the pending tax on corporate earnings as impracticable and a brake on business expansion and stability.

Huge New Tax Measure Rushed Through House

WITH extraordinary speed which the opposition considered indecent, the administration's new $803,000,000, revenue bill was pushed through the house. The vote, 267 to 93, was almost strictly along party lines. The roll call showed 82 Republicans and only 11 Democrats voted against the measure, while four Republicans deserted the minority to cast their lot with the administration.

Sen. Harrison

The bill was handed to the senate whose finance committee, headed by Pat Harrison, had been studying it in secret cessions in order to be prepared for the public hearings that opened two days after the house had acted. There had been predictions that this committee would modify the measure radically, but the opposition to it in Democratic ranks seemed to have faded away and its passage by the senate without material change was deemed probable.

As passed by the house the bill provides:

1. A graduated tax on corporation income which, it is estimated, will force distribution of $3,360,000,000 more in dividends and yield the government an additional $620,000,000 annually.

2. A "windfall" tax on unpaid or refunded processing taxes imposed under the invalidated AAA, which is expected to yield $100,000,000.

3. Continuation of the capital stocks and excess profits taxes for six months to yield $35,000,000.

4. A refund of $35,000,000 to processors who suffered financial losses under the old AAA.

Hagood Holds New Command One Day, Then Retires

MAJ. GEN. JOHNSON HAGOOD, assigned to the command of the Sixth corps area with headquarters at Chicago, held the command only one day, as a matter of form, and then at his own request was relieved of the assignment and retired from active service. He said he would remain in Chicago several months to do some special work for a mail order house and then would select a permanent residence and write a book telling "how the United States can get a very much better national defense at very much less cost to the taxpayer."

Young Farouk Succeeds to Egyptian Throne

FUAD I, king of Egypt, died of a gangrenous throat infection at his country place near Cairo at the age of sixty-eight. The crown prince, Farouk, a sixteen-year-old pupil in the royal military academy at Woolwich, England, was immediately proclaimed king and started for Egypt, sailing from Marseilles on a British liner escorted by a British warship in order to avoid going by way of Italy.

King Farouk.

Before his death Fuad named a regency council of three to govern the country until Farouk comes of age. The young king, who is six feet tall and well educated, hopes to return to England to complete his studies at Woolwich.

Egypt elected a new parliament, and though returns are not in at this writing it is believed the Wafd or Nationalist party won a clear majority of the seats. The Wafdists demand a free Egypt, completely rid of British influence and control. The negotiations for the new Anglo-Egyptian treaty were deferred until after the election.

Bringing Back CCC to Its Authorized Strength

DIRECTOR ROBERT FECHNER of the Civilian Conservation corps moved to bring the corps up to its authorized strength of 350,000 by ordering state enrollment officers to disregard previous quotas and accept any qualified boy from a relief family.

At the same time, Fechner authorized enrollments in eight southern states omitted from the original schedule, while the War department ordered corps area commandants to report on the number of recruits needed in each state.

Estimating that between 30,000 and 35,000 new members would be required, Fechner attributed slowness of enrollments to improving business conditions. Vacancies also exist for 4,000 war veterans.

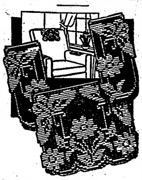
Urges New Compact on Neutrality and Rights

THROUGH Secretary of State Hull the United States has suggested the conclusion of a general convention to supplement and clarify existing rules governing the rights and duties of neutrals in wartime. The proposal is made to the nations that will take part in the American peace conference in Buenos Aires this year, but is intended to be open to all other nations in the world.

Pioneer Champion of Inland Waterways Is Dead

JAMES ELLWOOD SMITH of St. Louis, who died the other day at the age of eighty-five, had devoted much of his life and fortune to the cause of inland waterways transportation. He was one of the founders and the president emeritus of the Mississippi Valley association.

Make This Lovely Set for the Favorite Chair



Pattern 5517

Have you ever noticed that the most comfortable chair in the room gets the hardest wear? Then that's the one to protect, as you can so easily with lovely filet crochet. A crochet hook, some string, and this exclusive design are all one needs to turn out a lovely chair set. Butterflies and flowers form the design, and how effectively they contrast with the open stitch that surrounds them. So get busy!

In pattern 5517 you will find a chart and complete instructions for making the set; illustrations of it and of all stitches used and material requirements.

DAD'S THE REAL WINNER!
BUT DAD, MY STEERS ARE THE BEST IN THE COUNTY! PLEASE LET ME ENTER THEM IN THE FAIR!
BAH! NONSENSE! I WON'T HAVE YOU WASTING YOUR TIME AT FAIRS!
THAT'S RIGHT! WHY SHOULD HE HAVE ANY FUN-WHILE YOU DO ALL THE HARD WORK!
MR. COFFEE NERVES
BILL, WHY ARE YOU SO MEAN TO JIM? HE'S WORKED AWFULLY HARD RAISING THOSE STEERS!
HE DOESN'T WORK HALF AS HARD AS I DO.... AND HIS HEAD DOESN'T ACHE ALL THE TIME, EITHER!
NOBODY CARES HOW YOU FEEL—BUT JUST LET ONE OF THOSE STEERS GET A HEADACHE!
WELL, THE DOCTOR TOLD YOU THAT YOU WOULDN'T FEEL ANY BETTER UNTIL YOU QUIT COFFEE AND SWITCHED TO POSTUM!
RATS! COFFEE NEVER HURT ME! I'VE DRUNK IT ALL MY LIFE!
THERE'S SYMPATHY FOR YOU! WANTS YOU TO GIVE UP COFFEE! PAY NO ATTENTION TO SUCH DRIVEL!
BUT WHY ARE YOU SO STUBBORN ABOUT IT? IT WOULDN'T HURT YOU TO TRY POSTUM!
ALL RIGHT— ALL RIGHT! I'LL TRY IT —IF YOU'LL JUST LEAVE ME ALONE!
CURSES! THAT MEDDLING WOMAN HAS RUINED ME!
WELL, JIM— SO YOUR STEERS WON THE BLUE RIBBON! FINE!
YOU BET, DAD... AND IT SURE WAS SWELL OF YOU TO LET ME ENTER THEM!
YOUR FATHER FEELS SO GOOD, HE CAN'T REFUSE YOU ANYTHING... SINCE HE SWITCHED TO POSTUM!

CHILDREN should never drink coffee... and the caffein in coffee disagrees with many grown-ups, too. If you are bothered by headaches or indigestion, or can't sleep soundly... try Postum for 30 days! It contains no caffein. It is simply whole wheat and bran, roasted and slightly sweetened. Easy to make, costs less than one-half cent a cup. It's delicious, too... and may prove a real help. Bronson Child Is Found After Roaming in Woods

Clad only in light clothing, the 2½ year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Earl Coffield farmers living 16 miles north of Bronson, spent a day and a night toddling through dense woods near her home, in a drizzling rain and with the mercury near the freezing mark.

A posse of more than 300 men aided in the search, which ended Friday morning when the child Marilyn, was found. She was taken to a hospital at Hallock, where it was said she had not suffered seriously from the exposure.

FORMER RESIDENT DIES AT WALKER

Henry Simonson, a former resident of this community, died at the state Sanatorium at Walker, Minn., Friday morning, May 15, after an illness of two years. Mr. Simonson was born in Ottertail county, October 29, 1892 and was 43 years, 6 mos. and 15 days of age at the time of his death. He was united in marriage to Mary Cosgrove of Green Isle, Minn., on June 4th, 1929 and they made their home at Toledo, Ohio, until spring of 1932 when they moved to Green Isle.

An infant son, his parents and one sister have preceded him in death. To mourn his departure, he leaves his widow, Mary Simonson of Green Isle, and five sisters, Mrs. O. K. Sevre, Mrs. Geo. Hanson, Mrs. Fred Leach, Gunda and Tillie, all residing in this community. Sympathy of many friends in St. Hilaire and vicinity is extended to the bereaved relatives.

VILLAGE TEAM WINS BALL GAME SUNDAY

The high school baseball team took on the village team in an interesting game played on the school diamond last Sunday. The school team started action by running in a couple of scores in the first inning. From that the point on, the game was quite evenly played, neither side having much advantage. The final score was 12 to 10 in favor of the village team.

The local Lake Shore oil station was improved this week by installation of two flood lights on the front of the building. This will provide ample lights for autoists, as well as for the attendants while working around cars. Front of the station office was given a coat of white paint last week, and also a new sign.

Ada Young Man Seized in Iowa Confesses to Killing Norman Co. Man

Sheriff John Krogstad of Norman county Monday announced that Loraine (Larry) Riggers, 22-year-old Ada youth arrested in Marshalltown, Iowa, last Thursday, has confessed he shot and killed John Keninger, bachelor farmer living near Ada.

The sheriff said the youth admitted he killed Keninger, 44 years old, as he slept in bed and that he obtained $10 and a few pennies.

The youth was arrested in the Iowa city after an intensive search instituted by Norman county officials and Melvin C. Passolt, superintendent of the state bureau of criminal apprehension, who assigned a number of operatives to the case.

Riggers will be brought before Judge James E. Montague, who opens the spring term of court today, for arraignment on a first degree murder charge.

Tales About Town

Happenings of the Week, Told in Brief. News Concerning People You Know

The Luther League of the Norwegian Lutheran church will have service at the church Sunday evening.

Co. Commissioner Paul Roy was at Thief River Falls Monday to preside at a meeting of the county board.

Manford Dahle, student at the University of North Dakota was home last week end for a visit with his parents, Rev. and Mrs. M. L. Dahle.

Mr. and Mrs. James A. Dahl of Glyndon, Minn., are the happy parents of a ten pound son born May 15th. This is the second son born to Mr. and Mrs. Dahl.

Emil Just has bought the former M. R. Hage residence property in southwest part of town and is improving it for rental purposes.

Phil Anderson recently purchased a Ford V-8 car which he is learning to master before starting out for Illinois the latter part of next month.

Oscar C. Peterson, formerly buttermaker at Hazel, who has operated the Model creamery at Thief River Falls the past few years, has discontinued business in that city.

The St. Hilaire Hatchery has been a busy place the past few days turning out lots of poults. In addition to the hatchery end of the business, Mrs. Janda also carries a line of feeds.

Rev. M. Dahle and son, Manford, motored Monday morning to Grand Forks. From there Rev. Dahle continued on to Drayton to visit with parishioners in his former charge.

Mr. and Mrs. Phillip Fricker and son and daughter motored here Saturday from Brainerd and spent until the following day at the home of Mr. Fricker's brother, Mike Fricker. Phillip Fricker was a resident of St. Hilaire about 45 years ago.

Shipments of package bees from southern states have been received daily the past week by Al. Brink, Aug. Berglund, Clarence Hallstrom, Harry Winter and Sam Pearson. All are now busy at getting their apiaries ready for the summer season.

A group of citizens gathered Monday evening and helped clean up the grounds at Sweet park near the G. N. station. The plot would be an excellent place for having band concerts this summer if ways and means can be found to erect some kind of band stand.

Male Birds Faster

It has been found that with many of the migratory birds which come into England from Southern Europe and Africa, the males arrive about a week before the females.

Emil Ensrud returned home this week after being employed during spring work on a farm near St. Thomas, N. D.

Mrs. Robert Black came down yesterday from Thief River to visit for a short time with her mother, Mrs. Hilda Gigstad.

After spending a few days at home, Walfred Walback returned Sunday to his work at the CCC camp at New London, Minn.

Dr. D. S. Horn motored up Monday morning from Ulen and spent until Tuesday evening here taking care of his local dental practice.

Henry Sande returned Tuesday evening after a trip to the Twin Cities. He brot back two Ford cars, one a coach and the other a coupe, for resale purposes.

Arvid Dahlstrom expects a call this week to go to North Dakota. He has two jobs of bricklaying in view that will keep him busy in Dakota for a month or more.

A number of local anglers took advantage of opening of the fishing season last week to spend Saturday and Sunday at lakes south and east of here. All report fair luck.

Robert Collins, Leo Carpenter and Ordean Olson have been engaged the past week at painting exterior and interior of Ebenezer Lutheran church in Mayfield township. They have several more jobs awaiting them.

The WPA crew engaged at improving the local cemetery grounds, was transferred Tuesday morning to a new bridge being built near Kratka. As only a small amount of work remained to be done here, the village authorities set a crew at work Wednesday morning to complete the cemetery job.

Four Pennington Boys Enrolled in CCC Camp

Twenty-six boys from seven Northwestern Minnesota counties, including four from Pennington county, were enrolled here Monday in the civilian conservation corps. After being examined by a reserve army officer they were taken to the CCC camp at Middle River.

Find Deposit Similar to Graphite in Hickory Twp.

A deposit of a substance resembling graphite was found last week 300 feet underground on the H. T. Hanson farm in Hickory township while a well was being drilled by T. M. Herberg & Sons of Gonvick. Samples of the deposit were sent in to St. Paul for analysis.

LEADERS MEET

A meeting of leaders of the Home Management Project was held here Wednesday this week. The meeting was marked by very good attendance which augurs well for the group meetings to be held later. Lunch for the leaders was served by Mrs. M. Jackson.

June 4, 5, 6 is boy's and girl's 4-H Club Week at Crookston. If those who wish to go have not put in their application to their adult leader, they should do so at once, because they will choose from the applications the ones which they think will best represent their club.

The main purpose of the 4-H club week is the educational opportunities it affords 4-H club members. The first aim of every boy and girl who is planning to attend should be to get as much information as possible in the various phases of farming and homemaking. The entire forenoon will be devoted to instruction. Beginning at 3 o'clock on the afternoon of the first day and continuing on the second and third afternoons, a competitive athletic program will be staged in which 15 counties will compete.

Each county will be permitted to enter the kittenball, volley ball, basket ball, kick ball, horseshoe, swimming and track events. Every member should go prepared to take part in the play program and should take tennis shoes and old clothes for the games.

State Examinations in County Rural Schools Scheduled Next Week

A. C. Matheson, county superintendent of schools, announced today that state board examinations will be conducted in the rural schools of the county for three days next week, beginning Tuesday, May 26. The following schedule has been arranged: Tuesday, 10:15 a. m. general mathematics 11; 2 p. m., geography, seventh year. Wednesday, May 27, 10:15 a. m. English, eighth year; 2 p. m., general science II. Thursday, May 28, 10:15 a. m., social studies, eighth year.

COMMENCEMENT TO BE HELD THURSDAY

Commencement week for the local high school will be ushered in next Sunday when Baccalaureate service will be held at the local Norwegian Lutheran church. Rev. E. L. Tungseth, of Thief River Falls will deliver the sermon, and there will be appropriate selections by the school Glee Club.

Commencement exercises will be held at the high school auditorium Thursday evening starting at 8:00. Rev. A. O. Bloom of Grand Forks will be the commencement speaker. Other numbers on the program for the evening are:

There are eleven candidates for graduation this year, six girls and five boys, as follows: Woodrow Almquist, Donna Fae Anderson, Hubert H. Huff, Luceile H. Lindblom, Carl O. Nelson, Gladys C. Nyland, Reuben Odegaard, Earl G. Pearson, Eleanor L. Rodahl, Joyce R. Roese, Gertrude E. Swanson.

WOMEN'S PROJECT LEADERS CONVENE

"Cheerful Kitchens" is the subject of discussion by the Women's project groups this month. Miss Charlotte Kirchner of the University Farm met with the local leaders of eleven groups in Thief River Falls, on Monday, five groups in Goodridge on Tuesday and six groups in St. Hilaire on Wednesday.

Things to be considered in cheerful kitchens are kinds, finishes and colors of floors, floor coverings, woodwork and suggestions for making and hanging curtains. Kitchen equipment is discussed in relation to construction and use as well as principles of selection.

The next leaders training meeting will be June 15, 16 and 17, and the topic for next month is "Cleaning and repairs."

Household Questions

Make sandwiches for the children's lunch box by shaving maple sugar, mixing with butter and spreading between two slices of wholewheat bread.

• • •

Two thicknesses of heavy brown paper are much better than a cloth to use when pressing. Sprinkle paper with water and iron until dry. Newspapers may be used instead of brown paper.

• • •

• • •

An electric fan will help to dry paint as well as banish odor from a room that has been newly painted.

• • •

Yellow cream cheese spread on buttered wafers and browned in a moderate oven makes a very good accompaniment, to serve with appetizers, soups or salads.

• • •

• • •

The bottom crust of a blueberry pie will not soak the berry juice if after the plate has been lined with paste it is brushed over with a beaten egg, and allowed to stand for a few minutes before putting in fruit.

• • •

When making small buns or cakes, flour the tins well instead of greasing them. This plan is much less expensive and the cakes never stick to the tin.

Rid Yourself of Kidney Poisons

Do you suffer burning, scanty or too frequent urination, backache, headache, dizziness, loss of energy, leg pains, swellings and puffiness under the eyes? Are you tired, nervous—feel all unstrung and don't know what is wrong?

Then give some thought to your kidneys. Be sure they function properly for functional kidney disorder permits excess waste to stay in the blood, and to poison and upset the whole system.

Use Doan's Pills. Doan's are for the kidneys only. They are recommended the world over. You can get the genuine, time-tested Doan's at any drug store.

Borah Loses Ohio Primary—House Defeats Frazier-Lemke Inflation Bill—Tugwell's Report on His Resettlement Administration.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.

Senator Borah

SENATOR WILLIAM BORAH banked heavily on success in the Ohio Presidential preference primary, but the Republicans of that state turned him down decisively in favor of their "favorite son," Robert A. Taft, son of the late President Taft. Of the 52 delegates to the Cleveland convention, Borah captured only five, the others, including the delegates at large, being Taft men. The winning delegation will be virtually unpledged, because it will vote for Taft only on the first ballot. Mr. Borah did not take this defeat calmly. He gave out a statement in Washington accusing the Republican organization leaders of manipulating the votes of colored citizens against him by promising the passage of federal anti-lynching legislation which he has opposed as unconstitutional. The Idaho senator added:

"The Republican party will go into the campaign laying great stress upon Constitutional integrity and the preservation of state rights.

"The men who are in control of the party, and who will likely be in control of the convention, will write its platform and name its candidate, have already demonstrated that they care nothing about Constitutional integrity or the preservation of state rights, that their talk on this subject is hypocritical and intellectually dishonest."

Ohio Democrats polled about 500,000 votes in the primary, nearly 100,000 more than the Republicans, and they expressed their preference for Mr. Roosevelt over Col. Henry Breckenridge to the tune of 16 to 1. They also renominated Gov. Martin L. Davey, who will be opposed by John W. Bricker, Republican, in November.

West Virginia also held primaries and there Borah and Roosevelt won easily over nominal opposition. The state's Republican delegation, however, will go to the convention uninstructed.

It is interesting to note that one of Ohio's delegates at Cleveland will be Alice Roosevelt Longworth, daughter of "T. R." and a spectator at many previous conventions.

WE ARE not going to have any currency inflation, at least before next session of congress. The Frazier-Lemke farm mortgage refinancing bill, dragged out of committee by a petition signed by 218 house members, and then hotly debated for a day, was defeated by the decisive vote of 235 to 142. The bill called for the printing of three billion dollars for its financing.

The petition signers included 159 Democrats, and before the vote every one of them was told by Pat Boland of Pennsylvania, the party whip, that the President didn't want the measure passed at this time and that if the member voted for the bill it would be just too bad for him. Besides this potent argument the Democratic leaders induced President William Green of the American Federation of Labor to intervene and he called together the federation's executive council and had it write a letter saying it was opposed to the bill because of the inflation feature. This was read to the house by Speaker Byrns and undoubtedly affected the vote, though some members resented being told what to do by Mr. Green.

There was relief in the White House when it was announced the President would not have to veto such a measure in an election year.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT was supposed to have abandoned for the present the Florida ship canal and Passamaquoddy tidal power projects for which the house refused to appropriate further funds. But Senator Robinson of Arkansas was called to the White House for a conference and returned to the house to introduce a resolution authorizing the President to appoint engineering boards of review for the two schemes.

The boards would present their findings by June 29, and, if favorable, the President would have authorization to set aside $10,000,000 for the canal and $9,000,000 for Passamaquoddy out of available relief money.

NEWTON D. BAKER and Dean Acheson, counsel, for five power companies that are trying to block the government's municipal power program, met with defeat in the District of Columbia Supreme court when they sought to subpoena correspondence between President Roosevelt and Secretary Ickes. Jerome Frank, a New Deal attorney, stated that the President had directed that his "privilege" of testimonial immunity be asserted in the case, and Chief Justice Wheat refused to issue the subpoena.

IF THE house concurs in senate action, the title of Harold L. Ickes will be changed from secretary of the interior to secretary of conservation. A bill making the change was passed by the senate at the instance of Senator Lewis of Illinois. Two years ago, when Mr. Ickes was at the height of his power, he wanted the title altered to "secretary of conservation and works" and hoped that many of the agencies of the Department of Agriculture would be transferred to his department. But Secretary Wallace objected strenuously, and lately so much has been taken out of Mr. Ickes' hands that Senator Lewis cut his bill to the one paragraph, making the change of title and leaving off "and works."

WORKS PROGRESS ADMINISTRATOR HARRY HOPKINS issued an order to state WPA directors instructing them not to employ armed guards, not to spy on workers and not to blacklist workers who organize.

The order was issued following a conference with Victor F. Ridder, New York city WPA administrator, who employed a detachment of guards to protect his office against anti-WPA demonstrations which Mr. Ridder asserts were stirred up by Communists.

OPPOSITION in the senate finance committee to the corporate profits tax in the administration's $803,000,000 revenue bill was so strong that both Democrats and Republicans sought for some compromise. Treasury officials were heard in favor of the measure as passed by the house, but former treasury officials and various business and industrial leaders speaking in opposition were seemingly more persuasive. Senator Tom Connally of Texas put forward a plan he thought all might agree upon. It would retain the 15 per cent corporation income tax and repeal only the capital stock and excess profits taxes, instead of repealing all corporation taxes as proposed in the house bill. In addition it would superimpose a graduated tax on undistributed earnings, exempting the first 20 per cent on the amount retained. The house bill reaches a maximum of 42½ per cent of the total income if none is distributed.

Senator Byrd of Virginia, another of the Democrats opposed to the house bill, showed, in a letter to Secretary Morgenthau, that 11 of the largest corporations in the country would pay no taxes under the Roosevelt bill.

RESPONDING to a senate resolution, Rexford Tugwell made a report on the activities of the resettlement administration of which he is the head. He showed that it has 15,804 employees on the administration pay roll and has been allotted $275,549,944 to spend. Of this amount, the report stated, $98,347,005 has been spent and a total of $173,091,823 obligated, leaving $102,458,112 unincumbered.

R. G. Tugwell

Up to April 15, according to the report, the resettlement administration had taken options on 9,670,000 acres of land, of which options on 8,469,000 acres, costing $36,344,000, had become legal commitments. As of May 1, the report said, 59,521 persons, including 3,581 on the CCC pay roll, were employed in connection with the land acquisition program.

The report stated that a recent survey indicated that "the purchase of approximately 24,000,000 acres of land would be needed to block in and round out" the existing projects and to establish a minimum number of new projects.

Of 33 subsistence homestead projects, construction has been completed on 18, is in progress on 11 and final plans have been drafted for 4. The report lists four suburban housing projects, financed from a $31,000,000 allocation for this purpose. They are in Berwyn, Md., Bound Brook, N. J., Milwaukee, and Cincinnati.

On rural rehabilitation, the report says the RA has cared for more than 800,000 families. For its rehabilitation advances to individual "clients," the administration will expend $106,000,000 through June 30.

There were more than 71,000 workers employed on projects financed by the organization during April, the report states, adding that the peak is expected to be reached during the summer with 100,000 workers.

BECAUSE the League of Nations council would not immediately recognize Italy's annexation of Ethiopia and the creation of the new Roman empire, Premier Mussolini recalled his representatives from Geneva, and before long Italy may quit the league entirely. At present it is merely "not participating" in its activities. The council had adopted a new resolution virtually condemning again Italy's aggression in East Africa and then adjourned until June 15.

Previously Baron Pompei Aloisi, chief of the Italian delegation, had walked out of a session of the council because Wolde Mariam, Ethiopian representative, was permitted to take a seat and present a plea from Emperor Haile Selassie

CHANCELLOR KURT SCHUSCHNIGG of Austria has long been at outs with the vice chancellor, Prince Ernst von Starhemberg, and now he has got rid of that active young man and is practically the sole dictator of the country. This was accomplished by the resignation of the cabinet and its reconstruction immediately with Von Starhemberg left out. Schuschnigg is not only chancellor, but also minister of defense and foreign minister.

Von Starhemberg had antagonized Schuschnigg by insisting on keeping up his own private army, the Heimwehr, and also by his friendliness toward Mussolini and his general Fascist sympathies.

MANUEL AZANA was advanced from the premiership to the presidency of Spain by almost unanimous vote of the 874 electors gathered in the Crystal palace at Madrid. He succeeds Niceto Alcala Zamora who was removed from office on a charge of malfeasance after the Leftist victory in the recent elections.

Manuel Azana

Azana, fifty-six years old, is a lawyer, orator and playwright and is regarded as the most astute politician in Spain. To the notification committee he said: "Spain may rest assured that I will be loyal to the principles of democracy and that the welfare of the nation will be my constant concern."

HINDENBURG, the immense dirigible, carrying 107 persons, mail and freight, made the flight from Friedrichshafen to Lakehurst, N. J., in 61 hours and 57 minutes and was welcomed by thousands of Americans, including R. Walton Moore of the State department who brought the greetings and congratulations of President Roosevelt. Three days later the airship started back to her new base at Frankfurt-on-Main. The dirigible was in the command of Capt. Ernst Lehmann, but he received far less attention here than did Dr. Hugo Eckener, the veteran skipper of Zeppelins. Eckener, in bad with the Nazis at home, was permitted to be aboard the ship as an "adviser." He and Captain Lehmann went to Washington together, while the ship was being groomed for the return flight, to call on President Roosevelt and other officials and return their greetings.

On the return flight the Hindenburg traveled swiftly, reaching Frankfurt-on-Main 48 hours and 18 minutes after the departure from Lakehurst.

PARK TRAMMELL, veteran United States senator from Florida and a staunch supporter of all New Deal measures, died in Washington of a cerebral hemorrhage which followed an attack of influenza. Though ill, he tried to remain on the senate floor long enough to vote for a proposal to include $12,000,000 in the War department appropriation bill for continuation of the Florida ship canal. This effort probably cost him his life.

SOME two thousand delegates were present when the annual convention of the American Red Cross was opened in Chicago by Admiral Cary T. Grayson, the national chairman. Speakers at early sessions included Mayor Ed Kelly, and Ralph Christian, schoolboy of Birmingham, Ala., representing the Junior Red Cross. Mrs. Elizabeth H. Vaughan, a nurse of St. Louis, was awarded the Florence Nightingale medal for her long record of nursing service.

Dr. Thomas Parran, Jr., the new surgeon general of the United States public health service, was present and made a speech, and talks were delivered by Robert E. Bondy, director of national disaster relief, and others who directed activities in the flood and storm areas.

SECRETARY ICKES' supporters were easily defeated by the Harry Hopkins forces in the house fight as to whether the Public Works administration should share in the handling of next year's relief funds. But it was understood the feud would be revived in the senate under the leadership of Senator Hayden of Arizona, Democrat and a member of the appropriations committee.

The house majority voted according to the wishes of the administration on the relief bill, which is a $2,364,229,712 measure carrying $1,425,000,000 to finance the Works Progress administration after July 1.

In addition to the relief appropriation, the bill carries $458,631,860 for the social security program, $39,900,000 for the Tennessee Valley Authority, $400,000 for continuing the communications commission's telephone inquiry, and various new and deficiency amounts for other agencies.

The most important amendment permitted to be added to the bill by the house leaders was one submitted by Representative William P. Connery providing that the prevailing wage in communities be paid to WPA workers.

Ickes signified his acceptance of defeat in the battle for funds by ordering an immediate cut of 25 per cent in PWA personnel in Washington and throughout the country. This affects 2,000 persons.

MUSTAPHA NAHAS PASHA, leader of the Wafd or Nationalist party in Egypt, has become premier and formed a new government in which he holds also the post of minister of the interior. Wasyf Ghali Pasha is his foreign minister and Gen. Ali Fahmy Pasha is minister of war and marine.

No Need to Suffer "Morning Sickness"

"Morning sickness"—is caused by an acid condition. To avoid it, acid must be offset by alkalis—such as magnesia.

Why Physicians Recommend Milnesia Wafers

These mint-flavored, candy-like wafers are pure milk of magnesia in solid form—the most pleasant way to take it. Each wafer is approximately equal to a full adult dose of liquid milk of magnesia. Chewed thoroughly, then swallowed, they correct acidity in the mouth and throughout the digestive system and insure quick, complete elimination of the waste matters that cause gas, headaches, bloated feelings and a dozen other discomforts.

Milnesia Wafers come in bottles of 20 and 48, at 35c and 60c respectively, and in convenient tins for your handbag containing 12 at 20c. Each wafer is approximately one adult dose of milk of magnesia. All good drug stores sell and recommend them.

MINNESOTA NEWS

Monticello—Farmers in the vicinity have contracted to grow more than 100 acres of sweet corn for the St. Cloud factory.

Montgomery—Montgomery, famous for its annual Bohemian festivals, laid plans for its eighth annual celebration of "Kolacky day" this fall, at a meeting of the Community club.

Minneapolis—An $85,000 gift to be used over a five-year period to establish a program of training for public administration was received by the board of regents of the University of Minnesota from the Rockefeller foundation.

St. Paul—Salary increases totaling $50,000, affecting 600 state employees, have been refused by Paul S. Rasmussen, state budget commissioner, he announced. They are improper under the 1935 act ordering a 10 per cent pay cut, Mr. Rasmussen said.

St. Paul—Drastic revision of the state liquor law to centralize control over all phases of the liquor business will be sought at the next session of the legislature as a result of District Judge Mathial Baldwin's decision wiping out the liquor commissioner's authority.

St. Paul—Carl R. Erickson, state purchasing commissioner and member of the Big Three, resigned effective July 1, following a conference with Governor Floyd B. Olson. Erickson said he will enter private business with a Twin Cities real estate and investment firm.

Aitkin—Heavy rains sent the Mississippi river out of its banks in this vicinity. Lowlands were flooded, and the water backed up through drainage ditches. The Rice river, north of here, also spread over farmlands. Farmers are waiting for lowering of the rivers to permit start of spring seeding.

Minneapolis—Short of houses and business buildings, Minnesota is enjoying a building boom that may result in $100,000,000 worth of construction in the state in 1936. A statewide survey shows contractors and laborers at work in almost every Minnesota community and construction is far ahead of 1935.

Blue Earth—A grandstand and horse barns wrecked by the tornado which swept through this section will be rebuilt, it was decided at a joint meeting of the fair board the Community Club, and city council here. Volunteer labor will be used in construction of the barn, which will be built by the Community Club.

Aitkin—Although some farmers were forced to use rowboats to reach the highway, a survey showed flood waters of the Mississippi and Ripple rivers here had caused little damage. The level of he rivers rose several inches following recent rains. Farming operations on low lands were delayed and some dirt roads were impassable in places.

Isle—A four-year-old girl, en route to school in the farm area near here was attacked by a bobcat and badly clawed. The child was accompanied by a seven-year-old sister who said they were walking along the edge of a woods when the animal leaped from the brush. Three stitches were required to close a cut in the child's face. The animal escaped.

St. Paul—Police peeled Edward Lemier of Lake City, like an onion—with a knife. On one of the year's warmest days, they took off two suits of clothes—and then, with a knife, cut through three suits of underwear, sewed on. Lemier explained he'd been careful to wear plenty of clothing since he was sick as a child. Police picked him up on his landlady's complaint of nonpayment of rent.

Minneapolis — Minnesota's trunk highway system suffered more than $2,000,000 damage this spring as an aftermath of the unusually severe winter, according to official figures submitted to Highway Commissioner N. W. Elsberg by maintenance engineers of the state highway department. Seventeen road construction contracts totaling $300,511 were awarded. The contracts which are for work in 11 counties, include 11 farm-to-market jobs on roads off the main trunk system.

Minneapolis—Organization of a Minnesota wild life federation representative of all large state conservation groups moved forward when representatives of nine major organizations approved the articles of incorporation at a dinner at the Curtis hotel here. It was voted to continue the present set-up temporary officers until an annual business meeting is held in November. Organizations represented at the meeting were the Minnesota Game Protective league, Minnesota Federation of Women's Club, Izaak Walton league, of Minnesota, Minnesota Junior Association of Commerce, American Legion, Boy Scouts, Minnesota Farm bureau federation and both the adult and 4-H clubs divisions of the University of Minnesota extension division.

Warren—Checks totaling approximately $42,650 were distributed to farmers in Marshall county as the final payments for the 1935 wheat allotment AAA program.

Crosby—Preparations for reopening one of the largest iron pit mines on the Cuyuna range were announced here. A letter from Clarence B. Randall of Chicago, vice president of the Inland Steel company, revealed work would begin immediately to reopen the Armour No. 1 mine. In peak years the mine employed 200 men. It is the fifth resume operation this year.

STAR DUST

Movie • Radio

By VIRGINIA VALE

IF YOU'D like to see a motion picture that has everything, be sure to be on hand when "Under Two Flags" is shown in your neighborhood. It's great! Ronald Colman donned his Foreign Legion uniform again for this one. Claudette Colbert gives a fine performance, and so do Rosalind Russell and Victor MacLaglen. In fact, the whole cast is good. And the story! No doubt you're familiar with it; it has been popular ever since Ouida wrote it, years ago.

Garbo

Now that the reticent Garbo has broken down and talked and been photographed and been interviewed by reporters, almost anything can happen. Arriving in New York on her way back to Hollywood from Sweden, she made no effort to dodge newspaper men. She did her best to give a good interview but was so nervous that it was almost pitiful. After all, facing cameras and reporters is no easy thing to do; it's an art, one for which most of our movie stars almost go into training.

Microphone fright is a strange thing, as the news reels show you over and over again. Take the case of Nellie Grainger, the air line hostess who showed such remarkable courage when the plane she was working on crashed not long ago. Her bravery saved two lives. But when she posed for the news reel boys she was so frightened that she could hardly speak!

Sylvia Sidney wanted to dodge the people who appeared to interview her when she traveled from Hollywood East, but she had a good excuse—make-up poisoning, an ailment that causes a good many of the stars to suffer, and in some cases does lasting damage.

Want to enter a beauty contest, girls? If you do, you'll be interested in knowing how at least one experienced judge works. He is Max Factor, Hollywood's make-up king, who has judged more than 1,400 beauty contests during the 27 years he has been in Hollywood. Here's the way he picks winners.

Skin and complexion get 15 points. Regular, well-formed features especially large, clear eyes, count for 15 more. Five points for soft, well-groomed hair, and five for slender, well-manicured hands. And 15 each for a well-proportioned figure, graceful carriage, a pleasant, vibrant personality, and inherent intelligence and poise.

These are the days when a talented child is a better investment than stocks, bonds or real estate. The greatest difficulty is that, provided you have the child, you've got to be a talented parent as well, for success is likely to spoil the child, and then movie and radio contracts go by the board.

Young Walter Tetley, who is fifteen now, and began his career when he was six, has the right kind of mother; consequently he is now heard on about 12 important network radio shows each week—Town Hall Tonight, the March of Time and Showboat among them.

Buck Jones

Buck Jones experienced one of his worst moments recently in Max Factor's studio. Buck is planning to do his next "western" in color, and wanted some advice on make-up for it, so he went, naturally, to Factor, who has specialized in Technicolor make-ups ever since Hollywood began going color-mad; he's responsible for the realistic effects in "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine." And though Buck has been in pictures for years, he was embarrassed almost to death when he walked into the salon and had to tell the hostess, in front of a lot of beautiful ladies of the movies, just why he was there.

Radio has done something to Fifi D'Orsay that Hollywood couldn't do. Her fiery temperament used to be the bugaboo of the directors for whom she made pictures, but when she gets up in front of a microphone, with some 20,00,000 people listening in, she doesn't dare blow up. No matter how she rages inwardly, she goes on without a break, and usually by the time the broadcast is over the rage is gone, too.

ODDS AND ENDS . . . Spring may be here, but Paramount is getting ready for autumn by making a football picture . . . Bette Davis rushed home to Hollywood from her New York vacation, just in time to be asked to take a three-weeks' layoff, without pay . . . It's all in her contract; she works forty weeks a year . . . John Boles has just signed a new contract with Paramount, which calls for $50,000 per picture . . . Think of the income tax he'll have to pay!

PATTERN NO. 1875-B

You know yourself that half the enjoyment of any sport is spoiled if you aren't correctly dressed, and really there's no excuse for not being equipped for any active sport when a model such as illustrated is so easy and inexpensive to make.

The divided skirt is suitable for golf, tennis, bicycling, riding and hiking. It assures plenty of room and comfort, buttons on the side and supports the most youthful blouse. Note the sports pocket, Peter Pan collar, raglan sleeve and dainty feminine bow.

Instead of the divided skirt, you may have shorts if you prefer, for the pattern is perforated at just the proper length. Notice the small sketch.

Barbara Bell Pattern No. 1875-B is available in sizes 12, 14, 16, 18 and 20. Corresponding bust measurements 30, 32, 34, 36 and 38. Size 16 (34) requires 4¼ yards of 35 inch fabric. For shorts only, 3½ yards is required. Send 15 cents for the pattern.

In Memoriam

In loving memory of our dear son and brother, Tim Ensrud, who passed away one sad year ago.

One sad year has passed, dear Tim
Since that morn you went away,
And hearts are sad and lonely
For we miss you more each day.

How we loved you, dearest Tim
You were oh so kind and good
Why we had to lose you darling
Cannot now be understood.

You will never be forgotten
Never will your memory fade,
Sweetest thoughts will always linger
'Round the grave where you are laid.

Farewell again then, dearly loved one,
May God give us strength to bear,
And the grace to fully trust him,
Until our work too is ended here.
Sadly missed by us all.
Mrs. Anna Thompson and family.

Card of Thanks

We wish to express to all friends and neighbors our sincere thanks for their kindness to us during the last illness and after the death of our beloved mother and sister. We wish also to thank Rev. Dahle for his comforting sermon; those who sang, and others who helped in any way at the funeral. Your kindness shall always be held in grateful remembrance by us all.

The Aubol Family,
Mrs. B. E. Burkee.

In Memoriam

In loving memory of our dear wife, daughter and sister, Mrs. Edgar Peterson, who passed away one sad year ago, May 20, 1935.

One sad year has passed, dear Agnes
Since that morn you went away
And our hearts are sad and lonely,
For we miss you more each day.

How we loved you dearest Agnes,
You were oh so kind and good.
Why we had to lose you darling
Cannot now be understood.

You will never be forgotten,
Never will your memory fade,
Sweetest thots will always linger,
'Round the grave where you are laid.

Farewell again then, dearly loved one,
May God give us strength to bear,
And the grace to fully trust him,

"Oh Boy!..this cake is good" "It SHOULD be good— it's baked electrically"

ELECTRIC cooking gives you better cooking results because electric heat is applied differently. There is no blast of hot dry air passing through the oven to rob foods of their natural moisture. Meats can be roasted in an open pan — without basting — without attention . . . yet they'll retain their natural juices.

The electric oven greatly reduces costly shrinkage—enables you to use cheaper cuts of meats—and gives you more tasty, more nutritious foods.

For baking cakes, breads, or pastries, the still clean heat of the electric oven is unsurpassed. Everything you bake will turn out a beautiful even golden brown every time.

Better cooking is only ONE advantage of the Electric Range. You'll like its cleanliness. No scouring of pots and pans. No scrubbing the range. Even your walls and curtains will stay clean longer.

With all its advantages, the Electric Range is actually easier and simpler to use. It cooks without guesswork — without attention — giving you many free hours for other occupations and pleasures. AND IT COSTS NO MORE!

Visit your dealer or our showroom to see the beautiful new ranges now being shown. A few dollars down will install one in your home, and the balance may be paid in convenient monthly payments with electric bill.

GOODRIDGE PLAYS HERE NEXT SUNDAY

First baseball game here this season of the newly organized Northern Minnesota League will be played next Sunday when the Goodridge team will meet St. Hilaire on the local grounds. The game will be called at 2:30 P. M. Bill Hallamack will be on the mound for St. Hilaire.

Member teams of the new league are Oklee, Plummer, Thief River Falls, Goodridge, St. Hilaire, Kittson, Red Lake Falls and Garnes. Schedules of games for the entire season were distributed in all member towns this week, and may be seen at all business places. Seven games will be played in each town during the season. Teams in the league will be composed of amateurs—home town men in almost every instance — which will add much interest for ball fans.

As there is quite a little expense connected with organizing and equipping a team, and as income for the team consists almost entirely of gate receipts, the home team would appreciate very much to see a good turnout here next Sunday.

NEW TEACHER IS ENGAGED BY BOARD

Miss Agnes J. Haugen, a graduate of Concordia College, has accepted a position as teacher in the local school for the coming year. She will occupy the extra teaching position made necessary here by adoption of the 6 year high school plan. Miss Haugen, who comes highly recommended from the college, will teach English VII and VIII. Her preparation for teaching has included a large amount of work in music. She is a very capable accompanist. Last year she was student director of the All-College play at Concordia. Her home is at St. Paul, Minn.

S. M. OLNESS, Clerk.
L. F. Olson, President.

Rev. E. L. Tungseth of Thief River Falls delivered the baccalaureate sermon to the high school seniors at the Norwegian Lutheran church at 11 o'clock last Sunday morning. The school Glee Club sang two appropriate numbers during the program.

Mrs. M. R. Graham entertained a number of ladies and little folks at her home Monday afternoon in honor of her daughter, Marlys' first birthday anniversary.

SUMMER BAND PRACTICES

There will be band practice Friday evening at the school house. Those interested in playing with the band this summer are asked to come Friday night. All who played last summer are wanted to again take part. Parents who are interested in having their youngsters begin in the band should arrange for them to start this summer. Beginners classes will meet Friday afternoon at the school. Regular meetings will begin about June 19, so time will allow for arrangement for instruments.

GRADUATION SET FOR THIS EVENING

Rev. A. O. Bloom of Grand Forks will be the commencement speaker at graduation exercises to be held in the high school assembly this evening at which time eleven members of the Senior class will receive their diplomas. As the exercises are public, any one interested in the school and its activities is cordially invited to attend.

BRAY

The second meeting of the Home Management Project was entertained by Mrs. Emil Larson on Monday. The lesson subject was, "Cheerful Kitchens and Kitchen Equipment." Lunch was served at the close of the meeting. The next meeting will be at the home of Mrs. Victor Scholin.

The 4-H Club met at School Dist. 69 on Saturday evening. A program was given followed by a marshmallow roast which was enjoyed by all present.

Mr. and Mrs. Selmer Olson and family visited at George Swanson's on Sunday evening.

Mrs. Alfred Sorvig, Evelyn and Robert, Marie Erickson and Esther Mosbeck spent Thursday afternoon at A. P. Hegstrom's.

Mr. and Mrs. George Swanson and family visited at the John Magnuson home at Thief River on Monday.

Mr. and Mrs. Carl E. Johnson and Raymond and Mrs. Iver Aaseby of Thief River Falls visited at Emil Larson's on Monday evening.

Miss Fern Hawkinson of Thief River Falls spent the week end at her home here.

Mrs. Annie Lindbloom, Harry and Arthur Rux were Sunday visitors at the Ruben Rux home.

Mrs. J. O. Swanson and Mrs. Annie Lindbloom visited at George Swanson's on Friday.

Elna Scholin and Pearl Anderson are elected delegates and Myrtle Person and Grace Erickson are alternates to attend the Luther League convention at Strandquist next month.

Mrs. Carl Mosbeck and Mrs. Martin Mosbeck visited Tuesday at the home of Mrs. Olof Mosbeck.

Mr. and Mrs. J. O. Swanson and Dorothy visited at the Rev. Dahle home at St. Hilaire and the J. R. Larson home at Hazel on Sunday.

Tales About Town

Happenings of the Week, Told in Brief. News Concerning People You Know

John Anderson is here from Nekoma, N. D., for a visit at the home of his father, O. A. Anderson, in Sanders township.

Miss Gladys Maland came down Tuesday from Thief River Falls to spend a day or two at the home of her sister, Mrs. M. H. Jackson.

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Fricker and son motored down Friday evening from Holt and spent a few hours with his father, Mike Fricker.

A coat of gravel has been applied to Wall street, the road between the Martz farm and Kolstad's Addition on east side of the river. Gravel has long been needed.

The former Hans Wilson residence property here, which has been occupied by H. F. Hanson and family, was sold recently to a party from Plummer who plans to occupy it soon.

Francis Soderberg, who resides near Bemidji, motored over Friday to do some work at the family plot in St. Hilaire cemetery, and to call briefly on friends and former schoolmates.

Chas. Kundert of Red Lake Falls, manager of the St. Hilaire Telephone company, has filed as a candidate for county commissioner from his home district at Red Lake Falls. Frank Freund is the present incumbent.

William Novak, well known and prominent Black River farmer, is critically ill at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Harold Holmes. He has failed gradually the past two weeks, and very little hope is entertained for his recovery.

A good crowd turned out Friday night to witness presentation of the three-act comedy-drama, "Holy Sinners" put on by the Borgen Players at the Young & Olsen hall. The troupe which makes St. Hilaire its home, is starting the season in northern Minnesota, with its own tent equipment, at this time.

A number of friends of Miss Effie Frederickson tendered her a birthday party Monday evening at the V. G. Brink home. A most delightful evening was spent by the ladies, and a delicious lunch was served by Mrs. Brink. Miss Frederickson will leave soon to again be employed at Yellowstone National Park during the summer season.

E. O. Burkee of Moorhead, was here Saturday evening and Sunday for a visit with his mother, Mrs. B. E. Burkee, and with other relatives and friends. Mr. Burkee, who is employed as appraiser for the Federal Land Bank, St. Paul, went Monday morning to Roseau to look after matters in connection with his position.

Last Sunday afternoon a pickup ball team from Hazel community came over and crossed bats with the local team, resulting in a victory for the latter.

Miss Lilly Johnson, her mother, and sister, Eva, are expected here in a short time to spend part of summer vacation at their home in the village. Miss Lilly Johnson is supervisor in the city schools at Austin, Minn.

County Commissioner Paul Roy filed this week as a candidate for re-election to his present office. John Scholin of Bray, and a Mr. Skaar of Nerden also have filed for the same office from this, the Fourth district, so there will be a primary contest.

Stanton Nohre had a fortunate escape from injury late Sunday night when a car crashed into his bicycle as he was riding on the highway in front of the Graham residence. Stanton was thrown clear, but the wheel was damaged beyond repair.

Mrs. Fred Boltman and daughter came over Sunday from Grand Forks to spend a few days with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. C. T. Swanson, because of the illness of her father. She is also visiting at the home of her sister, Mrs. Lester Olson.

Mr. and Mrs. H. F. Hanson are moving from the Hans Wilson place, which they have occupied since last fall, to their own home in the south part of town. The Borgen Players, who had use of the Hanson place the past winter, have leased the Ortloff house on Minnesota avenue.

Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Julin and family motored down last week from Fort Francis, Ont., to visit a short time at the home of Mrs. Julin's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Anton Peterson in Wyandotte. Mr. Julin, who holds a fine position with the lumber manufacturing plant at Ft. Francis, was in this village Sunday to call on old friends.

In Memoriam

In memory of our beloved son and brother, Arthur Leuander Dahle, who died May 30, 1930.

"Let not your heart be troubled,
Ye believe in God, believe also in me.
In my Father's house are many mansions,
If it were not so, I would have told you.
I go to prepare a place for you,
And if I go and prepare a place for you
I will come again, and receive you unto Myself
That where I am, ye may be also. (John 15:1-3)

LOCAL BAND GOING TO SHORT COURSE

The St. Hilaire 4-H Club band, as well as sixteen other club members who are not included in the band organization, are making plans to attend the annual 4-H Club Short Course which will be held at the Northwest School of Agriculture, Crookston, next week. Club members from the northern tier of counties will attend June 4, 5 and 6, while those from southern counties will attend June 1, 2 and 3. It is anticipated there will be an attendance of over one thousand boys and girls, together with their leaders, at the Course this year.

Each morning will begin with a dip in the indoor swimming pool, followed by setting-up exercises and flag raising. The forenoon will be devoted to class-room instruction. At the assemblies, club members will hear many worth while talks and demonstrations, including an address by T. A. Erickson, state club leader, W. F. Munch, state game warden; and Dr. A. A. Dowell, superintendent of Northwest School.

The girls will be divided into groups according to age so that instruction will be adapted for each individual. A well planned schedule of activities and competitions has been provided for. Athletic and other events are being scheduled for the afternoons, with movies and special entertainment each evening.

Members of the Senior class of the local high school, accompanied by Supt. M. R. Graham, motored Friday to Bemidji to visit the State Teachers Training College, and to see other points of interest. The occasion was Senior Day at the local school.

There will be no special observance of Memorial Day here this year. Individuals will decorate the graves in all nearby cemeteries, but there will be no exercises.

Bobby Olsen, son of Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Olsen, has the honor of being the only pupil in the first and second grade room of the local school to have a perfect attendance record for the past year. When one recalls the bitter, cold days of last winter, it makes Bobby's record more noteworthy.

CREAMERY WILL TAKE CREAM DAILY

Manager L. F. Olson of the local creamery, announces that cream will be received at the creamery at the usual hours every day, except Sunday, beginning June 1st. In order to avoid getting too heavy receipts on any one day, it is suggested to patrons that they observe the old area rule that was in use in previous years, whenever it is possible to do so without inconvenience. However, cream will be accepted any day regardless of this which was intended to spread receipts and thus make better working conditions for the operators.

KIN OF LOCAL FOLKS ON THE HINDENBURG

Miss Pearl Young, technical editor for the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics at Langley Field, Va., a sister of Mrs. Chas. Huff and Raymond Young of this village, left last week from New York City as a passenger on the giant German dirigible, Hindenburg, on its return flight to Frankfort, Germany. The Hindenburg arrived at its home port this week.

Upon arrival in Germany, Miss Young will visit a number of aeronautical plants in that country, and later will go to England to visit with friends. She will return to Frankfort for the return trip to the United States on June 23, after exactly a months' stay.

Miss Young is recognized as one of the country's leading women experts on technical aeronautics, having made a special study of the science for a number of years.

Regular meeting of the B. M. Club was held Monday night. Members went to the village park the following night and watered all the trees planted there this spring, and later a large delegation went over to Sweet park and helped get that into condition for use.

Ardell Olson, who is employed in the Journal Office at Fertile, spent last Sunday here with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. O. K. Olson.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Black were down Sunday from Thier River for a visit at the home of Mrs. Black's mother, Mrs. Hilda Gigstad.

IN APPRECIATION

We wish here to express our sincere thanks and appreciation to all our neighbors and friends who tendered us the farewell party last week. This kindness on part of our friends, as well as recollection of many other pleasant times with you all, shall ever remain a cherished memory with us.

Mr. and Mrs. Philip Anderson and family.

Your Creamery

The creamery, organized and built by the people of this community because they saw a need for co-operative marketing of their farm products, can grow and prosper only in the same proportion as it is patronized by the people of the community. Helping Celebrate a Harbor Opening

When the Newport bay and harbor on the coast of Orange county, Calif., were officially opened the other day, these pretty and plucky girls took part in the water sports. The celebration, including all types of aquatic events, was held to mark the completion of a two million dollar federal improvement which gives southern California one of the finest yacht and pleasure harbors in the world.

Our Fickle Weather Is Born in Faraway Places

Poles and the Equator Fundamental Breeding Areas.

Washington, D. C.—Where does our weather come from? Many an American has asked that question lately, for weather has been making some of the biggest headlines. One of the severest winters of the Twentieth century, devastating spring floods, and, more recently, tornadoes, have kept "weather" on the front page.

"Weather, with its showers, clouds and winds, may seem a local thing, but actually the weather of the United States is born in faraway places—Arctic ice fields, the steaming-hot tropics, the blue waters of the Gulf of Mexico, and the foggy northern Pacific," says the National Geographic society.

"The poles and the Equator are the fundamental weather breeders. Air, cooled at the poles, falls toward the earth's surface and flows toward the Equator. There it is heated, rises again, and flows back toward the poles once more.

"But because the earth is whirling on its axis, and its surface is broken up by mountain chains, river valleys, oceans and continents, this flow of air between Equator and poles is far from smooth. It moves in fits and starts and often meanders off its course.

In Eternal Turmoil.

"The thick air blanket covering the earth therefore is kept in eternal turmoil. Huge, mountainous masses of cold air from the poles and warm air from the tropics battle each other unceasingly and from their struggles comes the weather that we know.

"When warm and cold air masses collide, vast areas of high and low atmospheric pressure are formed, known to the weather man as 'highs' and 'lows' for short. Atmospheric pressure is the weight of air above any point.

"In a 'high,' cold air moves downward in the center of the area, piling up a greater weight or pressure of air than normal. Warm winds flow around and outward from the center, in an anti-clockwise direction. Fair weather comes with 'highs,' for the downward-moving cold air forms no clouds.

"In a 'low,' warm air rises in the center, forced up by cold air flowing inward around the edges in a clockwise direction. The rising air reduces the pressure at the surface below normal. As the warm air rises it is cooled, its moisture is condensed and falls as rain. Hence 'lows' bring storms, rain and snow.

"Across the United States, from west to east, moves a steady parade of alternate 'high' and 'lows,' and with them they bring the nation's weather. They move as much as 500 miles per day, as far as one might drive in an automobile, and cover areas ranging up to half the continent.

"Lows" Bring Storms.

"Out over the north Pacific ocean, south of the Aleutian island chain, hangs a more or less permanent 'low.' In its center rises warm air heated by the warm Japanese current, while cold air from the Arctic pushes in at its sides. From it comes a large proportion of the 'lows' that bring storms and wet weather to the United States, breaking off from the parent 'low' like small bubbles from a big one, and moving steadily east. Other 'lows' form over the United States itself, when cold currents from the Arctic and warm, moist breezes from the Gulf of Mexico collide.

"Fair weather, brought by 'highs,' has more widespread birthplaces. They range from the northern and southern Pacific to Alberta and Hudson bay in Canada.

"In winter many cold waves are brought by chill Arctic air masses that flow southward via the great Mackenzie river valley of northwest Canada or by way of Hudson bay farther east.

"Almost always America's weather flows from west to east, fair weather and foul alternating in the eternal procession of the 'highs' and 'lows.' Only when a 'high' or a 'low' becomes 'stalled' over a single region does one kind of weather, such as drouth or a cold wave, persist for an unusual length of time."

Wrong Bell Stops Fight With "Kayo"

New York.—Kayoed by the gong! They used to and still have the expression "saved by the bell" but Billy Merritt, a negro heavyweight, was the victim of one—and a cowbell, at that.

Merritt, fighting in a local amateur tournament, was far ahead on points in his bout with Abner Wright when some "joker" started calling the cows home.

Merritt, thinking it was the bell, dropped his guard and Wright landed kerplunk on the negro's chin and the fight was over.

Germany Bans Dictating by Brewers to Taverns

Berlin.—German brewers in the future must rely on their beer. Since the war many of them have dabbled in mineral waters—and even in wine.

Thus innkeepers who were tied to a brewery often were compelled to accept their wines and waters from the same source. Now innkeepers have been freed by law from this obligation—breweries can no longer deprive them of their independence.

The innkeepers are at liberty to buy their varied drinks from varied sources—which, it is claimed, is all to the good of their thirsty customers. Of course, the brewers may continue to sell soft drinks and wines if they wish; but such sales will depend upon quality and not upon compulsion.

Columbus, Ohio.—A. M. Bellman, a grocer, suspected burglars when he discovered that two bank books and some currency were missing. Police found the bank books and money in a rat's nest in the basement.

Overeating Responsible for World Ills

Medical Author Says Too Many Meals Clog System.

Vienna.—War, racial and national hatreds, economic crises and unemployment are all due to overeating.

This is the theory of the Austrian physician, Dr. Franz Xavere Mayr, whose recent book, "The Rationalization of the Human Machine, a Radical Solution of the Unemployment Problem," evoked severe criticism and benevolent smiles.

Doctor Mayr contends that we are all overfed and wrongly fed, from infancy on.

Owing to irrational eating since we were born we accumulate considerable reservoirs of poison in our system, the physician declares, continuing:

"Too much eating. Overeating. Too many meals. Not enough rest for the digestive system. Our digestive apparatus is weary and distorted. Our nerves are poisoned.

"The glands of internal secretion are abnormal. All that influences our brains and affects our thoughts. This poisoning is the real source of the crisis within our organism and the crisis of the social system. It leads to evil passion, anger, hate, mania, destruction and war.

"Stop stuffing the human body with poison. Cleanse the system through a hunger cure. Remove the poison.

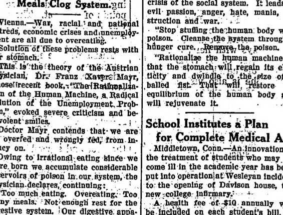
"Rationalize the human machine so that the stomach will regain its elasticity and dwindle to the size of a balled fist. That will restore the equilibrium of the human body and will rejuvenate it.

School Institutes a Plan for Complete Medical Aid

Middletown, Conn.—An innovation in the treatment of students who may become ill in the academic year has been put into operation at Wesleyan incident to the opening of Davison house, the new college infirmary.

A health fee of $10 annually will be included on each student's bill, in return for which a student may have unlimited medical care as well as free operations if necessary. In the past many students who needed medical care neglected to obtain it, due to the necessity to economize.

Barring Alien Labor From Colorado



National Guardsmen are seen inspecting a bus for indigents and alien laborers seeking to enter Colorado. Gov. Ed. C. Johnson ordered the guardsmen to patrol a 320-mile strip along the southern border of the state to prevent entry of alien laborers.

Ashore, at the customs, where travelers babble principally in English, a tourist remarked to a friend, "I will watch for you at the statue." Which statue? Here again, ambiguity.

An hour later in Tokyo, I received a third hint when an American silk merchant, revisiting Japan, agreed to meet an acquaintance the next day at "Hachiko's pedestal."

The following afternoon, having arranged an appointment to meet up with a friend at Shibuya station, a suburb of Tokyo, I was told to show myself at the "dog monument." By this time, fed up with the mystery, I agreed to come, provided he would inform me concerning the widespread popularity of that particular point for the contacting of friends and countrymen.

"When you get there," said he, "I'll explain all. You'll be interested. Don't fail."

Memorial to Faithful Dog.

Detraining, I passed through the station toward a short flight of steps that led to the street, where I came rather suddenly upon the statue of a curly-haired dog seated on his haunches and mounted on a pedestal of stone, the whole construction approximately seven feet in height, and highly ornamental in the Japanese style. Standing around were a number of people apparently waiting for others to turn up. Among them was the friend who had dated me up at the "dog monument."

He approached with all the manners of a first-class tourist guide. "As you don't read Japanese," he said, "it is my pleasure to translate the legend on the pedestal. In some particulars this is the most interesting piece of sculpture in the kingdom, symbolizing as it does the virtues of Patience and Fidelity, without resorting to mythology. This dog, who in life answered to the name of Hachiko, was the friend and companion of Professor Uyeno, department of agriculture, Imperial university, Tokyo. Both have since died, immortalized in a sense because of the story that survives them."

With Hachiko for escort, it was the professor's daily habit to leave his home in the morning and to walk the few blocks between his residence and the Shibuya station where, with a short speech and a pat on the head, he dismissed his dog, boarded the train and went about his professional duties at the university. Hachiko, knowing what was expected of him, ambled back to his kennel alone, there to await the 5 p. m. train, when he would again turn up at the station and greet his master at the foot of the short staircase down which the professor always came with the regularity of clockwork.

Death Takes the Professor.

One afternoon, about eight years ago, in conformity with his week-day custom, Hachiko trotted up to the listening post and squatted upon his haunches. The 5 p. m. train rolled in and discharged its passengers. The usual hurry and scurry common among returning suburbanites ensued, each homecomer receiving swift inspection from the eye of Hachiko, seeking only for the familiar figure with which he had appointment. In singles and pairs and groups, the hurrying throng flowed along the platforms and down into the street.

But, for some unknown reason, the beloved Uyeno was not that afternoon among them.

The professor had died that afternoon at his post in the university. No messenger brought the ill news to his waiting friend, who for eight long, anxious, but perhaps—who knows—hopeful years, Hachiko of the hungry heart, took up his place to be on hand against the day when the 5 p. m. train brought the missing comrade home from somewhere out there in the distant unknown.

Vigil of Hopeless Memory.

Rain or shine, the dumb beast, spurning all human sympathy, kept this vigil, never wavering in the belief that the absentee would reappear. The efforts of a kindly man, believing that he could win the dog away from the hopeless memory by giving him a new home, came to naught, for, each day at the appointed hour, Hachiko turned up at the Shibuya station, taking his place at the foot of the empty stairs, there to watch until nightfall, when he went home, thinking only of the familiar figure that had vanished from view. All of Tokyo knew the truth, that never penetrated to the consciousness of the one who suffered most.

A little more than a year ago this shaggy akita dog, faithful to the last, broken spirited, sad eyed and mystified, passed out of this life. The story of Hachiko's steadfast affection, brought sharply to the public mind by his death, swept Japan like a warm zephyr, arousing a sentiment that expressed itself in the erection, through public subscription comprising all classes, including the school children, of a statue unveiled with public ceremonies appropriate to the occasion.

MINNESOTA NEWS

Monticello—Farmers in the vicinity have contracted to grow more than 100 acres of sweet corn for the St. Cloud factory.

Montgomery—Montgomery, famous for its annual Bohemian festivals, laid plans for its eighth annual celebration of "Kolacky day" this fall, at a meeting of the Community club.

Minneapolis—An $85,000 gift to be used over a five-year period to establish a program of training for public administration was received by the board of regents of the University of Minnesota from the Rockefeller foundation.

St. Paul—Salary increases totaling $50,000, affecting 600 state employees, have been refused by Paul S. Rasmussen, state budget commissioner, he announced. They are improper under the 1935 act ordering a 10 per cent pay cut, Mr. Rasmussen said.

St. Paul—Drastic revision of the state liquor law to centralize control over all phases of the liquor business will be sought at the next session of the legislature as a result of District Judge Mathias Baldwin's decision wiping out the liquor commissioner's authority.

St. Paul—Carl R. Erickson, state purchasing commissioner and member of the Big Three, resigned effective July 1, following a conference with Governor Floyd B. Olson. Erickson said he will enter private business with a Twin Cities real estate and investment firm.

Aitkin—Heavy rains sent the Mississippi river out of its banks in this vicinity. Lowlands were flooded, and the water backed up through drainage ditches. The Rice river, north of here, also spread over farmlands. Farmers are waiting for lowering of the rivers to permit start of spring seeding.

Minneapolis—Short of houses and business buildings, Minnesota is enjoying a building boom that may result in $100,000,000 worth of construction in the state in 1936. A statewide survey shows contractors and laborers at work in almost every Minnesota community and construction is far ahead of 1935.

Blue Earth—A grandstand and horse barns wrecked by the tornado which swept through this section will be rebuilt, it was decided at a joint meeting of the fair board the Community Club, and city council here. Volunteer labor will be used in construction of the barn, which will be built by the Community Club.

Aitkin—Although some farmers were forced to use rowboats to reach the highway, a survey showed flood waters of the Mississippi and Ripple rivers here had caused little damage. The level of the rivers rose several inches following recent rains. Farming operations on low lands were delayed and some dirt roads were impassable in places.

Isle—A four-year-old girl, en route to school in the farm area near here was attacked by a bobcat and badly clawed. The child was accompanied by a seven-year-old sister who said they were walking along the edge of a woods when the animal leaped from the brush. Three stitches were required to close a cut in the child's face. The animal escaped.

St. Paul—Police peeled Edward Lemier of Lake City, like an onion—with a knife. On one of the year's warmest days, they took off two suits of clothes—and then, with a knife, cut through three suits of underwear, sewed on. Lemier explained he'd been careful to wear plenty of clothing since he was sick as a child. Police picked him up on his landlady's complaint of nonpayment of rent.

Minneapolis — Minnesota's trunk highway system suffered more than $2,000,000 damage this spring as an aftermath of the unusually severe winter, according to official figures submitted to Highway Commissioner N. W. Elsberg by maintenance engineers of the state highway department. Seventeen road construction contracts totaling $300,511 were awarded. The contracts which are for work in 11 counties, include 11 farm-to-market jobs on roads off the main trunk system.

Minneapolis—Organization of a Minnesota wild life federation representative of all large state conservation groups moved forward when representatives of nine major organizations approved the articles of incorporation at a dinner at the Curtis hotel here. It was voted to continue the present set-up temporary officers until an annual business meeting is held in November. Organizations represented at the meeting were the Minnesota Game Protective league, Minnesota Federation of Women's Club, Izaak Walton league, of Minnesota, Minnesota Junior Association of Commerce, American Legion, Boy Scouts, Minnesota Farm bureau federation and both the adult and 4-H clubs divisions of the University of Minnesota extension division.

Warren—Checks totaling approximately $42,650 were distributed to farmers in Marshall county as the final payments for the 1935 wheat allotment AAA program.

Crosby—Preparations for reopening one of the largest iron pit mines on the Cuyuna range were announced here. A letter from Clarence B. Randall of Chicago, vice president of the Inland Steel company, revealed work would begin immediately to reopen the Armour No. 1 mine. In peak years the mine employed 200 men. It is the fifth resume operation this year.

Memorial Day

Cy Warman in the Indianapolis News.

Gather the garlands rare today,
  Snow-white roses and roses red;
Gather the fairest flowers of May,
Heap them up on the graves of clay,
  Gladden the graves of the noble dead.

Pile them high as the soldiers were
  Piled on the field where they fought and fell;
They will rejoice in their new place there
Today, as they walk where the fragrant air
  Is sweet with the scent of asphodel.

Many a time, I've heard it said,
  They fell so thick where the battles were,
Their hot blood rippled; and, running red,
Ran out like a rill from the drifted dead
  Staining the heath and the daisies there.

This day the friends of the soldiers keep,
  And they will keep it through all the years,
To the silent city where soldiers sleep
Will come with flowers, to watch and weep
  And water the garlands with their tears.

Day of Memories

FEW now survive from among those for whom Memorial day was particularly established. The ranks of the Grand Army of the Republic are shattered. Younger men, veterans of later wars, take the place of those who wore the blue or gray from Bull Run to Appomattox, as symbols of the nation's strength in arms.

Forms of observance change with the times, but the underlying spirit of thankful remembrance remains ever fresh and unalterable. To those who first thought of setting apart a day each year for patriotic remembrance such an event as that now staged annually at Indianapolis or the baseball double header or the highways crowded with pleasure-seeking motorists would have been as inconceivable as the radio to an aborigine. But one likes to believe that these manifestations of American life do not in the least modify the nation's sense of devotion to the memory of those who have borne her arms to victory.

There is needed in these diverting and troublous days some special occasion when minds shall turn to the men who have dared to bare their breasts to an enemy in war, who have seen in their country's flag something more than a piece of bunting and been convinced that a nation worth founding was worth defending even at the expense of life and treasure. One hears much in these days of pacifism, of oaths solemnly taken never to bear arms in war, of the supposed mockery of popular government, the rise of dictatorships and the smashing of treaty pledges. One hears too little of the innumerable thousands of stanch American hearts which still believe in national honor, the Constitution and the causes for which men in the past have been proud to die.

A people ready to observe Memorial day is not one to give way to despair. Today we honor the patriot dead. We honor, no less, the living who are inspired by the example of those whose graves they decorate.

Where Our Troops Stopped

A RUGGED monument of war implements, mortar and stone, marking the extreme point of advance of the American army during the World war, still stands on a hill east of Buzancy, France, years after it was constructed by American soldiers on Armistice day, 1918.

The monument not only marks the farthest advance of the American army on the western front during the World war—it also marks the ground where at least four major wars of history have ended.

The monument is composed of German war weapons, including helmets, rifles, bayonets, swords, barbed-wire, gray pieces of uniform, and two small field guns. Encrusted in mortar, the enemy's arms of war were permanently "bound," symbolizing American victory.

This spot has always known strife. In 1870 Moltke's Prussians crossed the Meuse near here and humbled the French under Napoleon III on this ground. That battle ended the Franco-Prussian war.

Battle cries echoed in the hills of Buzancy little more than a half century earlier when Napoleon was terrorizing central Europe. Only a short distance away is Waterloo.

Richelieu, dictator of France in 1641, was crushed on this noted battlefield by a combination of French and Spanish forces, and the Swedes journeyed to this battle ground at an earlier date, ending a bloody conflict with the Franks.

The Unknown Soldier

UNDER the Arc de Triomphe in Paris, where an eternal flame is kept burning, is the grave of the Unknown Soldier of France. Surrounded by a grille and a roped enclosure in the floor above, Great Britain's Unknown Soldier lies at rest, under the nave of Westminster Abbey. Italy's Unknown Soldier is buried beneath the altar of Victor Emmanuel monument in Rome.

Speed New Soil Program

Washington.—The Department of Agriculture and its stepchild, the Agricultural Adjustment administration, have launched the initial phase of the new soil conservation program. This, it will be remembered, is the agricultural benefit policy worked out to supersede the unconstitutional AAA, and the speed with which the department has developed the early phases of its new program is noteworthy. It has not wasted any time, nor could it waste time, in order to make the new program effective in this crop year.

While the work of policy making has gone on at an unusual speed for governmental procedure, I am afraid it cannot be said that the soundness of its program can be commended in the same manner.

Some of the soil building practices proposed under the new scheme of aid to the farmer undoubtedly will work out but there are others about which there is much doubt. Indeed, already it has been pointed out that certain of the practices proposed are vulnerable and are likely to lead to serious trouble both for agriculture and for the government.

More than a score of the states were included in the first set of rules and regulations governing soil building practices and rates of payment. The others are nearing completion and will be promulgated at an early date. But the first block of rules and regulations and rates of payment establish the general outline of the department's ideas and it can be said, I think, that in these rules and regulations (the government must lay down general provisions) lies the trouble. They are replete with that which we usually describe as red tape and red tape never has failed to cause trouble.

Practices for which farmers may receive payments vary from state to state. They include the new seeding of legumes and grasses, the plowing under of green manure crops, the planting of forest trees, the eradication of perennial noxious weeds and, in certain areas, a variety of special soil handling methods such as listing, strip cropping and fallowing, terracing or approved summer fallow. In addition, farmers in certain dry land areas have the option of substituting some of the practices for acreage of soil conserving crops.

In announcing the new practices and rates of payment, the Agricultural Adjustment administration declared that the policies follow in general the recommendations made to the Adjustment administration by the several state committees. It was declared that the sentiment throughout has been "to adapt the general plan to the specific needs of the states in conformity with the approved methods which have been tested by the land grant colleges, the experiment stations and soil conservation service." The Adjustment administration considered that these three agencies furnished the best basis, or the best foundation, for the construction of the generally new program. It follows, therefore, that a considerable part of the new setup comes by way of expansion of the old soil conservation service which has had much experience in that work. It cannot be said, however, that the new phases have been tested nor is it more than conjecture how the farmers themselves will take to the plans now offered.

Payment Rates Vary

Just as the soil conserving practices vary, so do the rates of payment as between the several states. It is the claim of the Adjustment administration that variation in rates "is due largely to variations in the cost of seed, in rates of seeding or to differences in the requirements with respect to soil building practices." Rates of payment for soil conservation on irrigated land are higher than for those on dry land and likewise long standing agricultural practices have been taken into account in calculating the rates to be paid in various sections to offset the greater or less expense to which farmers normally are put in producing their crops.

Generally in the dry land states, the seeding and growing of perennial legumes, such as alfalfa, will net the farmer about $2.00 per acre but in irrigated districts the rate of payment varies from $3.00 to $4.00 per acre.

For most states, the rate for biennial legumes is $1.50 on non-irrigated land and from $2.50 to $3.00 an acre on irrigated land. Rates of payment for growing sweet clover are somewhat less as are the rates of payment for growing annual legumes.

The rates for plowing under green manure crops are from $1.00 to $2.50 an acre, depending upon the amount of growth which is turned under. For planting forest trees on crop land, farmers are scheduled to be paid $5.00 an acre.

For weed eradication the program proposes to pay $5.00 an acre where only periodical cultivation is required but it will reward the farmer for taking out weeds by chemical treatment in addition to periodical cultivation by paying him $10.00 an acre. In addition to these methods of soil conservation, strip cropping and fallowing command about $1.00 an acre of benefit to the farmer while terracing will be paid for around the basis of $2.00 or $3.00 an acre.

Other states, as they are brought under the soil conservation program, may expect rates similar to these for the first half of the country. It is obvious, however, that in the more thickly populated areas where agriculture is carried on in a more concentrated way, new and different practices must be prescribed. It is certain, also, that these practices must be made to take into account the varying types of crops where farming is done on smaller acreage per farm or in the fruit and truck garden areas.

Opinions Differ.

From this program, two sets of conclusions have been drawn. One school of thought maintains that the regulations are simple and easy of enforcement; the other group argues that it is utterly impossible to apply rules and regulations, administered from a central bureau in Washington, to the whole country and yet enable flexibility of management sufficient to meet the countless problems that will arise.

One conclusion is that by administration of the rules and regulations through state and county organizations and with the aid of state experiment stations, individual farmers can be advised and can work out their individual problems with ease. The other school of thought contends that this very fact means a perfect maze of different applications of the rules and regulations both as to language and intent; this group likewise maintains that favoritism will permeate the whole structure and that there will be injustice, ill will and politics in the way the local organizations deal with the farmers.

While the policy makers in the marble palace known as the Department of Agriculture contend that the soil conservation program will spell the end of surpluses and will accomplish better prices for what the farmers produce, another argument stresses the claim that the new program means dislocation of agricultural output and the market to which that output normally goes.

To go back a year or more, it can be recalled how the original AAA upset the apple cart for one after another of the farm crops. When land was withdrawn from cotton, it went to tobacco production and there was too much tobacco. There had to be tobacco control. When land was withdrawn from tobacco production, it went to peanuts and there had to be peanut control. And so it was with various other crops until there was a perfect network of crop control each, basically, working at something like a cross purpose with other things.

Find New Dislocations

As the new soil conservation plans unfold, those who doubt their efficacy point to numerous new dislocations that are comparable to those of the old AAA which I have just enumerated. For example, it is claimed, and there seems to be justice in the claim, the placing of a premium on growth of hay crops such as alfalfa, alsike and clover, can mean only an overabundance of those crops. I do not say that it is certain to occur but if conditions repeat themselves, the prices for hay crops in the market are due to fall. The law of supply and demand still governs regardless of theory and regardless of the attempts of bureaucrats to plan which the farmer shall or shall not grow. If world consumption falls low, crops of hay will be valuable. The chances, however, seem to be wholly in the other direction.

Time alone can tell how this thing will work out but I cannot believe any sound-thinking person or any person who analyzes the program through to its ultimate end can say that it is free from weaknesses. The tragedy of the thing is that government is experimenting on the farmers. With that I am not in accord and never can be. Further, while I dislike to disparage honest efforts, I am afraid the new soil conservation program embodies some politics as well as efforts to help agriculture.

If it were a purely critical report of the soil conservation policies that I am making to you, I would be inclined to add to the above analysis the assertion that these plans embody too much organization. I have observed government administration from close at hand through a number of years. There is one conviction that I have gained. That conviction is that every time a new policy is proposed that requires the scattering of government-paid administrators, executives, field agents, inspectors and countless other nomadic individuals, clothed with official authority, throughout the country, just then does the policy fail of its purpose. Many hands may make light work but many heads, partly politicians, make a mess.

what Irvin S. Cobb thinks about:

Yesterday's Literary Lights.

HOLLYWOOD, CALIF.—The other day Finley Peter Dunne passed away. Thirty years ago his articles meant each week a roar of joy as wide as the continent. His books sold enormously; his country properly acclaimed him its greatest satiric humorist. Yet I'll venture not one in five of the on-coming generation ever heard his name, and we thought the fame of "Mr. Dooley" was eternal.

Mary Johnston, who wrote some of the most distinguished novels of her time, also died recently. In the papers I saw she rated only a brief paragraph.

Irvin S. Cobb

Slower than Americans to give their love to man or woman, the English remain in sentiment wedded to the idol from then on. The marriage between popularity and merit lasts till death doth them part. But, we, who elevate a favorite to a pedestal overnight, forget that favorite overnight. We made an ardent sweetheart, an impetuous bride, but a most inconstant spouse.

"Simplified" Revenue Bills.

CONGRESS is wrestling with the new "simplified" revenue bill, having simplified it down to a mere sixty-odd thousand words—about the length of a fair-size summer novel. But the plot is different—and having made its provisions so clear and lucid that you may read it backward or forward, you seem to get practically the same result either way. So could anything be fairer than that?

It may yet be necessary to call in Professor Einstein to elucidate it. If he can explain his theory of relativity—and the professor still asserts he can—he might be willing to tackle the job.

Anyhow, the ultimate outcome—and in this connection I certainly like that word "outcome"—must be that congress will find a method further to lighten the pocketbooks of one and all. In other words, "we've got what it takes."

Where the League's Headed.

IN SPITE of what's happened lately, one persistent last-ditcher and forlorn-hoper among the British diplomats insists the League of Nations, to quote his own words, is "a going concern."

Yes, but where?

Makes me think of a little yarn a man told me:

"Fifteen of us," he said, "were waiting our turns to buy tickets one hot night at Grand Central station. All at once a gentleman, far over-taken in alcohol, forced his way to the head of the line, using his head to butt with and his elbows to paddle with, and emptied his pockets of some small change, and slapped it down on the shelf and yelled: 'Gimme a ticket to Buffalo!'

"'Yes.'

"'Well, where can I go, then?' said the stew.

G-Man Hoover's Efficiency.

YOU can't help liking the fellow's style of repartee.

"And what's a person named Hoover doing to justify his hanging on with this administration?" or words to that general effect, says Senator McKeller, of old Tennessee, brightly. "'Scuse me, massa," murmurs J. Edgar, reaching for his hat and handcuffs. "Ah won't be gone long, boss." And inside of a week or two he drifts in, strumming a plantation tune on his G-string and, by gum, if he isn't towing a whole mess of public enemies.

That's what I call an apt retort or, as the purists would put it, a snappy comeback.

Yellow Public Enemies.

WHAT is it has turned them from cop-killing bravos into quivering wretches who cower in hiding like mice behind a wainscot, who flinch like trapped rabbits when they're smoked out, who whine like whipped cur-dogs for a chance to plead guilty?

Can it be because, instead of courageous but inexperienced local officers, they now face trained man-hunters who'd rather destroy such human vermin than eat pie? Or is it because, instead of going to trial in state courts where unscrupulous shysters may trick dazed jurors into showing mistaken mercy and where, even though convicted, there's nothing ahead worse than temporary detention in some criminal-coddling retreat with sentimental meddlers to pamper them and mush-minded parole boards waiting to free them, now they get a full measure of stern justice from federal judges and go to real prisons, to stay there—hurrah!—till they're good and dead?

ROBOT EXPLORERS ARE SENT UP INTO THE STRATOSPHERE

The secrets of the sky are being discovered by balloons. These robot explorers climb ten miles into the stratosphere from Kew observatory, where they are launched by Professor Paneth. On reaching the ten-mile limit they burst, and the vacuum flask, carried by each, opens automatically, collects a sample of air, reseals itself and floats home by parachute. Self-registering instruments record the temperature and the maximum height reached.

Their main object is to discover what happens to helium, the rare gas which is set free when radio-active materials break down into commoner elements such as lead, a process that takes thousands of years.

The balloons also explore thunder clouds in order to find out how the source of atmospheric electricity is replenished. Little pilot balloons calculate the height of clouds. Their rising speed is constant, and the number of seconds they take to disappear shows the height of the lowest cloud layer. Twenty-two miles is the soaring record of an unmanned balloon.—Tit-Bits.

FAIR play and the square deal are modern watch-words. We all like the sound of them, and we are glad they have come to be common in the nation's vocabulary and the nation's thought. Now the next thing is to translate them into the little everyday acts of private individuals. They are just as good for our relations with our employees as for our relations with nations; they are no more necessary for the dealings with great trusts than for dealings with little distrusts by which we fail to give our neighbor his rightful dues.

Madia Thorne sat on the cement edge of the lily pool and trailed her fingers disconsolately in the water. Madia was forty, her plump curves proclaimed it, her fallen arches attested the fact vociferously.

But the soft dusky shadows were kind. An inquisitive goldfish swam near investigating the ripples her fingers made, but Madia didn't notice. Her eyes were glued to the lighted windows of the mansion through the trees. A masquerade dance was in full swing. The music wailed a low sweet cadence—a whispering sadness—there had been a time when Madia was young, but nine children and Jim Thorne—romance had all but perished in Madia's heart.

Madia and her husband, Jim Thorne, were caretakers at Emberly Lodge and tonight youth and beauty would hold high carnival; behind the silken masks chivalry would bloom again and gay Knights would woo their ladies fair—and tomorrow Madia would gather the dance programs so full—return a stray compact or two when she did the cleaning.

The low whine of a plaintive violin, the throbbing, poignant notes of a cello brought an ache, a trembling urge to be one of the gay throng; just for one mad night to dance in silver slippers and cobwebby hose and listen again to thrilling passionate words of love.

With a sigh of patient resignation she started to rise. Duty called. Perhaps she had lingered too long now. They would be needing her to serve the refreshments. But wait! One of the guests was approaching. A tall man in the guise of a laborer or tramp, if you please. A picturesque vagabond in worn trousers and flapping shirt sleeves, swinging jauntily along the graveled walk. He wore no mask, had perhaps put it aside for this moment of expected privacy, alone by the lily pool.

Madia moved as if to leave, but the stranger spoke: "Don't go! Stay and talk to me. I'm so lonely and this night wasn't made for loneliness." Then in a voice as subtly bewitching as the mellow strains, "It was made for love and loving."

With a courtly gesture, "Oh, fair lady, are you moon nymph or creature of my own imagination?" Without more ado he flung himself on the grass at Madia's feet, almost touching the hem of her voluminous skirts. His hair, whether real or artificial, was a mass of matted dark curls. Madia could have put out her hand and touched their fascinating tangle. Propped on an elbow, he nonchalantly lighted a cigarette and by its feeble glow Madia could have sworn the stubble on his cleft chin was real.

A tramp personified. Would that she were so artistically impersonated! A moon nymph! Creature of glamour and mystic moonbeams, slim as a fairy lance. Madia moved a trifle more in the shadow. Why shatter the illusion? Madia tipped the scales at two hundred and twenty-five.

But the stranger waited not for her answer; he continued more to himself than to her. At first he humbly begged the privilege of kissing the hem of her frilly apron, then growing bolder he covered her hands with the fiery famished kisses of a man half-starved for love. On bended knees he struck the attitude of a knightly Romeo—he was court jester—he was king. He was a man begging for understanding—for love.

And Madia, bewitched by his audacity, met the quaint daring with thrusts akin. She was maiden slim and coy—she was siren bold—she was woman pouring out her heart for romance.

When he took her in his arms she yielded and the scratch of his bearded lips sent shivers along her spine. Yet shame and humiliation overcame her. What had she done? Jim and the children! She tore herself from his arms and hurried away. Yet the stolen moment had been so sweet just for that mad thrill—to have some one understand, to know all the poignant longing of a woman's heart.

"Ah, but you will come again every night here by the fountain when the crescent moon rides high and the shadows lie heavy and deep. Say you will, my sweet," he pleaded. And Madia knew that she would. Together they would sail enchanted seas and go gypsy voyaging to castles in Spain.

Back in her little kitchen Madia had the fantastic sensation of a lovely dream, but her bright eyes and burning cheeks were only too real. Romance was not dead! Once again she had a lover, an adorable prince who loved her.

"Well, how goes the party?" she asked casually.

"Oh, all right, I guess," lighting his pipe with weary indifference. "But one of the guests gave us the very dickens of a time. He was dressed like a tramp and we couldn't understand the ruction until the authorities showed up. They were hunting an escaped lunatic from the asylum. Funny fellow! He kept insisting that he had been making love to a moon nymph down by the lily pool!"

BILLY MINK OUTWITS THE TRAPPER

As smart and clever as you are,
A mink may smarter be by far.

THIS is what Billy Mink said to himself as he uncovered the trap which had been set for him at the entrance to one of his favorite holes in the bank of the Laughing Brook. Of course he was thinking of the trapper when he said it. At first Billy flew into a great rage. It made him angry clear to the tip of his tail just to think he must now be always watching for traps where for so long there had been no danger.

At first, on discovering that trap, he had thought to go on at once up the Laughing Brook and see what more he could discover. But you remember that Billy was hungry and that there was a piece of perfectly delicious fish back in that hole. He knew now just how that fish happened to be there. He knew that that trapper had put that piece of fish in there hoping that Billy would be so eager to get in that he would be careless.

"It Will Serve That Trapper Right If I Can Get That Fish," Muttered Billy.

The more he smelled it, the more he wanted it. "It will serve that trapper right if I can get that fish!" muttered Billy. "Perhaps it will teach him that he is not so smart as he thinks he is. I wonder if I can step over that trap."

Billy sat down and studied the trap and the entrance to the hole. The more he studied the more sure he became that he would be running a very foolish risk if he tried to step over that trap just to get a piece of fish. You see, that trap had been very cunningly placed. But the more he smelled that fish the more he wanted it.

Billy stroked his whiskers thoughtfully. Of course that didn't have anything to do with it, but just the same while he was stroking them he remembered something. His eyes snapped and he grinned. Way up on the bank between the roots of a certain tree was a little hole. It was the entrance to a little underground tunnel, and that tunnel led right down to the very hole in front of which the trap was set. It really was a sort of back door.

Billy turned and in a flash had scrambled up the bank. With his keen little nose he made sure that there was no scent of the trapper up there. He felt sure that the trapper had not found that little hole between the roots of that certain tree. But though he was sure of this, he took no chances. As he approached that hole he took the greatest care to make sure that no trap was in there.

There was none. Once inside the hole, Billy ran along that little tunnel chuckling to himself. He knew that there was no danger. He could get that fish. He did get it. He got it and ate it right there. Then he turned and ran out the way he had entered. Somehow that fish had tasted the best of any fish he had ever eaten. It was because he had outwitted the trapper.

X-RAY VISION

TO DEMONSTRATE his ability at X-ray vision, the magician takes a pack of cards from its case. He lays them on the table and asks some one to insert a card from the pack. The card must be put in face down.

Picking up the case, the magician holds it to his forehead and promptly names the value of the card. He may repeat the trick if he desires.

Be careful, in performing this trick, to specify that the card must be put in the case while the latter is on the table. Why? Because you have previously cut a small hole in the lower corner of the card case.

When you pick up the card case, you can see the index corner of the card within. That is why you are able to name it.

MARKETING FOR THE HOME

IT IS a heartening sight to visit the city markets and see the handsome, high-powered cars lined up at the curb and the lady of the house walking from stall to stall choosing the food for her family, along with the housewife of the poor man who must count every penny.

One of the hardest things for the average woman to do is to regulate her purchases to the amount she has to spend for food. It takes real self-denial to pass by the attractive delicacies for the table and confine one's self to the urgent neds. Shopping and marketing are fine things to develop self-control.

In too many households the marketing problem is left to haphazard buying or the last minute order, and so it is either a feast or a famine to which the family look forward.

The tender cuts of meat do not contain any more nourishment and they lack the extractives which are found in the more active muscles and so they lack the flavor. Cheaper cuts which are used for meat are often thrown away because of the idea that they have lost their food value. The fact is all the food value is still there, the lack is in the flavor or extractives, which may be supplied in various ways—adding flavorful vegetables, meat sauces and condiments, thus making palatable and nourishing dishes from meat left from broths.

When we learn that marketing is a household science which needs study and observation and that extravagant buying, however full the purse, is never to be indulged, we are in a fair way to improve in that part of household management.

We are told by those who have made a study of family needs that before a pound of meat is bought a quart of milk should supply the daily need of every child in the family. Milk may be used as a drink, as a main dish, in puddings, sauces, with cereals for breakfast and supper.

THROUGH A Woman's Eyes

By JEAN NEWTON

A GOOD SOURCE TO EXCUSE A BAD ACT

A WOMAN in Port Monmouth, N. J., quoted God and the Bible as the justification for keeping her two boys out of school.

Defying the truant officer, she claimed to have kept her boys at home because some of the subjects taught in the public schools are evil. With the aid of a book published in 1868 she herself taught them the three r's, which filled her requirements for her children.

One of the sinful subjects taught in the schools is drawing, this woman says. To prove it, she quotes from the Bible: "Thou shall not make unto thyself any graven image."

And because "the pages of history are splattered with blood and God forbids taking human life," history also is an evil subject and the teaching of it justifies her in keeping her boys out of school.

One's mental comment, of course, is that the woman is not in her right mind. But hers is not the first instance where something good has been misconstrued to excuse a bad act, a literal meaning held up to screen a breach of the true spirit of things.

If one tried hard enough statements could doubtless be found in the Bible to excuse other crimes; that is, the words could be twisted so as to seem to excuse them. But nobody would be deceived. Nor is anyone ever deceived when people try to twist each other's words so that they may seem to mean something that they do not mean.

THE ARISTOCRACY

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

THESE are the aristocracy:
The man who makes my shoes for me,
My clothes, the roof above my head,
The very comfort of my bed,
The food my body nourisheth—
Yes, even for my very breath
Upon some other I depend,
My noblest neighbor, nearest friend.

I never see a hand of grime,
A brow of summer sweat, but I'm
A bit ashamed no look of toil
Have mine, of contact with the soil.
My little greatness is less great,
A thousand times, than his estate
Who makes a habitable earth
For many men of lesser worth.

I am entitled to my ease,
My lighter task, by serving these
Who serve mankind, for then we all
Are workers, be we great or small.
I thus become, the best I can,
The equal of this other man
To whom I look, who looks to me—
Both then the aristocracy.

FINGERPRINT ALL SEEKING U. S. JOBS

Civil Service Commission Is Making Close Check.

Washington.—Fingerprints of more than 10,000 persons seeking government employment have been forwarded to the federal bureau of investigation by federal and local authorities to determine if they had previous criminal records.

A check through federal files revealed that 107 of 4,908 fingerprint cards received from the United States civil service commission were of applicants who had served penitentiary terms and sought government jobs under assumed names.

In one case, an applicant's fingerprints were received from the civil service commission when he was seeking an appointment as a postal clerk in 1929. These prints were later identified as those of an individual who was arrested in St. Louis in 1935 on a charge of violating the postal laws.

Convicted for Robbery.

In another case, federal agents received fingerprint impressions of a person entering the California state prison on November 30, 1935, sentenced to serve five years to life for robbery. The impressions were identical to those of a person applying for the Post Office department in 1929.

The police department of Pasadena, Calif., submitted the fingerprint card of a person seeking a pistol permit. A check of the files of the identification division of the bureau revealed that he had been arrested in 1926 on a charge of larceny, later arrested and charged with desertion in St. Paul, Minn., for which he received a suspended sentence of five years.

When his fingerprints were received from Pasadena, he was wanted at St. Paul as a parole violator. Federal officials notified the St. Paul authorities.

Check on New Employees.

Fingerprint cards of 646 applicants, seeking positions as hotel clerks, waitresses, caddies and others, were forwarded to the bureau from Miami.

A search through the files showed 53 of this number had previous criminal records for such offenses as violation of the prohibition and narcotic acts, desertion from the armed forces, defrauding hotelkeepers, receiving stolen goods, larceny, assault and highway robbery.

The fingerprint card of one applicant, seeking a position as checker, was found to be identical with an individual who had served a sentence at the United States industrial reformatory at Chillicothe, Ohio, for motor theft.

A guest of a Miami Beach hotel was robbed of $140 in cash, and immediately notified authorities. Suspicion pointed to an employee who had left the hotel that day.

He had been fingerprinted and photographed when he applied for the position. Police exhibited his photograph and fingerprints at railroad stations, bus lines and other points of departure. He was apprehended the same day.

Papaya Seen as Rival of Breakfast Grapefruit

San Francisco.—Grapefruit eventually may be replaced as the favorite American breakfast fruit dish by the Hawaiian papaya, or tree melon, if experiments now being conducted on the islands for the protection of the latter prove successful.

Up to the present the greatest enemy of the papaya has been the fruit fly. Now the United States Department of Agriculture, in co-operation with Hawaiian authorities, is conducting an intensive campaign along three fronts to preserve the delicious fruit for exportation.

The experiments include the introduction of parasitic insects to fight the fly; treating the fruit to destroy fly larvae before they can do damage, and processing of fruit for shipment in other than the fresh state.

The papaya is the favorite breakfast fruit dish of the island, and growers are confident that if it can be preserved for exportation it will become exceedingly popular in the United States.

Lights of New York

by L. L. STEVENSON

Mike Rones, at the age of twenty, knows what it means to be a man without a country. He can't get a steady job because he can't supply any satisfactory background. He can't get on the relief rolls because he can't show that he is a citizen. He can't be deported because there is no proof that he is a national of any country. So he exists by doing what odd jobs he can find as he drifts from city to city. When things become too involved and hunger too acute, he turns himself over to the police in the hope that they will find some solution for his problems and with the knowledge that they will feed him. He has done that twice. In both instances he was fed. Once he was taken to Ellis island and thought he was really going somewhere. But the immigration officers didn't know where to send him so they returned him to New York. Recently he surrendered again and was brought into court on a charge of vagrancy. The magistrate suspended sentence with a promise to attempt to find a job for him.

• • •

It was at the court hearing that the young man's story became known. He might have been born in Warsaw or Shanghai, he said. Or he might have been born in the United States. His mother never would tell him and naturally, he had no memory of that particular event. He saw his mother last a year ago in Texas. He doesn't know where she is now since they never correspond. His sister once lived in Juarez, Mexico, and he thinks she is now living in Cuba. He doesn't know what became of his father but he does remember traveling with his parents in Japan, China, Poland, Russia, Siberia, Africa, South America, Mexico and the United States. Now he'd like to settle down somewhere and rest after all his wanderings.

• • •

Rones came into the United States after a visit with his sister in Juarez. He said he merely walked across the bridge at El Paso. An immigration officer asked him if he was a citizen and he replied, "Sure." That was all the formality of his entry into the country where he is a man without a country.

• • •

In this matter of fact, machine age, there is still some sentiment. That was demonstrated recently at Pelham, one of the commuting towns where many who labor in New York by day sleep by night and putter in their gardens over the week-end. For almost 40 years, a trolley car has banged between the New Haven station and Travers island. The line is two miles in length but so full of bumps, passengers travel just about as much up-and-down as they do here-and-there. For some time, the trolley company has been seeking to substitute shiny new busses for the old car. Recently an election was held on the matter and the busses lost out by a vote of about five to one.

• • •

While there was the matter of fare involved—the trolley ride costs a nickel and the proposed charge for the busses was a dime—sentiment can really be held to have been the victor. In the first place, there are Louis Mattes, the skipper of the car, and his relief man, Eddie Glaser, who have been with the line years and years. They know every patron and are always ready to do a favor, even to leaving a call for someone who isn't on hand for his regular trip. Naturally Louis and Eddie have their friends and they turned out to vote. Oh yes, something else. The old car was Fontaine Fox's inspiration for his "The Toonerville trolley that meets all the trains." And that had something to do with it, too. So instead of putting on busses, the company will spend about $20,000 leveling some of the bumps.

• • •

Bus top eavesdropping. "She said she'd call him a skeptic only she never saw him with a scepter whatever that might be."

• • •

A gentleman came in with an attractive proposition to make three or four hairs grow where only one grows now. There was a guarantee attached to it and everything. There were also before—and—after photographs which showed deserts gradually going into hair production and ending with a good crop. Unfortunately, however, the salesman leaned over while placing those photos on the desk and thus exposed a plain-top pate. So he had to ring up no sale.

ITALY REALIZES DREAM OF EMPIRE

But From Where Will the Capital Come to Develop Ethiopia's Unexploited Resources? And Will Italians Colonize Country?

By WILLIAM C. UTLEY

WITH the annexation of Ethiopia by Italy, the Dark Continent of Africa now consists entirely of "colonies" of the European nations, with the single exception of Liberia, a tiny negro republic on the Atlantic coast near the equator and just south of the Sahara desert.

Africa covers 12,000,000 square miles and is the home of 150,000,000 people. For four hundred years the continent has been a colonial pie sliced up by the swords of half a dozen nations. Much of the territorial holdings in it are in the hands of three minor nations which are hardly in a position to defend their holdings against the countries which in the past few decades have asserted their power more substantially.

These three powers are Spain, Portugal and Belgium. They rule over 1,850,000 square miles of Africa and among their colonial subjects are 17,500,000 people.

With her new colony, which Mussolini says will be developed to its fullest extent immediately, Italy now has possession of Libya, a vast stretch of country directly across the Mediterranean in a southerly direction from the mother country; Eritrea, along the southern end of the Red sea; Ethiopia, which includes the headwaters of the Nile, and Italian Somaliland, which lies along the Indian ocean and borders Ethiopia on the south.

Flanks Britain's "Life-Line."

This means that Italy has become an empire, that Victor Emanuel is no longer merely a king, but an emperor. The only barrier that separates the two major sections of this vast colonial estate is the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan. Italy is now firmly entrenched along both sides of the Mediterranean and at the southern mouth of the Red sea, becoming what is probably the dominating factor along the life-line of Britain's empire.

Britain, with her prestige falling apart because of the total ineffectuality of her campaign in the League of Nations to stop the Italian course of empire, and the utter failure of her fleet to bluff Il Duce into backing down, now finds herself in a most embarrassing position.

Not only has she suffered great loss of respect in the eyes of the world, but she has ceased to dominate the route to India through the Suez canal. Her line of colonies which stretch from Cairo to the Cape of Good Hope are no longer flanked by a nation without sufficient power to worry anybody, but by the colonies of a nation which is not only powerful in Africa but in Europe itself. And the source of much of the all-important irrigation of Egyptian lands is now in the hands of a power which is at present hostile.

Of the African colonies, Britain's are, however, undoubtedly the best. More than one-fourth of the continent is covered by the Sahara desert, and there is another large desert, the Kalahari, in the South. The average density of the population in Africa is about twelve to a square mile, as compared with about forty to a square mile in the United States. The density of population of the British colonies is everywhere above the average for the continent, while the possessions of every other power have an average density below the continental average.

France Is Biggest Holder.

France and Great Britain now share equally about two-thirds of Africa. The remainder is divided up between Italy, Belgium, Spain and Portugal.

It is France who is the largest holder of territory in Africa. She has the Island of Madagascar in the Indian ocean off the southeast African coast, Morocco, Algiers and Tunis. But since so much of her holdings include desert land—she virtually owns the Sahara—her 4,232,000 square miles of territory have an average population of only nine souls to the square mile. Her African colonial subjects number about 38,500,000 in all.

Britain's colonies are the home of approximately 65,000,000 persons. Including Egypt, these colonies cover 3,925,000 square miles, making the population about 16 to the square mile. The British colonies, which stretch the full length of Africa on the eastern side of the continent, are the most inhabitable sections.

In annexing Ethiopia, Italy will have added about 350,000 square miles to her colonial empire, and will have gathered another 10,000,000 persons under the Italian flag. With the new conquest, the population of her African colonies rises from 2.5 persons to the square mile to 10.5 persons to the square mile. She now controls nearly 1,267,000 square miles of Africa, with a population of 13,350,000 persons.

Belgium's territory, while it is large, consists almost entirely of equatorial jungle, which is not at the present very valuable. What its worth will be when and if the jungle of the Belgian Congo is ever cleared, is unknown. There are not many people able to exist in these 920,000 square miles, the population being about ten persons to the square mile, with a total of 9,584,000.

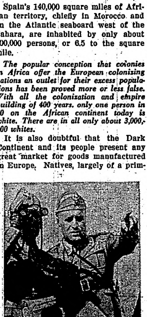
Spain's Share Sparsely Settled.

Even more sparse is the population of Portugal's several African colonies, chief among which are Angola, bordering the Atlantic coast to the south of the Belgian Congo, and Mozambique along the Indian ocean on the mainland opposite Madagascar. The Portuguese territory embraces a little less than 800,000 square miles, with a little over 7,000,000 inhabitants, or about nine to the square mile.

Spain's 140,000 square miles of African territory, chiefly in Morocco and on the Atlantic seaboard west of the Sahara, are inhabited by only about 900,000 persons, or 6.5 to the square mile.

The popular conception that colonies in Africa offer the European colonizing nations an outlet for their excess populations has been proved more or less false. With all the colonization and empire building of 400 years, only one person in 50 on the African continent today is white. There are in all only about 3,000,000 whites.

It is also doubtful that the Dark Continent and its people present any great market for goods manufactured in Europe. Natives, largely of a primitive character, require little of the manufactured goods of civilization. It may be possible that with continued development this market will be built up. But such development takes an enormous amount of capital.

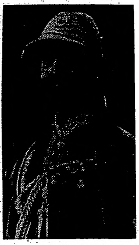


Pietro Badoglio, Italy's new viceroy of Ethiopia, surveys the lay of the land as an aide points it out to him.

That is the one big disappointment to Italy in her conquest of Ethiopia. The land, exclusive of the central plateau, is poor, the natural resources are ridiculously less than they have been estimated in the popular fancy of those who seek to justify Il Duce's bloody war, and the people are largely nomadic in nature.

Colonization Is Difficult.

Mussolini claimed a double purpose in his conquest of the ancient kingdom of Abyssina—room for his overcrowded people to expand, and the obtainment of raw materials for Italian industries. But Italian people are apparently not so willing to become colonists in an unpleasant and uncomfortable land. In Eritrea, which has been Italian now for 50 years, there are only about 100 colonists.



Recent picture of the defeated Emperor Haile Selassie.

The entire Ogaden area, with the provinces of Boran and Bale, so completely conquered by the forces of General Graziani, are of little or no value, being principally desert. He has not yet moved into the rich agricultural regions of the Arussi plateau, although that is scheduled to be his next step.

Cotton and other forms of agriculture are considered possible in Ogaden, but only if extensive and expensive irrigation is provided. That is true of most of the regions which Italy has conquered in Ethiopia—they must, if they are to be of much value, be developed by tremendous outlays of capital, and fresh capital is a commodity in which Italy is lacking to a disturbing degree, especially since her trade has been pinched by the sanctions placed upon her by members of the League of Nations.

There has been some romantic gossip of vast oil deposits in Ethiopia, especially in the Ogaden district, but these have been largely denied by the facts. What mineral resources are present will be found for the larger part in the Danakil country to the northeast, but even these are uncertain. There is some salt, which Italy mined during the war—at a cost all out of proportion to its value in peace times.

Italy Must Aid Colonists.

The important part of Ethiopia is the central plateau, whose population is the traditional enemy of the tribes on the outskirts below. Here it is that Mussolini plans to put most of his colonists. The country is agriculturally rich and the climate, while it is not pleasant to white people by any means, is at least livable. While the plateau may be said to be conquered, it is not yet entirely occupied by Italian armies, the Gojjam and Shoa being still unoccupied.

If the colonization of the plateau is to be successful, the colonists must be given a great deal of aid by the mother country. The fact that the colonists will start from scratch will be a boon to Italian industry, for the demand for heavy goods for the building of a new nation should give millions more work. It is believed that the colonists will be able to raise cereals and live stock, finding a market for them in Italy and selling them for prices which will be higher than the world market for the same goods.

One of the principal problems facing the new Ethiopian emperor and his viceroy, General Badoglio, is what to do with the natives. It is hardly possible that they can be driven from the land; they certainly will not be allowed to compete with the colonists on equal terms, for they will be able to work for far smaller compensation, the Italians being unable to compete with their low standard of living. The situation will be much the same as that which the Japanese peasants found in attempting to colonize Manchuria.

With the exception of some little platinum and gold, the mineral resources of Ethiopia are largely a fable. The wealth, if any, which it will add to Italy will have to be worked out of the land in hard Italian sweat—and with the capitalization of hundreds of millions of dollars. Italy hasn't got the hundreds of millions.

As a matter of fact, the war of conquest up to the capture of Addis Ababa and the flight of Emperor Haile Selassie had cost the Italians approximately $900,000,000, or more than 100 times what the United States paid Russia for Alaska. The cost of pacifying the country will bring the war bill over the billion dollar mark.

But she has now fulfilled what Mussolini says has been the dream of Fascism for 15 years. Italy has become an empire. It sounds big. And it earns Il Duce invaluable plaudits from his people.

Channel Marks

Somebody has said that it is not so remarkable that Columbus discovered America as it would have been if he hadn't discovered it. But, though Columbus never dreamed that he had discovered America, or even that there was an America to discover, the credit for his exploit can never be taken away from him.

Today looking out of a window on the coast of Maine I can see dozens of channel buoys without which steamships would find it as difficult to find their way into the harbor as it was for the Genoese explorer to discover San Salvador.

Some of these marks are lighthouses, some of them are red or black spars, some of them are great iron buoys which blow a warning whistle with every lift and fall of the sea.

To maintain this system of warnings, which is found at the entrance of every port on both coasts of America, required not only a great deal of money, but an almost incredible amount of courage on the part of the lighthouse builders, and the men whose business it is to see that the buoys are always in their place, ready to give their warnings.

* * *

Let a single buoy go astray, or a single lighthouse fail to "throw it's beam across the wave," and every ship entering or leaving port may be in danger.

To build up this almost perfect system has required many years and a great deal of risk.

But were the marks not carefully watched and tended, reaching a port either by night or by day would be a perilous business.

There was once a master mariner who when asked how he could know every rock in the entrance to a harbor said:

"I don't. But I know where the deep water is."

* * *

In our own little voyages to and fro on our way, we are just as well supplied with channel marks as are the ships that move in and out of the ports along the seaboard.

If we heed these marks we pass in safety. If we are even just a little careless disaster is sure to follow.

Make it your business to "know where the deep water is," and you will have no trouble.

Disregard the warning that they carry as they rock on the waves, and not even a little port-to-port journey will be safe.

But ours is an old race, and it has accumulated much knowledge acquired from those who have gone before.

Make use of that knowledge if you want to go safely through existence.

"Take chances," and hunt out what you fancy may be short cuts, and you need not be surprised if you pile up your little bark on the rocks, or sink her before you reach the port which is the goal of your ambition.

Guffey Coal Act Is Declared Invalid

SIX members of the Supreme court of the United States ruled that the Guffey act to control the bituminous coal industry is invalid, and another of the New Deal experiments goes into the discard. This is the act which President Roosevelt urged congress to pass notwithstanding doubts of its constitutionality "however reasonable."

Sen. Guffey

Five justices—Sutherland, Butler, Van Devanter, McReynolds, and Roberts—joined in the majority opinion which invalidated the whole act. Justices Cardozo, Brandeis, and Stone joined in a dissenting opinion in which they upheld the act. Chief Justice Hughes held in a separate opinion that the act was constitutional with respect to the marketing provisions but unconstitutional with respect to the labor regulations.

The court in the majority opinion held that there is no authority in the Constitution for the control of the coal industry attempted in the Guffey act. The act was not valid either under the commerce clause or the welfare clause. Power was unlawfully delegated to set up a coal code similar to the codes of the invalidated NRA and the regulations establishing working hours of miners were a violation of the fifth amendment prohibiting the taking of property without due process of law. Mining, the court declared, is a local industry, the state jurisdiction whereof the federal government has no authority to invade.

Congress provided that if one part of the act were held unconstitutional other parts should not be affected. But the majority declined to accept that arrangement, ruling that the price fixing provisions were inextricably interwoven with the labor regulations.

Senator Guffey, author of the act, declined to comment on the opinion, but it was said he was preparing a substitute measure.

John Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers, said that "it is a sad commentary upon our form of government when every decision of the Supreme court seems designed to fatten capital and starve and destroy labor."

Tugwell's Housing Hit by Court Decision

THE resettlement administration headed by Rexford Guy Tugwell was declared by the District of Columbia court of appeals to be "clearly unconstitutional delegation of power," in a case involving a model community project in Somerset county, New Jersey.

Going beyond the issue before them, the justices of the Appeals court called the entire relief appropriations act of 1935 into question. The act was invalid and hence RA was invalid, according to the court. Legally, however, none of the rest of the act will be affected by the decision because the other multitudinous activities of the New Deal under the appropriation were not before the court.

Solicitor Gen. Stanley Reed said an appeal would be taken to the Supreme court at once.

Uncle Sam Stands by Nine Power Pact

NEWS that Japan was greatly enlarging her force in North China led the State department in Washington to announce that the position of the United States is the same as that outlined last December by Secretary Hull affirming its support of the nine power pact that guarantees China's territorial integrity. At that time Mr. Hull said this country has a binding faith in the fundamental principles of its traditional policy. This government adheres to the provisions of the treaties to which it is a party and continues to bespeak respect by all nations for the provisions of treaties solemnly entered into for the purpose of facilitating and regulating, to reciprocal and common advantage.

At the State department it was said that the reaffirmation of support of the nine power pact does not mean that the administration will abandon its policy of declining to take the initiative in any attempt to curb Japan for violations of the pact. This was attempted by Henry L. Stimson, secretary of state in the Hoover administration, with the gain of nothing but Japanese ill will.

Japanese military strength in North China south of the Great Wall is now said to be fully 15,000 men. There are about 80,000 more in Manchukuo and still others in Inner Mongolia.

War Debts Will Be Defaulted Again

NEITHER Great Britain nor France has any intention of paying the installments on the American war debt due June 15. And almost certainly all the other debtor nations except Finland will follow the example of the two big ones and again default. British Foreign Minister Eden talked about the debts with Leon Blum, who probably will be premier of France soon, but there was no indication that either one was planning to make a payment. Blum told the American club in Paris he hoped the war debt "misunderstanding" might be cleared up, but he was just trying to be pleasant to the people of both America and France without spending any money.

Of course the debtor nations would like to have the issue cleared up, for as long as they are in default they are subject to the restrictions of the Johnson act which makes it unlawful for any person in the United States to purchase or sell the bonds, securities or other obligations of any foreign government or to make any loans to such a government while that government is in default in payment of its obligations to the United States.

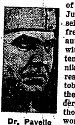
President of Bolivia Is Compelled to Resign

JOSE LUIS TEJADA SORZANO was forced to resign the presidency of Bolivia by a junta of army officers and Socialists who staged a bloodless coup d'etat in La Paz. Col. German Busch, acting chief of the general army staff, leader of the coup, will be at the head of the government until Col. David Toro, hero of the war with Paraguay, returns from the Chaco, when Toro will be installed as president.

The immediate objective of the new administration was complete settlement of a general strike which the officers asserted was imperiling the country's economic stability. The labor federation quickly suspended the strike movement, expressing solidarity with the army-Socialist coup.

Italy Releases Alleged Leader in King's Killing

DR. ANTON PAVELIC, alleged leader of Ustashi, the Croatian terrorist organization, and accused as one of the "master minds" in the assassination of King Alexander of Jugoslavia in Marseilles, has been set free by the Italian authorities. Released with him was his lieutenant, Eugene Kvaternik. The two were arrested at Turin in October, 1934, soon after the murder of Alexander, but the French authorities who were working on the case were never permitted to question them and an Italian tribunal refused the request of the French government for their extradition to France for trial.



Dr. Pavelic

General Is the New Premier of Poland

POLAND feels that another European war is more than likely to break out soon, and she intends to be ready to take part in the conflict. A new government has been installed with Gen. Felician Slawoj-Skladkowski as premier and minister of the interior. The general took the oath of office wearing his uniform, which was taken as symbolic of the government's program. Poland will be adequately armed. Opposition leaders are warned that they will be prosecuted, as they were by Pilsudski after 1930.

Borah Is Loser in the Ohio Primaries

SENATOR WILLIAM BORAH banked heavily on success in the Ohio Presidential preference primary, but the Republicans of that state turned him down decisively in favor of their "favorite son," Robert A. Taft, son of the late President Taft. Of the 52 delegates to the Cleveland convention, Borah captured only five, the others, including the delegates at large, being Taft men. The winning delegation will be virtually unpledged, because it will vote for Taft only on the first ballot. Mr. Borah did not take this defeat calmly. He gave out a statement in Washington accusing the Republican organization leaders of manipulating the votes of colored citizens against him by promising the passage of federal anti-lynching legislation which he has opposed as unconstitutional.

Senator Borah

Ohio Democrats polled about 500,000 votes in the primary, nearly 100,000 more than the Republicans, and they expressed their preference for Mr. Roosevelt over Col. Henry Breckenridge to the tune of 16 to 1. They also renominated Gov. Martin L. Davey, who will be opposed by John W. Bricker, Republican, in November.

About twenty of Pennsylvania's delegation to the Republican convention were pledged to support the popular choice of the state, which turned out to be Mr. Borah, no other name being officially entered at the April 28 primary. The delegation, which is uninstructed, has now voted that those members must keep their pledge on the first ballot or until it becomes manifestly impossible for their choice to win. This action was taken on motion of former Senator David A. Reed.

Former Governor Small of Illinois Dies

LEN SMALL, twice governor of Illinois and prominent in the politics of the state for nearly forty years, died suddenly in a Kankakee hospital from an embolism resulting from an operation. He was seventy-three years old. Mr. Small's career was rather stormy. His enemies were many and bitter, and he fought them courageously; his friends were devoted to him, and he was always loyal to them. In addition to his eight years as governor, he served two terms as state treasurer. Moreover, he was defeated for governor four times. He sought the Republican nomination again in the recent primary but was defeated.

Tugwell's Report on Resettlement Work

RESPONDING to a senate resolution, Rexford Tugwell made a report on the activities of the resettlement administration of which he is the head. He showed that it has 15,804 employees on the administration pay roll and has been allotted $275,549,944 to spend. Of this amount, the report stated, $98,347,005 has been spent and a total of $173,091,823 obligated, leaving $102,458,112 unincumbered.

R. G. Tugwell

Up to April 15, according to the report, the resettlement administration had taken options on 9,670,000 acres of land, of which options on 8,469,000 acres, costing $36,344,000, had become legal commitments. As of May 1, the report said, 59,521 persons, including 3,581 on the CCC pay roll, were employed in connection with the land acquisition program.

Of 33 subsistence homestead projects, construction has been completed on 18, is in progress on 11 and final plans have been drafted for 4. The report lists four suburban housing projects, financed from a $31,000,000 allocation for this purpose. They are in Berwyn, Md., Bound Brook, N. J., Milwaukee, and Cincinnati.

On rural rehabilitation, the report says the RA has cared for more than 800,000 families. For its rehabilitation advances to individual "clients," the administration will expend $106,000,000 through June 30.

Inflation Bill Defeated by the House

WE ARE not going to have any currency inflation, at least before next session of congress. The Frazier-Lemke farm mortgage refinancing bill, dragged out of committee by a petition signed by 218 house members, and then hotly debated for a day, was defeated by the decisive vote of 235 to 142. The bill called for the printing of three billion dollars for its financing.

The petition signers included 159 Democrats, and before the vote every one of them was told by Pat Boland of Pennsylvania, the party whip, that the President didn't want the measure passed at this time and that if the member voted for the bill it would be just too bad for him. Besides this potent argument the Democratic leaders induced President William Green of the American Federation of Labor to intervene and he called together the federation's executive council and had it write a letter saying it was opposed to the bill because of the inflation feature.

President Still Wants Ship Canal and Quoddy

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT was supposed to have abandoned for the present the Florida ship canal and Passamaquoddy tidal power projects for which the house refused to appropriate further funds. But Senator Robinson of Arkansas was called to the White House for a conference and returned to the house to introduce a resolution authorizing the President to appoint engineering boards of review for the two schemes.

The boards would present their findings by June 29, and, if favorable, the President would have authorization to set aside $10,000,000 for the canal and $9,000,000 for Passamaquoddy out of available relief money.

Starhemberg Ousted From Austrian Cabinet

CHANCELLOR KURT SCHUSCHNIGG of Austria has long been at outs with the vice chancellor, Prince Ernst von Starhemberg, and now he has got rid of that active young man and is practically the sole dictator of the country. This was accomplished by the resignation of the cabinet and its reconstruction immediately with Von Starhemberg left out.

Italy May Withdraw From League of Nations

BECAUSE the League of Nations council would not immediately recognize Italy's annexation of Ethiopia and the creation of the new Roman empire, Premier Mussolini recalled his representatives from Geneva, and before long Italy may quit the league entirely. At present it is merely "not participating" in its activities.

The Italians at Addis Ababa are executing many natives for espionage or murder, among them being the giant umbrella carrier of Haile Selassie. A number of newspaper men have been expelled because of "anti-Italian activities and espionage." Among them were George Steer, correspondent for the London Times and the New York Times; Isadore Nebenzahl, a representative of the Havas (French) News agency; Alkeos Anglopolo, a Hearst correspondent, and M. D. Robillard, director of an Ethiopian newspaper.

Household Questions

To prevent cheese becoming stringy when making Welsh rabbit, do not use a high temperature when melting. Have only just enough heat to melt cheese.

* * *

Do not allow bread to rise too high before putting into the oven if you wish to have a fine grained bread.

* * *

A teaspoonful of mixed pickle spices tied in a small bag and added to the water in which fish, ham or tongue is boiled, will add a very pleasing flavor.

* * *

A saucerful of quicklime placed in a damp closet or cupboard, will absorb all dampness.

* * *

To prevent halibut falling to pieces while boiling, wrap in cheesecloth and simmer in boiling water. About 30 minutes' time is required to boil two and a half or three pounds of halibut.

* * *

Always make it your business to keep your larder supplied with about a dozen cans of soups, meats and fruits. When an unexpected guest arrives for lunch, you will then be able to serve a good meal.

* * *

When any portion of a velvet gown is crushed from pressure, hold the part over a basin of hot water, the wrong side next to the water. The pile will soon be restored.

* * *

To keep bath enamel in good condition, always put in a little cold water first. Exceedingly hot water is likely to make it crack and peel off.

* * *

Potatoes need to be hilled to prevent the tubers from greening. Some gardeners make the mistake of hilling such root crops as beets, carrots, onions and parsnips, thus retarding their growth.

* * *

Never leave fish, unless salted, soaking in water. Too long soaking removes the flavor and makes the fish flabby.

When sandpapering surfaces that are to be painted, the work is made much easier if sandpaper is folded over a small block of wood.

THEODORE CHRISTIANSON
Candidate for the REPUBLICAN NOMINATION for
UNITED STATES SENATOR

is receiving the enthusiastic endorsement of the public and the press in every section of Minnesota as "The Man for the Job", "The Logical Candidate", "A Statesman of Senatorial Calibre", "A Senator of whom the State would be Proud", "The Ablest and Strongest Man in Public Life in Minnesota Today", "The most competent man in the state for the position because of his years of experience as a member of the state legislature, three terms as governor and two terms in Congress".

Conscientious devotion to his duties has always been characteristic of Theodore Christianson's public career. His duties as Congressman will keep him in Washington during the primary election campaign. A state-wide volunteer committee, formed to promote his candidacy, invites his friends and supporters to assist in organizing Christianson-for-Senator clubs, enrolling members, distributing Christianson literature and soliciting contributions from one dollar and up for the Christianson campaign.

A host of volunteer workers are already active. Join the army of Christianson crusaders who are determined to nominate and elect Theodore Christianson United States Senator. Vote for him at the primary election, Monday, June 15. Get your friends to vote for him.

AN ELECTRIC Range makes ANY woman a better cook. There is no guesswork in electric cooking—no oven peeping—no basting. It is so simple, so certain that you know exactly what results you will get every time.

Whole meals can be cooked in the oven without attention. The no-draft oven gives you perfect control over heat and humidity. Meats retain their natural juices, greatly reducing costly shrinkage.

And cakes and breads! . . . beautifully and evenly baked a golden brown without fail, every time.

But perhaps most of all you'll like the cleanliness of the Electric Range. Electric heat is as clean as sunshine. Scouring pots and pans is eliminated. The range stays clean, and so do your walls and curtains.

Beautiful new Electric Ranges in a wide variety of prices are now being shown at your dealer and our show-room. Any may be purchased on convenient long-time terms.

WILLIAM NOVAK CALLED BY DEATH

William Novak, prominent and highly respected resident of Black River township, died at 11 o'clock Thursday night, May 28, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. H. L. Holmes in this village, after an illness of about six months. He had gradually failed the past month or more, and death was not unexpected.

Mr. Novak was born in Highland, Wisc., July 11, 1871 and was 64 years, 10 months and 17 days of age. His early days were spent in Wisconsin. At the age of 21 he moved to Spellville, Iowa and later to Ossian, Iowa. While at Ossian he was united in marriage to Elizabeth Tucker. About six years later they moved to Calmer, Ia., where he operated a blacksmith and repair shop. His wife died at Calmer in 1908. The Novak family moved from Calmer to Red Lake Falls in 1911 and resided in that city for three years before moving to their present farm in 1914.

Since coming to this section, Mr. Novak took an active part in community affairs, and he was honored many times by election to public office in his township and school district. A quiet, unassuming man, a good friend and neighbor, Mr. Novak was highly esteemed by all who knew him. In his death, Black River loses one of its most progressive and influential citizens.

To mourn his departure, Mr. Novak leaves his son and two daughters: R. L. Novak, who resides on the home farm; Mrs. Vivian Holmes of this village, and Mrs. Hazel Swadburgh of Portland, Ore. He is also survived by two brothers, George and John Novak of Charles City, Ia., and by four sisters, Mrs. L. Adolph of Cobb, Wisc., Mrs. Margarite Lepper of Arkansas, Mrs. Emil Raceak of Charles City, Ia., and Mrs. Josephine Lucas of Logan, Kan.

Funeral services were held at 2 o'clock Wednesday afternoon at the Larson Funeral Home at Thief River Falls with Rev. M. L. Dahle of this village officiating. Many friends from this community were present at the service to pay their last respects to the deceased. The body will be taken Friday morning by hearse to Calmer to be interred beside that of Mrs. Novak in the Calmer cemetery. Mr. and Mrs. Harold Holmes left this morning enroute to Calmer to make arrangements for the funeral which is to be held there Saturday.

FIVE IN DISTRICT EIGHT

There will be no lack of candidates for county commission in this, the Third District, of Pennington county at the coming primary election. Paul Roy, incumbent has filed for re-election, and will be opposed by Gordon Olson of Sanders, John Scholin of Bray, and Ole Skaar of Norden. All plan to put on active campaigns.

WIN FROM GOODRIDGE

The St. Hilaire ball team won its first game of the series arranged for in the new Northern Minnesota League, by defeating Goodridge in a one-sided game played here last Sunday. Altho the visitors had a good battery, the support given it was weak. The locals hit their batting stride early in the game, and at no time was there any doubt as to eventual outcome of the contest. The final score was 15 to 1.

PLUMMER TO PLAY HERE NEXT SUNDAY

Because of the grounds at Plummer not being in condition for use as yet, the game scheduled to be played between the St. Hilaire and Plummer teams at Plummer next Sunday, will be played on the St. Hilaire grounds instead. Plummer is reputed to have a strong organization this season, so ball fans can be assured of seeing an interesting contest next Sunday.

Bill Hallamack, who pitched for St. Hilaire last Sunday and gave Goodridge only a couple of hits, will be on the mound again. Unless other change is made in the schedule, this will be the last game on home grounds until June 28th.

SCHOOL BAND IN CONCERT SATURDAY

The local school band will give its first open-air concert for the present summer season, next Saturday evening at the grounds between Walt Olson's cafe and Larson Bros. store. Many new pieces have been practiced lately, so the program will consist of nearly all new numbers. A cordial invitation is extended to everyone in the community to be present and hear the concert.

MARTIN A. NELSON COMING TO T. R. FALLS

Martin A. Nelson, Republican candidate for Governor in the coming primary election, will speak at the city auditorium in Thief River Falls on Monday evening, June 8th, at 8:00. Arrangements for the meeting are being made by the Pennington County Republican Committee. This will probably be the last opportunity for interested people in this section to hear Mr. Nelson before the primary election.

GRADUATION HELD

Eleven members of the senior class of St. Hilaire high school received their diplomas at graduation exercises held last Thursday evening at the school assembly. Rev. Aner Blom of Grand Forks gave a splendid address to the graduates as main feature on the evening's program.

Mr. and Mrs. Al Potvin, Mrs. A. F. Ittner and children, Alice and Mayfern, motored here Sunday morning from Cass Lake and spent the day at the Peter Simonson home.

Miss Grace Dahle returned home Tuesday after teaching the past school year in the high school at Rhame, N. D.

C. T. Swanson, well known Sanders farmer, has been seriously ill lately with an attack of pneumonia. He is reported to be somewhat improved at this time.

Bill Gilbertson was busy both Friday and Saturday at repairing the large refrigerator at the creamery which had been in need of overhauling for a year or more.

Mr. and Mrs. Gust Fellman, and Mr. and Mrs. Sig. Engh motored up Saturday from Minneapolis and visited until the following day at the Adolph Satterberg home and with other relatives and friends.

Owners of burial plots in the cemetery east of town did an unusual amount of beautification work this year prior to Memorial Day, and the cemetery presented its best appearance in years as a result.

Mr. and Mrs. O. J. Stearns and children, Clarence and Gladys, and Misses Laura and Pearl Simonson motored up Saturday from Minneapolis and spent until the following day at the home of their father and grandfather, Peter Simonson.

James A. Dahl, superintendent of the village school at Glyndon, accompanied by Miss Huldah Gigstad of Moorhead, motored up Saturday for a brief visit. While here, Mr. Dahl visited the cemetery east of town where his parents and brother are buried.

Members of the American Legion were at the cemetery Saturday morning and decorated the graves of their departed comrades. A nice wreath and a fresh American flag was placed on each of the graves of eight veterans of the World War, and also on those of three veterans of the Civil War.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Bjerk motored here Saturday from Dakota and visited during the week end with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Martin Bjerk, and at the home of her mother, Mrs. Ida Konickson. Mr. Bjerk holds down a fine position as construction superintendent with the Bell telephone system in North Dakota.

Miss Alice Skottem is home to spend summer vacation after having completed teaching a term of school at Climax.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Hanson were down Saturday from Thief River for a visit with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. H. F. Hanson.

Oscar Kolstad, who is employed on the docks at Duluth and Superior, motored up Saturday for a visit with relatives here and at Warren.

A good sized crowd turned out on Wednesday night for the dance given for benefit of the baseball club. A good time was enjoyed, and a neat sum realized for the club.

Alexander Anderson returned Tuesday after spending three weeks at Missoula, Mont., looking after affairs of his brother, Arthur, who lost his life by drowning in the Missoula river about a month ago.

Miss Marguerite Dahle, student nurse at Fairview Hospital at Minneapolis, came home Wednesday morning to be present at funeral services for her classmate, Avis Fellman, and also to visit briefly with her parents, Rev. and Mrs. M. L. Dahle.

J. B. Armstrong of Spokane, Wash., who was formerly in the cigar manufacturing business at Red Lake Falls years ago, visited at the Mike McAndress and J. Norman homes here last Saturday. This was Mr. Armstrong's first trip back to this section since he left Red Lake Falls 33 years ago.

Halvor Skottem came up last week from Minneapolis to spend a few days at the home of his brother, Sever Skottem, and to visit old friends and old scenes in this community. Except for a brief trip when called by the death of a brother a few years ago, this is Mr. Skottem's first visit back to St. Hilaire since 1912.

PIANO RECITAL

Miss Maria Erdmann will present the members of her music class in a piano recital to be given at the school auditorium next Saturday, June 6, at 8:00 P. M. The program for the evening appears elsewhere in this issue.

SURPRISE PARTY

Ladies of the Black River, Tarna and Clara Swedish Lutheran congregations, and neighbors in the village, tendered a birthday party Friday afternoon to Mrs. Herman Larson whose birthday anniversary was the following day. In showing their appreciation of her services, the ladies presented Mrs. Larson many useful gifts and also a purse of money. A bounteous lunch, brot by the self-invited guests, was served late in the afternoon.

AVIS E. FELLMAN PASSES SATURDAY

One of the saddest deaths in this community this year occurred Saturday at 4:00 P. M., at the hospital at Thief River Falls when Avis Eleanor Fellman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Fellman of River Falls, passed away after an illness of five months, of heart trouble.

Avis was born October 4th, 1916 at Thief River Falls, and was 19 years and 8 months of age at the time of her death. She came to River Falls with her parents in 1928. She attended the local school and was graduated from high school with the class of 1934. A bright, winsome girl, Avis was a favorite with all her schoolmates and she will be sadly missed by them all.

She is survived by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Fellman and by three sisters and three brothers. The sisters are Mrs. A. E. Larson of Clearbrook, Minn., Mrs. N. D. Armstrong of Huron, S. D., and Mrs. Ernest Ulrich of River township. The brothers are Carl, Harold and Winton, all of whom reside at home. Another sister preceded her in death some years ago.

Funeral services were conducted by Rev. H. A. Larson at the local Swedish Lutheran church yesterday afternoon. In addition to a large number of people from surrounding community, members of the Class of 1934 attended the funeral in a body to pay their last respects to the deceased who was beloved by all. Interment was made in the cemetery east of the village.

Heartfelt sympathy of the entire community is extended to the bereaved relatives in their sad loss of daughter and sister.

DROWNING AT T. R. FALLS

The body of a man estimated to be between 40 and 45 years of age, was found floating in the Red Lake river at Thief River Falls last Monday evening. There were no marks of identification on the body, nor were there any indications of foul play.

Paul Thyren returned Tuesday after accompanying a carload of stock shipped last Saturday to market at So. St. Paul.

MRS. J. GAUTHIER DIED LAST SUNDAY

Mrs. John Gauthier, respected pioneer woman of River township five miles south of here, died Sunday morning at 5:30 after a short illness. She had not been in the best of health the past few years, but was able to be about until she suffered a stroke last Thursday, so her sudden death came as a severe shock to her family and many friends.

Mrs. Gauthier, nee Roslin Corno, was born in Wisconsin on Sept. 15, 1870 and was 65 years of age when death called her. She was united in marriage to John R. Gauthier on June 14, 1886, and they came to this section shortly thereafter. Mr. and Mrs. Gauthier were to have observed their golden wedding anniversary a week from next Sunday, an event to which the pioneer couple had looked forward to with keen anticipation.

Besides her husband, Mrs. Gauthier is survived by two daughters, Mrs. Paul V. Pike of Caruthersville, Mo., and Mrs. Eileen Pautz who resides at home, and by five sons. The latter are Philip J. of Elgin, Ill., Roy of Red Lake Falls, Chester of Browns Creek township, and Clifford and William at home. She is also survived by one sister, Mrs. Annie Vesey of Centralia, Wash., and a brother Thomas Corno of British Columbia, and by two half brothers, Felix and Alex Grandbois of Red Lake Falls.

A splendid type of pioneer woman, Mrs. Gauthier was highly esteemed by all who knew her. Ever ready to respond in cases of illness, death or other misfortune, Mrs. Gauthier was a true friend, and she will be sadly missed in her community.

Funeral services were held at 9 o'clock Wednesday morning at St. Joseph's church at Red Lake Falls, and interment was made in the St. Joseph's cemetery east of that city.

Sympathy of many friends is extended to Mr. Gauthier and family in their sad loss of wife and mother.

IN PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE

Friends thruout this community will be interested to know that Dr. Paul T. Erickson is now engaged in work with the U. S. Public Health Service at the Centennial Exposition now open at Dallas, Texas. Prior to this, Dr. Erickson was on duty in the Surgeon General's Office at Washington, D. C. working on public health matters and preparing exhibits for the Texas Centennial. Local friends of Dr. Erickson, who may attend the Centennial, will find him in the Federal Building on the Exposition grounds where he will be stationed until the Exposition closes.

Serious Labor Troubles in Many States—Moley Warns the Administration—Municipal Bankruptcy Act Is Held Invalid.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.

FACTORIES and farms in 15 states, in all parts of the Union, were affected by labor troubles which intermediaries were trying in vain to settle. Leaders of organized labor claimed that from 30,000 to 45,000 strikers already were out, but employers challenged the union claims that the strikes were effective.

Workers in six plants of Remington Rand, Inc., were out on strike after union leaders ordered a walkout at Syracuse, N. Y. They said 6,000 workers in the company's New York, Ohio and Connecticut plants were involved. Company officials asserted there were 4,200 affected.

Six thousand barbers in lower Manhattan, New York, were ordered to join 3,000 others in a strike which had spread over a wide area of Manhattan, the Bronx and Brooklyn.

Striking seamen in New York were said to number 7,000 and there was a good deal of trouble over their efforts to picket the piers and the home of Mayor La Guardia.

Two hundred office workers and company police in Portsmouth, Ohio, were besieged in the strike-closed plant of the Wheeling Steel corporation; and in Akron, Ohio, employees of the Goodyear Tire and Rubber company were arrested for violating an anti-riot law.

In other states the union leaders thus estimated the number on strike:

Arkansas—Three thousand tenant farmers.

California—One thousand celery field workers.

Oregon and Washington—Seven thousand loggers.

Wisconsin — Twenty-five hundred workers in various industries.

Minnesota—About 500 millwrights, fur and cereal workers.

Indiana—About 175 in various industries.

Vermont—Two hundred marble workers near Rutland.

RAYMOND MOLEY, who used to be considered the chief of the "brain trust," fears that his friend President Roosevelt may be destroyed politically by the radicals within the Democratic party who at the same time would "destroy moderation and destroy the very system which he attempted to improve." In a speech before the National Economy league in New York, Doctor Moley said he saw confronting the Roosevelt administration these dangers:

Raymond Moley

1. That federal relief agencies will be turned into political machines to perpetuate the rule of state and local politicians.

2. The tendency, "all too prevalent in this congress, to engage in muckraking, marauding expeditions which destroy the liberty of all of the people while they seek to restrain the abuses of a few. These orgies of public castigation . . . may be means of furthering individual political ambitions, they may be build-ups for those with Presidential hankerings, but so far as the public interest is concerned they are simply sound and fury."

3. The tendency "of those in charge of the New Deal to over-emphasize adherence to the belief in the philosophy of the movement and to minimize the importance of competent technical administration."

Doctor Moley defended capitalism; declared that already there has been a wide distribution of wealth in this country, and warned the average man that he eventually must pay the mounting bills for relief—that he is the "missionary being fattened for a cannibalistic feast."

FIVE justices of the United States Supreme court held invalid the municipal bankruptcy act of 1934, declaring it to be an unwarranted invasion of state sovereignty. Four justices dissented, these being Chief Justice Hughes and Justices Stone, Brandeis and Cardozo. The majority opinion was written by Justice James C. McReynolds. The case was brought by bondholders of a water improvement district in Texas.

The municipal bankruptcy act was designed to permit cities and other political subdivisions which found themselves in financial straits to effect a composition, with the approval of two-thirds of the bondholders or other creditors, whereby the indebtedness could be readjusted, scaled down, or, as Mr. Justice McReynolds put it, "repudiated."

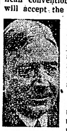
THE United States treasury will undertake the biggest peace time borrowing operation in the nation's history, Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau disclosed in an official announcement revealing that $2,050,754,416 of government securities will be offered the middle of June. This financing calls for an even billion dollars of new money, in addition to the $1,050,754,416 required to meet maturing obligations.

SENATOR ROBINSON'S resolution authorizing the continuance of the Florida ship canal and Passamaquoddy tide harnessing projects was favorably reported by the senate commerce committee after Mr. Robinson had told the members the administration wanted the schemes kept alive as work relief measures.

Senator Vandenberg of Michigan warned the majority leaders they had better not bring the resolution up in the senate if they really wanted adjournment by June 6, for he had 21 amendments to offer and each one would lead to prolonged debate.

Robinson's resolution authorizes the President to appoint two boards of three engineers each to examine and make reports upon surveys that have already been made of the two projects. They would have to report to the President by June 20 of this year.

"FRANK O. LOWDEN of Illinois will be the choice of the Republican convention for President if he will accept the nomination."



Frank O. Lowden

That was the confident prediction of a political observer who is usually well informed and close to sources of national party news. He declared there was a steadily growing demand from many parts of the Union for the nomination of the former governor of Illinois, who always has been popular with farmers and whose qualities of statesmanship are recognized generally throughout the country. Mr. Lowden is vigorous and hale, and he is always actively interested in the welfare of his state and nation, especially in the problems of the agriculturist.

CONGRESSMAN TINKHAM of Massachusetts is one of those Republicans who think the chances of their party for victory in November would be enhanced if a coalition with disaffected Democrats were formed and the ticket shared with them.

"The country is facing as great a crisis as it faced in the Civil war," he said. "This involves the very character of the government of the United States. The question is, 'Are the government and the institutions of the United States to remain American or become European or Asiatic?'

"This crisis is so great that it should eliminate all party lines, and the Republicans should nominate as Vice President a Democrat. I suggest that they nominate Alfred E. Smith."

FOR the third time Norman Thomas is the Presidential nominee of the Socialist party. He was selected at the national convention in Cleveland, Ohio, and George Nelson of Wisconsin was put in second place on the ticket. There was a great demonstration after the voice vote, but it was not joined in by the right wing leaders from several eastern states who were angered by the seating of a leftist delegation from New York. The disaffected ones threatened to form another party.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT starts on his trip to Arkansas, Texas and Indiana on June 8, and he told the correspondents it would not be a political tour. His speeches, he said, would be historical, dealing with early days in the three states. He has no slightest intention of stealing the show from the Republican national convention.

Mr. Roosevelt planned this trip some time ago so that he might take a cruise along the Maine coast line late in June with his sons.

ARABS of Palestine, rebelling against British protection of Jewish immigration, are causing Britain a lot of trouble. English soldiers fought real battles with the Arabs in several localities, and Jews throughout the Holy Land were arming themselves in self-defense. Casualties in the fighting were few, but the situation was so serious that Sir Arthur Wauchope, British high commissioner, asked the government for more troops.

EDWARD A. FILENE, Boston merchant, announced his withdrawal from the United States Chamber of Commerce, severely criticizing its failure "to study business in a business way" and to "substitute fact-finding research for opinion as a guide to decisions concerning the needs of business in general—even as opposed, possibly, to the ambitions of special interests."

Mr. Filene has been a consistent supporter of President Roosevelt's administration, and the Chamber of Commerce has been increasingly critical of the New Deal.

LEON BLUM, elderly and rather fragile leader of the French Socialists, will soon be premier of his country, and he is going to have a hard time living up to the expectations of all the leftists, who are making a national hero of him. The other day hundreds of thousands of French reds and pinks marched behind Blum or stood cheering on the sidelines, and pictures of the leader were carried in the ranks or sold by hawkers in the crowds. This was on the occasion of the traditional memorial ceremony in Pere Lachaise cemetery for the Marxist martyrs of the Paris Commune in 1871.

Leon Blum

M. Blum is said to be watching closely his publicity in the United States since his speech in which he intimated a desire to agree with Washington on the elimination of war debt discussions. He is hoping to be able to obtain loans from New York bankers. The Johnson law is naturally an insurmountable obstacle to France's obtaining any kind of credit in America, but as the Paris Midi pointed out Blum went out of his way to declare that France has not forgotten the war debt and fully expects to bring it up for discussion some time in the future.

ON JUNE 15 the bonus baby bonds will be mailed to 45,000 post offices from Washington and from the eleven federal reserve centers. Final plans for delivering the bonds to the veterans were announced by Postmaster General Farley, who predicted that payment on a great majority of them would be made within one week.

Mail carriers have been given instructions to "go out of their way wherever necessary with a view to effecting delivery," Farley said. The bond packets must be delivered to the veteran in person, and not to another person or firm at the veteran's address.

"If it is impossible to locate the veteran to whom the bonds are addressed," Farley continued, "they will be held for 30 days at the post office of destination before being returned to the respective federal reserve centers and thence to the Treasury department."

The bonds will be in $50 denominations with accompanying checks to cover the odd amounts. To collect cash, the veteran must have his bonds certified through his local post office.

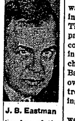
Post offices in 241 cities have been designated as paying centers for their districts, and 59 large city offices have been empowered to pay on bonds issued outside their own districts.

ITALIANS celebrated the anniversary of their country's entrance into the World war with imposing ceremonies that included the promotion of more than half a million boys and girls in the organizations of young Fascists. Premier Mussolini presided over the "graduation," and after reviewing a great military parade, the Duce told the shouting crowds:

"The spectacle of the force of youth exhibited this morning on the anniversary of our intervention in the World war, the first phase of the Fascist revolution, has been magnificent and a warning at the same time. We are preparing the young armies of tomorrow for defense of the empire. Since they are animated by the Fascist spirit they will be invincible. This is the law of the revolution. This is the supreme will of the whole Italian people."

While his conqueror was thus engaged, Haile Selassie, deposed emperor of Ethiopia, was embarking at Haifa, Palestine, for England, on the British destroyer Capetown. Two sons and a daughter accompanied him, but former Empress Menen remained at Jerusalem. The exiled monarch, after a visit in England, intends to go to Paris, hoping to stiffen French resistance to Italy in the League of Nations. He may succeed in this, for the incoming Socialist regime in France will endeavor to restore the league's prestige.

THE office of transportation co-ordinator, held by Joseph B. Eastman, is due to expire on June 16, but Senator Wheeler of Montana had ready for introduction a resolution extending it for two years, and President Roosevelt was on record as approving some of its activities.



J. B. Eastman

It was reported in Washington that railway management and labor, both of which have opposed some of Eastman's doings in the past, might unite in an effort to block extension of the office, but Eastman said he had heard "nothing substantial" on that line.

Eastman announced last February he would exercise his powers to compel railroads in 11 cities to carry out terminal unifications as economy and efficiency moves. He withheld the orders at the suggestion of President Roosevelt, however, to permit rail management and labor to agree on some plan of protection for employees thrown out of work in such consolidations.

CONVERSATIONS between Great Britain and Russia now going on in London will have to do only with naval armaments in European waters, for the Soviet government has announced that it cannot consider limitation of its far eastern fleet while there is no similar agreement binding Japan.

Speaking for the government, Karl Radek said in the newspaper Izvestia that the Soviet union has been striving to conclude a separate agreement with Japan, but thus far the efforts have been fruitless.

St. Cloud—Joseph Walf of Staples, addressing a sixth district rally of 1,500 members of his Democrtaic faction, challenged Washington reports that the Moonan-Regan wing of delegates would be seated at the Philadelphia convention.

Zumbrota—Declaring the state cannot indefinitely continue to issue highway bonds to match federal aid, State Senator A. J. Rockne urged returning the automobile license fee to the level existing prior to the reduction made by the 1933 legislature.

Willmar—Evidence that John Dillinger and the Harvey Bailey gang disposed of stolen midwest securities through "fences" in Denvar was announced by federal agents after discovery of a $9000 block of bonds allegedly stolen from the Willmar National gank in 1930.

St. Paul—Filing fees totaling $4,690, paid by candidates for nomination at the June 15 primary, were certified by Secretary of State Mike Holm for distribution to 87 Minnesota counties. The fees are in addition to those paid by candidates for the legislature, who filed locally in all but 10 counties.

Breckenride—Police are attempting to solve the mystery surrounding the death of Elmer Homan, 23 years old, of Waverly, Iowa, whose body was found in a boxcar. The youth had been slugged and robbed. He was believe to have been enroute to Breckenridge from Minneapolis on the freight.

Two Harbors—Co. agent Torstein Grinager has been informed that an initial allotment of $60,000 has been made to the Lake County Co-operative Power Association for a loan from the rural electrification administration. The power line will run about 50 miles, with 300 prospective users already signed up.

Duluth—Automobiles may be parked in 10 Minnesota state parks during the daytime without charge as a result of action taken by the state conservation commission. In response to protests from various sections of the state, the commission rescinded its action of March 13 when provision was made for a 25 cent parking fee.

Mendota—An historic Minnesota shrine, the Sibley house at Mendota, was re-opened, completely remodeled and equipped with an electric stove, a hot water heater and an electric refrigerator. The new conveniences have been installed in the former home of the state's territorial governor under the sponsorship of the Minnesota Daughters of the American Revolution.

Cokato—A building boom is under way here, with $150,000 to be spent in improvements and new buildings. The Minnesota Valley Canning Company, largest exclusive packers of corn and peas in the world, is spending $100,000 on a new plant and machinery here. The First National Bank building and a store building owned by George Butcher, both destroyed by fire Christmas eve, are being replaced.

Minneapolis—Modificaton of the welfare board's proposal to drop from relief rolls all veterans receiving bonuses appears as a possibility. I. S. Joseph, board member, said that at the next meeting he will introduce a resolution which would remove from relief rolls only veterans receiving a bonus of $300 or more. Those veterans removed from relief would receive relief again if needed after they had spent their bonus money at the rate at which relief is paid.

Duluth—Minnesota tax commission valuations of iron ore mining lands for 1932 were attacked as excessive in arguments by mining company attorneys during the state supreme court hearing on appeal from a St. Louis county district court decision taken by 18 companies. The 1932 tax of which 50 per cent is delinquent because of mining company protests, was approximately $3,500,000. The companies paid $1,750,000 pending the outcome of the court fight in which standards of valuation were attacked as incorrect.

Uncle Phil Says:

We Do From Motive

Human nature is naturally lazy. We do everything from motive, and the strength of the motive measures the result of the effort.

Hardly anything can make sink the heart of a young man of twenty like being expected to enjoy a job for which he has neither taste nor talent.

You sometimes have to judge a man by what people don't say about him.

It Can't Be Done

Trying to injure another without hurting ourselves is like gazing in the looking glass without expecting to see our image.

His working capacity makes the mule valuable in spite of his ability to kick and bray.

It is often twice as easy to do a man a favor who is bashful about asking it.

Some read epigrams and enjoy them; others are so contentious that they want to dispute every one they read.

No Need to Suffer "Morning Sickness"

"Morning sickness"—is caused by an acid condition. To avoid it, acid must be offset by alkalis—such as magnesia.

Why Physicians Recommend Milnesia Wafers

These mint-flavored, candy-like wafers are pure milk of magnesia in solid form—the most pleasant way to take it. Each wafer is approximately equal to a full adult dose of liquid milk of magnesia. Chewed thoroughly, then swallowed, they correct acidity in the mouth and throughout the digestive system and insure quick, complete elimination of the waste matters that cause gas, headaches, bloated feelings and a dozen other discomforts.

Milnesia Wafers come in bottles of 20 and 48, at 35c and 60c respectively, and in convenient tins for your handbag containing 12 at 20c. Each wafer is approximately one adult dose of milk of magnesia. All good drug stores sell and recommend them.

"Draft Lowden"

Washington.—A week or ten days ago, the name of Frank O. Lowden was scarcely whispered around where politicians foregathered. They talked about the forthcoming Republican National convention and they mentioned Governor Landon of Kansas; Col. Frank Knox of Illinois, Sen. Arthur Vandenberg of Michigan, and others, but never was the name of Lowden mentioned.

In the short space of a fortnight, there has come first a whisper of the name of Lowden, then a mention of him as a possible Republican nominee and finally a full voice that approximates a "draft Lowden" movement.

A few weeks ago I reported to you in these columns that the prospects were very good for the Republican National convention to turn to a dark horse. There was no name at that time upon which anyone could pin a prediction but there were circumstances, undercurrent in character, that seemed to point the way to the nomination of a man not then in the forefront of political prognostications.

Of course, with the Republican convention delegates pledged and unpledged here, there, and everywhere, it is possible for almost anything to happen but my information is that the leaders desire most of all to avoid a bitter battle. They wish to avoid the very thing which New Deal political strategists have been seeking to foment. Only the final ballot will tell the story, of course, but it does appear at this time that the Republican leadership may display some good horse sense and seek to accomplish a nomination without splitting their party wide open.

This "draft Lowden" movement has come on with almost startling suddenness as I have indicated above. It has resulted from the fact, apparently, that Mr. Lowden, while he was governor of Illinois a number of years ago and since that time, has built up for himself a record as a friend of agriculture. Thus, the strategy would seem to be that the Republican leadership is turning to a man who can give President Roosevelt a run for his money in the farm belt states.

As far as I know, Mr. Lowden has not been consulted respecting the nomination. It would seem, however, that if he were nominated he would accept despite the fact that he has not sought the nomination in any way nor has he been very active in politics since he sought the nomination for the Presidency in 1920. It was on that occasion, it will be remembered, that he and the late General Leonard Wood fought through into a convention deadlock and Warren G. Harding of Ohio finally was nominated as a compromise candidate.

It is difficult to see how the conservative element in the Republican party could refuse to back Mr. Lowden and it is equally difficult to see how the farm representation and the liberals in the party could withhold their support when the Lowden farm record is considered. But all of this represents subject matter that must await convention action because, after all, there are still other candidates who have blocks of delegates behind them and they may be unwilling to withdraw unless they are satisfied with the dark horse that finally trots out onto the convention platform.

Tax Muddle

One hears more and more discussion in Washington these days of the tax muddle in which President Roosevelt has found himself. I think it is fair to say that his prestige has suffered considerably from the way his proposed tax increase was handled and I think it is the general consensus that this year's tax bill was a proposition to which the President gave too little thought.

Sometime in the future, the history of the New Deal will be written in a clear and comprehensive manner. The story then will show in retrospect that which we can hardly understand now—the good and the bad in the bewildering adventures attempted under the policies of reform and recovery. I believe those who write that history will dwell upon the 1936 tax legislation as one of the important political weaknesses developed by Mr. Roosevelt.

As far as I know, there has never been a public official who has been entirely consistent at all times in his methods and policies. Mr. Roosevelt, being human, has been inconsistent like all of the rest and there was no reason to expect that he would be the one exception despite the fact that some of his followers maintain that he cannot make mistakes.

But to link the tax legislation with the fact that Mr. Roosevelt is human, let me call attention to the further fact that he has been bold, even daring, in many of his moves. Where his quick decisions have been sound, the country has been benefited. Where he has made mistakes by acting too quickly, his spokesmen have sought to deny that there were errors.

The reason I have called attention to Mr. Roosevelt's mistakes on the tax legislation is chiefly to show something of a new awakening on the part of the general public. The way in which the senate took the tax bill that had passed the house and turned it topsy-turvy, casting out the administration's experimental levy on corporate surpluses, shows better than anything I can say how the voice of public opinion again is being heard in Washington. The "voice of the people," so often referred to by the politicians, was heard quite clear and strong by the senators and the result was a complete reversal of the position which the President desired them to take.

* * *

Here's the Point

Now, the point is this: if Mr. Roosevelt had done as he has done on numerous occasions, he could have avoided the situation that has reacted unfavorably to him. It will be recalled that several times the President has tried out his theories on various governmental problems and has studied the popular reaction to his trial balloons. He did not do this with the tax bill. He left the job of drafting the legislation to the treasury and the treasury, being populated with a number of men who have no conception whatsoever of business practices and care little for American traditions, produced a piece of legislation that would have forever prevented any business unit from saving funds to carry it through times of depression, the proverbial rainy day.

In the discussions around Washington, it is frequently stated that had Mr. Roosevelt taken his so-called tax experts into a room and made them explain the character of the bill they were presenting, much of the difficulty would have been averted. But he did not use this foresight and the result is now history. He has alienated a considerable amount of congressional support that he ordinarily could have for the mere asking.

As the tax legislation stands, it is nothing more nor less than a makeshift boost in rates. It has added nothing at all to strengthen the nation's general taxation policies. It seems to me that the time is ripe for a general study of the tax structure with the idea in mind that a wholesale revision should take place and that scientific methods should be employed. We must not forget that we have a national debt of more than thirty-one billions and that several other billions in securities are really to be counted in since those obligations are guaranteed by the United States. That debt must be paid eventually and the revenue must be raised in the only way that the federal government can get its money, namely, by taxation. The conclusion, therefore, is inescapable that we face heavy taxation and we may as well face the music.

It may be that all of the twenty-one billions in tax payments and borrowed money which Mr. Roosevelt has expended can be justified in every respect. It may be that in future years the nation will be grateful that this era of extravagance is a part of our history, but the fact still remains that when a government or an individual borrows money, that money must be returned to those who hold the evidence of the debt.

U. S. Pay Roll Grows

The civil service commission lately has compiled some statistics indicating that the merit system in the federal government is being pushed aside at an alarming rate. The commission's figures show how every President since Arthur in 1883 has expanded the scope of the classified civil service during his administration until the administration of President Roosevelt.

It would be a list much too long to record here how the number of employees of the federal government has increased each year as the government has expanded but as a matter of history it struck me as interesting to see how 41.5 per cent of employees of the federal government under President McKinley held their jobs under the civil service system and laws and how this percentage increased to 61.5 per cent under President Taft; to 72 per cent under President Wilson; to 79.8 per cent under Presidents Harding and Coolidge, and to 80.1 per cent under President Hoover.

By the end of June, 1935, the number of civil service employees in the federal government amounted to only 63.3 per cent of the total number and, while the civil service commission has not tabulated the record for this year, I understand reliably that the ratio will be about 57 per cent of the total.

The total number of employees of the federal government has grown consistently since the turn of the century when it stood at 256,000. In Taft's administration, the total was 370,000. President Wilson's first administration employed 438,000 and then with the advent of the World war the government expanded its personnel to its highest point, 917,000.

As the war agencies were liquidated, the number of employees declined obviously until during the Harding and Coolidge administrations the highest point reached was 540,000. The Hoover administration numbered 583,000 on the pay rolls but the election of President Roosevelt immediately brought on greater numbers and by June 30, 1935, there were 719,000 on the federal pay roll and this number was further increased to 806,000 at the end of March this year.

STAR DUST

By VIRGINIA VALE

THAT new series of comedies that Patsy Kelly and Lyda Roberti are making promises to be very funny. Lyda was teamed with Patsy to replace Thelma Todd, you know. And the little Polish girl can be very, very amusing.

There's one drawback to the current picture, so far as the girls are concerned, and that's the presence of a lion in the cast. (Good old Keystone comedy stuff!) Not that the girls are afraid of him, despite Charles Bickford's experience with a lion some months ago. But lions—well, as a former comedy star explained, "You have to get so close to them. And practically all lions have halitosis!"

Mary Pickford

Don't be surprised if it rains and rains in your town when "One Rainy Afternoon" is shown in your town. That's the first picture made by Mary Pickford and Jesse Lasky, you remember. Mr. Lasky bet that it would rain when the picture was first shown in Hollywood. It did. So he traveled East for the first showing in New York, and again he bet that it would rain that day. And after days and days of bright sunshine, New York had four Grade A thunderstorms that day!

This week's bad news is that Freddie Bartholomew will probably be the hero when "Kim" is finally screened. If you've read the famous Kipling story you'll recall that Kim was a red haired, freckle faced youngster, a scrappy young brat—the last role in the world for the talented English kid!

If you like horror pictures you'll be crazy about "Draucula's Daughter," with Gloria Holden looking very beautiful in the title role, and Marguerite Churchill looking equally beautiful as the lovely victim. It begins to look as if the children who go to this one will some day be taking their own grandchildren to see "Dracula's Great-great-granddaughter."

The news about Dick Powell isn't too good; it's said that he will not be able to sing till two or three months from now. Which probably means that Rudy Vallee will take his place in "Stage Struck."

Marion Nixon has just had her tonsils out, which seems funny, because she's been in Hollywood for years and years. Usually having your tonsils out is one of the first things you do when you settle down in Hollywood. Your appendix is likely to be the next thing that leaves. And sinus trouble sometimes haunts you.

Joan Crawford

Joan Crawford seems to be taking her music pretty seriously. They do say that she's given up coffee, for the good of her voice. And she and Franchot Tone have been giving musicales and making quite a name for themselves in musical affairs on the Coast. Singing in the movies has experienced a steady progression from the days of the pioneer crooners to the opera prima donnas. Now a good voice is an asset like good looks and historic ability.

Those pictures made in Technicolor are causing not a little trouble for companies indulging in them. They're worth it, of course—but just listen to this!

Pioneer Pictures was ready to shoot the works on "Dancing Pirate." No effort was spared. Little things like special make-up, specially supervised, were just details. But—for two solid weeks they tried to get a group of full-color portraits of Steffi Duna, the feminine star, and couldn't, because she had a cold and a red nose, and color photography is so realistic that the nose couldn't be camouflaged with make-up because that would show, too.

25 Years Ago

Mr. John Naplin and Miss Edna Swanson were married June 7th, at the home of the bride in Black River township. Friends will join in extending congratulations to Mr. and Mrs. Naplin, now residents of Polk Center, on the occasion of their silver wedding anniversary.

A barn owned by A. S. Wilson was struck by lightning and destroyed by the fire that followed. Four horses and a cow were lost in the fire.

A big drive of logs was being sluiced at Thief River Falls and sent down stream enroute to the sawmill at Crookston.

ELECTRIC cooking makes any food taste better. The still, clean heat of the Electric Range keeps the flavors and juices in the foods—does not dry them out. Cakes and breads bake a beautiful, even, golden brown . . . every time.

Vegetables too are better cooked electrically. With little or no water—without special utensils—the valuable salts and minerals so important to proper nutrition are retained.

Best of all, an Electric Range is actually easier and simpler to use. It is so accurate—so certain, that it cooks whole meals without the slightest attention.

And CLEANLINESS! No soot or grime. No greasy stove to clean. Your Electric Range will stay as clean as a china plate. And you'll never have to scour pots and pans. ELECTRIC HEAT is as CLEAN as SUNSHINE!

For better cooking results, less work, greater cleanliness—change to an Electric Range. Beautiful new models may now be seen at your dealer or our showroom. Only $5 down installs one in your kitchen—balance in 24 small monthly payments. A liberal allowance will be made for your present stove.

DEFEAT PLUMMER IN SPIRITED GAME

In one of the most thrilling ball games seen here in recent years, the St. Hilaire team defeated the Plummer aggregation by a score of 5 to 4, in ten innings, last Sunday afternoon. After trailing for seven innings, the Saints, with help of two well placed hits, and three errors by Plummer, tied the score at four tallies each at the end of the ninth inning. In the extra frame, the visitors were held scoreless, while the home aggregation managed to add another score to cinch the game.

Wm. Hallamack, on the mound for St. Hilaire, held Plummer to four scattered hits, one of them a home run by Karlstad in the third inning.

The local club will go to Garnes next Sunday for their third league game, and also their third attempt to stay at top of the league standings. They are playing good ball, and hope to have a good following of rooters accompany them and help cheer them on to victory next Sunday.

TENT MISSION TO HAVE MEETINGS

The Lutheran Tent Mission will sponsor a series of evangelistic meetings in this village starting Tuesday, June 23 and continuing Sunday, June 28, inclusive. Dr. A. W. Edwins, Professor at the Theological Seminary at Shekow, Hupeh, China, will be the speaker at these meetings. Dr. Edwins was the pioneer missionary of the Augustana Synod in China, and has had long and varied experience in the foreign missionary field. He will have some inspiring messages for the people of this community, and all will be welcome to attend the meetings.

Mrs. Anna L. Patterson and daughter, Mabel, came Friday from Minneapolis to spend the summer months at their cottage at Maple Lake. Miss Ann Patterson of Minneapolis, and Miss Erma Chamberlain of Faribault accompanied them to the lake, but returned home Sunday.

Hi-jackers got another truckload of liquor consigned to the municipal liquor store at Red Lake Falls a short time ago in a daylight holdup near Big Lake near Minneapolis. This is the second load lost by the Red Lake Falls store within two months. Value of this load was placed at $3,000.00 with insurance to cover.

At the June meeting of the county board of Red Lake county, Sam E. Hunt was named to serve as a member of the Oakland Park Sanatorium commission to succeed Dr. N. M. Watson who represented Red Lake county from the time that county joined the sanatorium group, until his death two months ago.

GRADUATES AT U. OF N. D.

Manford Dahle, son of Rev. and Mrs. M. L. Dahle, received his Degree of Bachelor of Science in the School of Medicine at the forty-seventh annual Commencement exercises held Tuesday morning at the University of North Dakota. Rev. and Mrs. Dahle and daughters, Grace and Marguerite, attended the exercises. Manford has been accepted as a student at Rush Medical College at Chicago and will complete his advanced course at that institution.

BAND PLACES 2ND AT 4-H CLUB RALLY

A total of 903 4-H club members, accompanied by county agents, assistant county agents and county club leaders from fourteen northwestern Minnesota counties attended the 25th annual 4-H Club rally held last week at the Northwest School of Agriculture at Crookston. Chief interest of club members here was centered in the St. Hilaire 4-H Club band, which won a trip to the State Fair last year, and was again entered in the instrumental division this year. In this division, the Norman county orchestra won first place and will represent the district at the State Fair, the local band being awarded second place.

BAND PRACTICE JUNE 19

Regular practice for beginners in the band will be held Friday afternoon, June 19. Practice for the regular band members will be held evening of the same day.

GOOD PHEASANT CROP

Minnesota sportsmen may look forward to an unusually fine crop of pheasants this year in the opinion of those who have watched hatching conditions in southern, central and northern part of the state. Hatching conditions have been very good in this section for pheasants as well as grouse, and it is anticipated birds will be plentiful next fall.

SURPRISE PARTY

A large number of friends of Manford Dahle tendered him a surprise party Wednesday night of last week at the basement of the Norwegian Lutheran church. A very pleasant evening was spent, and Manford was presented a neat sum of money as a token of esteem from his friends.

The local band gave a much appreciated concert last Saturday evening at the grounds north of Larson Bros. store. This was the first of a series of outdoor concerts to be given by the band during the summer months.

Tales About Town

Happenings of the Week, Told in Brief. News Concerning People You Know

After spending a few days at home, Oscar Kolstad left Monday to resume his work on the docks at Duluth and Superior.

Miss Helena Erdmann returned home last week for summer vacation after finishing teaching a term in the high school at Brainerd.

Mr. and Mrs. Ira Carpenter motored here Tuesday from Isle, Minn., for a visit at the home of their son, Leo, and to look after matters at their farm southeast of the village.

Mr. and Mrs. W. D. Clinton of Minneapolis are the happy parents of a son born Saturday, June 6th. Mrs. Clinton will be remembered as Margaret Patterson, formerly of this village.

Jorgen and Knute Nomland of Fisher, motored here Tuesday for a short visit at the Knute Kolstad home. They also made a trip while here to Skime in Roseau county to inspect a tract of land they own there.

Pete Borgen, manager of the Borgen Players who are now touring the northern part of the state with their tent show, was here yesterday and moved his household effects from the H. F. Hanson house on Railway avenue to the Bilden residence on Water street.

After spending several days here at the home of his brother, Mr. and Mrs. Halvor Skottem left Monday to visit relatives at Little Falls and at Grantsburg, Wis., before returning to their home at Minneapolis. Miss Alice Skottem accompanied them on the trip.

H. F. Hanson and family moved this week from the former Hans Wilson place, which they occupied since last fall, to their own property in southwest part of town. The Hans Wilson property has been sold to a Mr. Hesse from Plummer, who is taking possession of his place this week.

Mr. and Mrs. E. Oliver Johnson, who have been located during recent years at Juanita, N. D., have moved from there to New Rockford where Mr. Johnson will have charge of the bulk station of the Standard Oil Company. The move is in the nature of a promotion for Mr. Johnson which will be pleasing to his many friends in this vicinity.

Mrs. John Unis of Seattle, Wash., C. A. Nelson and family of Fargo, Oscar Nelson and family of Thief River Falls, Mr. and Mrs. Albert Nelson of this village, Mr. and Mrs. Melvin Sherva and son of Fertile, Oscar Seeland and family of Hazel, Mrs. Mary Sherva, John Mortenson and Mrs. A. Mortenson attended a family gathering a week ago Sunday at the Rupert Nelson home south of the village.

Mrs. Margaret Volden returned Monday from Erskine where she attended funeral services for her mother-in-law, Mrs. Roisland.

Mr. and Mrs. M. R. Graham and baby daughter left Sunday morning for a few days visit with relatives at Bertha and Wells, Minn.

Rev. and Mrs. H. A. Larson and family left Monday for a visit with relatives at Minneapolis. They will return the latter part of the week.

June meeting of the school board has been postponed from regular date to Thursday evening, June 18 at which time bids for bus service will be considered.

Postmaster Ferdie Brown of Grygla, was here Tuesday for a brief visit at the home of his sister-in-law, Mrs. Jennie Carter. Mr. Brown attended the postmaster's district meeting held that day at Thief River.

Mrs. Christopher Kies came last Sunday from Chicago to spend a few weeks at the home of her mother, Mrs. J. S. Roy, and with other relatives in this community.

Edgar Johnson, principal of the high school at Lancaster, was here this week attending to business matters at the Johnson Cafe of which he is part owner.

Stanley Olsen and his mother, Mrs. H. A. Olsen, motored Saturday to Leonard for a visit at the home of their brother and son, Norman Olsen, manager of the Leonard creamery.

Several parties from this village and vicinity were at the Narrows of the Red Lakes this week to try their luck fishing. All came home with a fair string, but all agree that the fish do not seem to be striking as lively as they did a week ago.

A cordial invitation is extended to all to attend the meeting of the Luther League of the Nor. Luth. Church which is to be held at the Ole Hagglund home Friday evening, June 12. Refreshments will be served.

Mr. and Mrs. Harold Holmes and son, Billy, returned last evening after spending a few days with relatives following the funeral for Mrs. Holmes' father, Wm. Novak, which was held Saturday at the former Novak family home at Calmer, Iowa. Rawlins Novak, who also was present at the funeral, returned home Sunday.

BACK FROM COLORADO

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Biskey, Sr. returned last week after having spent several weeks in Denver and Colorado Springs, Colo. Mr. Biskey was considerably improved in health by change of climate, and he expects to return to either Colorado or Arizona in the near future. When he leaves next time it will be with intention of making his permanent home in one of the states mentioned. He is well pleased with Colorado and finds living conditions ideal in parts of that state.

BONUS BONDS TO BE DELIVERED

Soldier's bonus bonds for ex-service men in this vicinity will be delivered to those entitled to receive them at the local postoffice next week. The bonds will be sent from Minneapolis by registered mail and should be here not later than Tuesday or Wednesday. Bonds will be delivered to the addressee only, no one else being either permitted to receive them or to sign for them. If not called for by the person to whom they are addressed within thirty days, they will be returned to the Treasury department where they may be claimed only after going thru considerable red-tape. To cash the bonds, the veteran must have them certified thru his local postoffice, and sent to St. Paul where a government check will be issued to the veteran and mailed to him without extra cost.

ASSESSORS AT WORK

Minnesota's army of assessors is now making house to house calls to complete the work of assessing property. While the work officially started May 1st, it will continue through until the fourth Monday in June when reports must be made to boards of review in townships, and equalization boards in villages. Since the law exempting household goods and farm machinery does not apply, due to action of the 1935 legislative session, the assessors will list this property again. Since the taking of assessments is the first step in the taxation machinery it is important that a true and correct valuation be established/so that levies spread on the valuation may be just and equitable. Assessment of real estate is made this year, and valuations placed on it this year will hold for two years. It is very important too for those who occupy their own property, either deeded or bought on contract for deed, to see that they are granted homestead exemption.

PRIMARY ELECTION MONDAY, JUNE 15

Voters of Minnesota will go to the polls at the Primary election to be held next Monday, June 15 to express their choice of candidates to come before the electors at the general election next November. The ballot to be used for those to be nominated with party designation, will be the same as used two years ago. The Farmer-Labor, Republican and Democratic tickets will all be on the consolidated ballot. Voters cannot split their ballots, but must vote only for candidates of one party. If check marks are placed in more than one column on the ballot, the ballot will be rejected and not counted.

Candidates to be nominated without party designation, appear on a separate ballot. On this ballot appear the names of six candidates for Associate Justice of the Supreme Court; six candidates for Representative for the 65th District; six candidates for county commissioner from the First district, and four candidates for commissioner from the local or Third district. If voters will pay attention to the warning printed at the top of the consolidated ballot, and note the number to be voted for, which appears on the right hand side of all ballots, there will be few spoiled ballots.

MUCH NEEDED RAIN FALLS HERE

A generous rain that means a good deal to growing crops, fell over this section of the state Sunday night and Monday morning. Altho most grain crops, excepting those on sandy or ridge lands, were not exactly suffering for moisture, the growth of all crops, including tame and wild hay, had been retarded somewhat because of insufficient rains up to Sunday. Gardens which had not shown much progress thus far this summer, were refreshed and have since shown rapid growth. While there are no means available locally to measure rainfall, it is estimated nearly an inch of rain fell in this locality.

This moisture, which went into the ground to a depth of six inches, practically spells success for all crops, unless something unforseen comes to change the picture later on. Not only was the rain a boon to crops and gardens, but it served to replenish the supply of soft water which was either exhausted or running low with most residents.

Your Creamery

The creamery, organized and built by the people of this community because they saw a need for co-operative marketing of their farm products, can grow and prosper only in the same proportion as it is patronized by the people of the community. STORY of MAINE

Making Snow Shoes in Maine.

WITH warmer weather gripping the southland, vacationists feel the appeal of northern climes. Each section of the country has its cool spot. Many easterners are lured to Maine, which is noted not only for its invigorating summer climate but also for its historic background.

The name of Maine may or may not be French; it certainly is not Indian, like Massachusetts or Connecticut. Of the sixteen counties, five recall the mother country, being named for English shires; five others honor American personages of the colonial or Revolutionary periods, and the remaining six retain the Indian names of the rivers within their borders.

As for the other names which have received specific legislative sanction for something over 400 cities, towns, and townships, the larger part are simply descriptive, or repetitions of towns in other New England states. Of the rest, so far as the origin of their names is known, 66 bear Old world names, so that in that delightful tale by Laura E. Richards, "Narcissa, or the Road to Rome," the roadside signpost might have pointed to Vienna, Belgrade, or even China, and kept within the jurisdiction of the County of Kennebec.

Proprietors and first settlers are known to have given their names to 58 towns; governors, generals, and Presidents to 16, 12, and 6 towns, respectively; while Indian names, which so plainly tell their own origin, number only 23.

An interesting touch of idealism was the selection of such distinctive town names as Harmony, Amity, and Hope; Freedom, Liberty, and Unity, these last three being neighbors in Waldo county.

From the beginning the economic life of Maine was founded on fish, fur, and forest. These three furnished powerful incentives for exploration and the chief rewards for settlement. The fisheries of the Gulf of Maine were even an issue between king and parliament early in the Seventeenth century, when the English fishermen won their fight for free fishing along the Maine coast, despite the monopoly granted by James I in his patent to the council of New England.

Fisheries a Major Industry.

So it came that the earliest sites of permanent settlements were chosen not for mildness of climate, but by reason of proximity to the cold waters where dwelt the fish that could be converted into a profitable export, without license fee being paid to any patentees of the crown.

The fisheries continue a major industry. The value of the state's fishing products as marketed approximates six million dollars, the two largest items being the plebeian herring and the aristocratic lobster.

Along with the ancient business of fishing a place must be given to the popular sport of angling, for which Maine offers unsurpassed inducements, in the lakes and streams and also offshore.

Last year 35,000 fishermen and fisherwomen from outside the state, and nearly five times that number of residents, obtained licenses. The fees received went directly to hatching, planting and protecting a new crop of game fish.

The state maintains 36 fish hatcheries and rearing stations, and from these last year went 17,000,000 trout, togue, and salmon for stocking the brooks, streams, and lakes. Nearly half of these "planted" fish were above legal size, and 10,000 weighed from 3 to 6 pounds each.

The policy of protecting wild life is enforced by a corps of 100 game wardens, who seek to be big brothers to the youth of the state in training them to be good sportsmen. In the severe winter of 1934, airplanes were used to locate deer yards and then cedar trees were cut to feed the starving deer confined there by the deep snow.

Moose are far from being extinct. They can be shot only with a camera; but deer continue plentiful, 18,933 having been killed legally in 1933. More bears are killed in Maine than in any three other states. Grouse, woodcock, and ducks complete the game offering, with pheasants promised as a future attraction.

The Early Explorers.

As early as 1605 Capt. George Waymouth and his companions on the Archangel—many of them world travelers for that day—were deeply stirred by their first views of a Maine river which the captain named St. George's (now St. George).

An exploratory trip inland "toward the great mountains," the Camden hills, convinced them of the "beauty and goodness" of the land, as recorded by Rosier in his True Relation of that "most prosperous voyage." And the author boldly affirmed St. George's "to be the most rich, beautiful, large and secure harboring river that the world affordeth."

A few years later (1614), Capt. John Smith was less attracted by this eastern part of the region he named New England. Yet he saw fit to say of this coast, "Those barren Iles so furnished with good woods, springs, fruits, fish and foule, that it makes me think though the coast be rocky, and thus affrightable, the valleys, plains and interior parts may well (notwithstanding) be very fertile."

So moderate a statement must have been exceeded by other testimony of that day, since only a dozen years later another explorer on the Maine coast, Capt. Christopher Levett, a member of the Council of New England, felt it necessary to "debunk" certain other travelogues, not preserved for the modern reader. In reporting on his voyage of 1623-4, he remarks: "Nor will the Deare come when they are called, or stand still and looke on a man, until he shute him, not knowing a man from a beast, nor the fish leape into the kettle."

And he continues: "But certainly there is fowle, Deare, and Fish enough for the taking if men be diligent," which equally well describes the Maine of 1623 and 1935.

The honor of making the first detailed contributions to accurate geographic knowledge of Maine must, however, be shared by a Frenchman and an Englishman: Samuel de Champlain and the aforementioned Captain Waymouth.

In 1605 both Champlain and Waymouth were sailing along the Maine coast. So near did they come to meeting that in midsummer Champlain heard from an Indian chief on the Kennebec of the presence of an English ship ten leagues to the eastward, which was undoubtedly Captain Waymouth's Archangel.

The race was on between the French and the English; and the Maine region was destined to be eventful borderland for a century and a half in the contest for control between New England and New France.

Settled by Sieur de Monts.

The first settlement in Maine was made by Sieur de Monts, who in 1603 had obtained from the king of France a trading concession for Acadia, then defined as extending from Cape Breton island to the latitude of Philadelphia. With Chaplain as his lieutenant, De Monts set sail for the New world fully equipped for his colonization venture.

Some three months later, on June 26, 1604, a small island in a sheltered river was selected as best adapted for a fortified settlement and trading post. This island was named Saint Croix and was not far above where the river now bearing the same name empties into Passamaquoddy bay. Here, on what is now also known as Dochet island, was erected a group of dwellings in part built of timber brought from France, with a storehouse, dining hall, kitchen, and blacksmith shop. Gardens were laid out, all carefully planned by Champlain.

The site of this earliest but short-lived settlement in Maine, which antedated Jamestown, Quebec, and Plymouth, was not wholly obliterated.

Before the Pilgrims.

In a speech in congress 100 years after statehood was granted to Maine, Representative Robert Luce of Massachusetts, himself Maine born, remarked that Maine might more fittingly be called the older sister of Massachusetts than her daughter. And the records of early settlement and trade well bear out this contention.

On Capt. John Smith's map of New England of 1614, for example, the site which is now York was named Boston, thus locating in Maine, so far as maps go, the first New World Boston—and all this before the Pilgrims even landed!

When the Pilgrims set foot on Plymouth Rock, not a few Englishmen had already been sojourning on the Maine coast and even had wintered there. The welcome of the Indian sachem Samoset was in the Pilgrims' own tongue, learned from the fishermen on the Maine coast. Indeed, thirteen years before, in 1607, the Popham colonists built a fort in "that northern colony" which mounted 12 pieces of ordnance. They also erected a church and launched a 30-ton vessel—a fine record of English piety and preparedness.

Married People Are Healthier and Live Longer, Study Shows

Death Rate Is Highest Among Single Persons

NEW YORK.—If you want to live long and be healthy, get married.

Figures showing that the married state, whether blissful or not, is at least a healthy one are reported in the current issue of the Metropolitan Life Insurance company's Statistical Bulletin.

"Marriage, apparently, is conducive to long life and good health," the report states. "At any rate, married men and women live longer than do single persons, and married people register lower death rates from nearly all the important causes of death than do bachelors or spinsters.

Results of Study.

"We would expect these findings to emerge from any statistical study of mortality according to conjugal condition, for married persons constitute a selected group. 'The lame, the halt, and the blind' do not marry, as a rule. Nevertheless, the differences between the respective death rates of wedded and single persons are so large that this factor of selection can be only a partial explanation of them.

"It would seem that the relatively staid and regular course of married life is more conducive to health than are the comparatively free and easy ways of the unmarried.

Bachelors' Death Rate.

"Among males over fifteen years of age, the standardized death rate for bachelors is 1,218.2 per 100,000 as compared with 855.9 for married men.

"Among females the standardized death rate of spinsters is 1,039.1, as against 856.6 for the married of all ages."

The death rates for influenza, pneumonia, tuberculosis, chronic heart disease, kidney disease, apoplexy, ulcer of the stomach, alcoholism and suicide are appreciably higher among the single than the married, showing that ways of life among the single are not so healthy.

Windshield Filter May Be "Crutch" for Color-Blind Drivers

SEATTLE.—A simple and "infallible" help for the color-blind automobile driver who gets into difficulties because he cannot distinguish between green and red traffic lights is suggested by Thomas Ross of the University of Washington here. In a report to the current issue of Science, Mr. Ross describes a contrivance that can be fitted to the windshield of the color-blind driver's car.

The device consists of small pieces of special glass which can filter out either red or green light. With the red filter placed above the green one, the driver will know that when he sees a light through the top piece of glass he is seeing a red light.

When he sees the light through the bottom piece in this arrangement it is a green light. The device is improved by placing a prism over each filter in such a way that the traffic signal will be visible through both filters at the same time.

Device Is Practical.

This idea has worked in actual trials, Mr. Ross reports. It could be adapted to persons suffering from other types of color-blindness besides the red-green kind.

A variation of the red and green filters is also suggested. One of the color filters, says Mr. Ross, might be perforated and parts of the other set in it like polka dots.

"Thus, if the red filter were perforated and the openings were filled with the green material, a red traffic light or other red object viewed through the resulting filter would appear bright with dark spots. A green object, on the other hand, would appear dark with bright spots."

Hairpin Goes Traveling; Reaches Woman's Appendix

It wandered so far that it probably will be mentioned in the pages of a medical journal one of these days.

Strange to the doctors is how the hairpin happened to end its travels in a woman's appendix.

"That is an amazing thing," said Dr. J. C. MacGregor, who removed the appendix after it had ruptured. He has never seen a report of such a large object getting into an appendix. It is not unusual to find tiny objects of foreign matter in amputated appendices. The woman recovered.

Don't Waste Pity on Yourself

Make up your mind that you will have more or less trouble as you journey through this world. You will meet with many disappointments. People whom you trusted may turn out to be "bad actors." If they are, drop them from your acquaintanceship.

But don't under any circumstances begin to believe that you are misused, that there are conspiracies against you, or that you are not getting a "square deal."

That may be no fault of yours.

But don't worry about it. Drop the acquaintanceship of people who have proved themselves to be mean and tricky, and choose friends that you can trust.

There are plenty of these.

* * *

Don't think for a moment that everybody is trying to get the best of you, that your boss is "exploiting" you, or that you haven't any chance to get ahead.

Your chances of getting ahead will be just about what you deserve.

Today you, like everybody else, have plenty of opportunity to educate yourself.

But to do that it will be necessary to work, and to work hard.

You will find people who will seek to crowd you out and get ahead of you.

You will come into contact with unscrupulous "office politicians."

But that kind of people always work themselves out of jobs before long, for they are so busy with their little venomous plans that they will have no time to win any sort of success.

It is not that kind of a world. But its sordidness and selfishness are overrated.

* * *

Work out your own plans, and stick to them.

Pay no more attention to a rascally office mate who is trying to "tunnel" you out of a job than you would to a tree root that tripped you up when you were taking an afternoon walk.

Be helpful and considerate to other people.

If they repay you with backbiting, drop them, and find people who are a better sort.

Enough of these exist in your neck of the woods to help make life very pleasant for you.

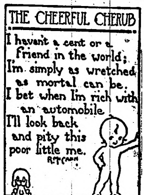
Take things as you find them. Use them for your own good. Take care of your health and your disposition.

And in the end you will find that you have been more or less the architect of your own fortune, and that you deserved the kind that you got.



THE CHEERFUL CHERUB
I haven't a cent or a friend in the world;
I'm simply as wretched as mortal can be.
I bet when I'm rich with an automobile
I'll look back and pity this poor little me.

Bleak Shetland Islands Are Important Fishing Centers

The Shetlands, noted chiefly for their ponies and handknitted shawls, are also known to the rest of Britain as important fishing centers. Thousands of tons of herring, besides large cargoes of codfish, haddock, and whale oil, are exported annually.

There are more than 100 islands in the group, but only about a third of them are inhabited. Most of them are rather bleak and barren. They lie 110 miles north of Scotland and less than twice that distance from the coast of Norway.

"Riding Lesson"

By FLOYD GIBBONS
Famous Headline Hunter.

YOU'VE heard stories about how people have learned to swim by getting thrown into the water and having to swim. Well, here's the story of how Duke Edwards learned to ride a horse.

Duke lives in New York city. Maybe you've heard of him. Maybe you've seen him ride horses. He does it pretty regularly now. But I'll bet you've never seen anything half as good as that first broncoback excursion Duke ever took, out in Kalispell, Mont., in July, 1912.

It was this way. Duke was twenty years old and fed up with the big city. The old adventurer's blood was pumping in his veins and his feet were itching to go places. So he invested most of his money in a railroad ticket and headed west. He didn't know what he was going to do when he got there. But that was soon settled for him.

On the train, Duke met up with a bird in a big, 10-gallon hat. He got to talking with him, and told him he was going west to see if he could get a job on a ranch.

"Can you ride a horse?" the big fellow wanted to know.

Well, Duke couldn't ride a horse any more than he could walk a tight rope, but he wasn't going to let that stand in his way of getting a job. "Sure I can," he said. And right there, his troubles started.

The big fellow told Duke he was a rodeo rider. He'd just finished up working for a wild west show and was on his way to join another one in California. He told Duke he'd fix him up with a cowboy outfit and see if he couldn't work him into a job somewhere. That was more than Duke had figured on.

I mean, he might have bluffed his way through the business of riding a tame horse, but getting aboard one of those bucking bronchos they ride in the circus was another thing altogether. The more he heard about that job, the less he liked it. But before he'd finally made up his mind, the big fellow had staked him to a lot of cowboy clothes, and Duke owed him so much money that he just had to have a job to pay it back.

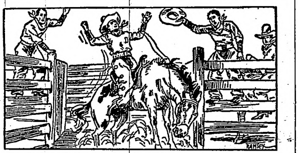
Duke began hoping they'd turn him down when he applied for a job—but they didn't. The big fellow saw to that. He went to work at seventy-five bucks a month and his keep, and since it was the off season and the show was in winter quarters, he managed to bluff his way through the first couple of weeks on the job. Duke's method was simple, but it had its kickback. He just bragged so much about what a good broncho buster he was that everybody took it for granted that he knew his horses. But all that talk was just going to make things worse for him when the big showdown came.



Rearing and Snorting the Horse Plunged Up and Down.

Duke fooled the rest of the show, but he couldn't kid the big fellow. When he found out Duke couldn't ride a horse, he started teaching him as much as he could. But you can't teach a man to bust bronchos in two weeks, and that's about all the time they had before the show went on the road again.

Duke had a streak of luck the first week or two the show was on the road. They forgot about him or something. Anyway, nobody asked him to ride a horse. Then, in Kalispell, Mont., the blow fell. And a tough blow it was, too.

Kalispell was a great ranching town. A cowman in the neighborhood brought in a bad horse that went by the pretty name of Dynamite, and Dynamite's reputation was so bad around that neck of the woods that the show offered a prize of a hundred bucks to the first cowboy that stayed on his back. And the first name drawn to ride Dynamite was—you guessed it—Duke Edwards.

"I didn't say anything," says Duke, "but I felt myself going into a faint. By this time I knew how to mount a horse and ride it around the lot, but I'd never been on a bucker. It took six cowboys to saddle that brute and hold him so I could mount, but I had to act as if I wasn't afraid. I climbed into the saddle, and then, with a yell, we were off.

"The horse, rearing and snorting, went down almost to his knees and bounced up again. I thought my head would snap off my neck. I felt myself fainting, but I stuck to the horse until we reached the bandstand."

Duke Played a Solo on the Big Bass Drum.

It took Duke and Dynamite just about forty seconds to reach that bandstand, but remember, that's quite a while to be on a bucking horse. It was at the bandstand that it happened. There, Dynamite put on an extra pound or two of reserve steam. He gave a last leap, kicked up his heels, and Duke went flying over his head.

Straight into the bandstand Duke flew. He could see the big bass drum coming up at him—felt his nose flatten out as it hit the drumhead. Then everything went black until he awoke in the hospital with a busted head and a big cut in his forehead.

And did they fire Duke after that? Well—that's the funny part of it. Everybody said he'd given that Dynamite horse one heck of a good ride. Duke stayed with that outfit for three years and rode plenty more tough horses. Then he went into the movies and rode in western pictures, so you've probably seen Duke at one time or another, on the screen. And that one experience, he says, has given him the only rule of success he knows. "First throw your bluff," says Duke, "and then make it good."

Famous Maps of Path to Young Woman's Heart

As one journeys along the Rhone in France from Avignon, it becomes an easy matter to explain the famous maps of the "Path to a Young Woman's Heart," which the Courts of Love, held here in Seventeenth century, delighted in making.

Tarascon, down the river from Avignon takes in good part the sly fun poked at the character of the city's inhabitants in the tale, "Tartarin of Tarascon." The people of the town now go so far as to sell pictures of Tartarin on his expedition in the Alps, and some will even point out to gullible travelers the place where he lived.

Arles, also in this vicinity, is famed for its Roman antiquities. Its amphitheater is about 500 yards in circumference, has 43 tiers of seats and holds about 26,000 spectators. In the summer months it is the scene of many bull-fights. The old theater of Arles was also built by the Romans, although it was designed by a Greek architect.

Where the Rhone divides before entering the Mediterranean, it forms a salt delta, the Camargue, which is one of the most romantic regions of Provence. Flamingoes with pink feathers inhabit its marshes, herds of cattle roam its fields, and steer-roping and branding are a part of everyday life. The cowboys of the region are expert, and their small white horses are very intelligent, taking as lively an interest in the games of their riders as the men do.

Tradition says that here the three Maries, Mary of Bethany, Mary, the mother of James, and Mary Magdalen, with their servant, Sarah, landed when they sailed away from the Holy Land after the Crucifixion. Sarah, an Egyptian, has become the saint of the gypsies, and in May they congregate here in colorful throngs to worship in the Church of the Saintes Maries de la Mer.

what Irvin S. Cobb thinks about:

A Political Bystander.

HOLLYWOOD, CALIF.—If I were a Republican orator, I'd say the Democrats wouldn't need a keynoter at their convention when a hog-caller would be more suitable. If, on the other hand, I were a Democratic silver-tongue, I'd say the Republicans needed no campaign committee, whereas a set of pallbearers would be highly appropriate.

Irvin S. Cobb

As a Republican spellbinder, I'd proclaim we were giving Puerto Rico four years in which gradually to cut loose from us, because, should the Democratic outfit win in November, by the end of those four years the Puerto Ricans will be used to having some independence and we'll be used to having none at all. As a Democratic champion, I'd come right back by pointing out that, since Puerto Rico would starve to death anyhow under a Republican administration, congress mercifully was taking steps to let the people down there get accustomed, by degrees, to the starvation process.

As an innocent bystander, though, about all I can say is that, once the nominations have been made, it's a safe prediction that this summer will be fair and warmer.

Meandering Revenue Program.

THE members of the senate finance committee—poor things!—seem to be going forward with the new revenue program the same way a land crab makes headway—by traveling backward. At last accounts they were so snarled up in figures and language that any minute the rescue party was expected to rush in with bush-hooks and chop them loose.

However, out of the epileptic seizure into which these unfortunate patriots have been enmeshed, one concrete fact has emerged. There will be a slight exemption of dues on the profits of corporations making less than $15,000 a year. This will be a great boon for trunk stores down by the depot, brokerage firms handling second-hand railroad tunnels and dealers in Brazilian butterflies.

New Socialist Argument

THE trouble with being a socialist is that, no matter what you start to debate, you always wind up on the Tom Mooney case. Or at least, such was the situation until recently. Now, for any socialistic argument on any subject from German measles to the Great Wall of China, there is a new climax.

The tenants of a Bronx apartment house, mostly radicals, held a meting, and, in accordance with the best radical traditions, drew up resolutions demanding that the management do this and that. Having read the fiery protest, the superintendent addressed the gathering:

"Now aboudt not ledding nobody hang out vashing in the hallways—that's reasonable. I start beginning that reform right away.

"But, say, vot do you suckers uxpect me do aboudt the Scottsboro boys?"

Sauce for the Goose.

WHEN a bricklayer feels upset and licks his wife that's temper and he gets $30 or 30 days. But when a flicker star goes on a similar tantrum and wrecks an expensive set, that's artistic temperament and the studio gives her some silver fox furs to calm her nerves.

Thus it goes. If a couple in, say, Peoria, break up, why, then, a couple in Peoria have broken up. But if the same thing occurs in Hollywood, it invariably is featured as a "nuptial rift."

A lad in Kansas takes his girl to Ye Olde New Era eatery for dinner, and what with the blue plate specials and the tip, the transaction amounts to $1.80, but otherwise creates no special excitement either locally or throughout the nation. Let the same thing happen to a couple of the least conspicuous of the movie colony, and 20 columnists fight their way to the wire to scatter the thrilling tidings.

Choosing a New "Buddha."

FROM the forbidden kingdom of Tibet—although goodness knows they never had any trouble keeping me out—comes word that after a two years' search a new "living Buddha" has been discovered. However, we already have our own grand lammer, the name being Joe Louis.

The news from Lhasa should give encouragement to the poor unhappy congressional committeemen who are prominently connected with the Townsend plan who'll condescend to talk to them.

You may quarrel with the Townsendites' bookkeeping, with their way of handling the contributed dimes of thousands of trusting oldsters, with their failure to explain where they're going to get the billions to pay those gaudy pensions or how the provisions of the distribution are to be enforced, but at least the leaders are too proud to endanger their social positions by being caught chit-chatting with a lot of congressmen.

Aspire to Humility

Aspiring to nothing but humility, the wise man will make it the height of his ambition to be unambitious. As he cannot effect all that he wishes, he will only wish for that which he can effect.

Chess Masters Play Game With Living Pieces

BEDTIME STORY FOR CHILDREN

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

A MOONLIGHT VISIT

BILLY MINK was just plain mad. He had begun to get that way when he found the trap set at the entrance to one of his favorite holes. But when he found a little fence on each side of the Laughing Brook right across where he was in the habit of running when traveling up and down the Laughing Brook, and in the middle of each little fence an opening with a trap in it, Billy lost his temper completely. He ground his teeth and his eyes grew red with rage. You see, he know that those traps had been set especially for him.

"Booh!" Said Billy.

"I despise a trapper," snarled Billy. "Yes, sir, I despise a trapper. It is bad enough to be hunted, but then a fellow does have some show. He knows where the danger is and what to look out for. If he is reasonbly smart he can fool the hunter. But traps don't give a fellow any show at all. They are sneaky things. They jump up and grab a fellow without any warning at all. I hate traps and I hate trappers! I wonder if I can find any more traps along the Laughing Brook?"

Billy continued on up to the very beginning of the Laughing Brook, but found no more traps. Then he curled up in one of his favorite hiding places to rest and think things over. He was strongly tempted to go away from the Laughing Brook altogether. He thought of going down to the Big River for a long visit. He felt sure that if he kept away from the Laughing Brook the trapper would become discouraged and after a while take up his traps. He had just about made up his mind to leave that very night when he happened to remember that while he knew all about those traps, he had friends who didn't know anything about them. "I guess I'll stay around a while and see what happens," muttered Billy.

That night Billy went for another look at those traps. By and by, a little noise caught his quick ears. Instantly he was alert and watchful. There was a rustling of leaves, and then out on an old log full in the moonlight crept a plump form, and sat down. One glance was enough for Billy. Without a sound he slipped up behind the plump form.

"Booh!" said Billy, and when he said that, Booby Coon almost fell into the Laughing Brook, he was so startled. You see, it was Bobby who had come out on that old log, and at the time he was very busy washing some food. You know, if he can, he always washes his food before eating.

For a minute Bobby lost his temper. But it was only for a minute. Then, having washed his food to his satisfaction, he began to eat his supper, and at the same time to gossip with Billy Mink. He told Billy all the news of the Green Forest, most of which was no news at all to Billy, for there is little going on that Billy doesn't know.

Then Billy told Bobby the news of the Laughing Brook, everything except about the traps and trapper. It was a very pleasant visit they had there together in the moonlight.

◆ MOTHER'S ◆ COOK BOOK

SAVORY DISHES

TRY small sausages partly cooked then dipped into fritter batter and baked.

Mutton cut into serving sized pieces, browned in fat, then boiling water added, and when nearly done, add finely cubed carrots and green peas. This makes a substantial meal.

Hungarian Sauerkraut.

Mix together one cupful of cooked rice, one-half pound each of chopped pork and beef, one egg beaten, one onion chopped and browned in butter. Season with salt and pepper. Brown three tablespoonfuls of flour, add a quart of sauerkraut and a little water, stir until well mixed. Make small sausages of the meat and lay in the kraut, fold the meat in it and simmer for an hour or more, closely covered or in a fireless cooker.

Chicken With Asparagus.

Cut a young fowl into six or eight pieces, brown and season well in a hot frying pan, adding two tablespoonfuls of butter, then add one cupful of stock and a bunch of asparagus. Cook for two hours at the simmering point, add flour and milk blended together and cook for the gravy.

Fish Salad.

Cut into bits boiled halibut, flake it with forks, season with lemon juice and arrange on a bed of lettuce in a salad bowl. A mixture of water cress with the lettuce is an improvement. Peel and boil three large mealy potatoes, beat light, adding salt, mustard and two tablespoonfuls of olive oil, the yolks of two beaten eggs and a tablespoonful and a half of lemon juice, beating all the time. Pour this over the fish and serve.

Peas, fresh cooked green ones, a small chopped sour pickle and peanuts coarsely chopped or rolled with a rolling pin, make a good combination for a salad on lettuce with any dressing.

A few stalks of tender asparagus cut into a ring of green pepper or ripe tomato, with a spoonful of thick mayonnaise on lettuce, makes a most attractive salad.

FINDING THE HEADS

THIS trick requires an ordinary match box filled with matches. To make it most effective, you should borrow the match box; and to add to the mystery you can repeat it with several other match boxes.

The trick consists of picking up a closed match box, holding it to your forehead and promptly naming the end of the box toward which the heads are pointed. When the box is opened your guess is found to be correct.

The secret lies in the manner of lifting the box. Pick it up at the center and hold it lightly between your thumb and forefinger. The end with the heads, being heavier, will tilt slightly downward, giving you the answer that you seek.

THE ACTS OF MAN

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

"A MOUNTAIN fits the hollow of his hand,
The west wind is his whisper, and his nod
Tumbles the towns upon some little land."
So by immensity men understand
Him they call God.

This is not God. I have not given form,
My own resemblance, to a thing divine;
I have not heard him trumpeting the storm,
Speaking his purpose where the petrels swarm,
This God of mine.

God gives us shelter, does not send us gale;
God never starved a babe, destroyed a town;
By our own sins we suffer and we fail,
By our own weakness wintry winds prevail
And ships go down.

Greed grasps for gold, ambition sails the seas,
In hate and error so we plot and plan,
Invite catastrophe, distress, disease—
And when they come, then blame not God for these,
The acts of man.

A young woman in the fur department of a big London store was found to be giving wrong change and to be rude and very snappy to customers. Instead of discharging her the firm sent her to a psychology expert, who discovered that when she was a baby, a cat had jumped into her cradle. She was in consequence not at her best in the fur department. She was sent to the umbrella department and is now on her best behaviour.

HEREDITY IDEA IS REFUTED BY TWINS

Professor Studies 120 Pairs in 10-Year Project.

Chicago.—Twins may look as much alike as two peas in a pod, but unless they've been reared in the same environment the chances are the similarity will end with their physical characteristics, Dr. H. H. Newman, University of Chicago biologist, has concluded.

He based his opinions on the results of a ten-year study, in which he observed 120 pairs of twins, scattered throughout the United States. The importance of environment and heredity was studied in each case.

"While our data showed us many surprising and conflicting things," Doctor Newman said, "we are able to say that environment has the most effect on temperament and some on intelligence. It has the least effect on physical characteristics.

Heredity Is Discounted.

"Heredity accounts for only about 30 per cent of the temperamental and emotional aspects of our twins, we discovered through application of standard tests of 20 pairs of identical twins, whose heredity is, of course, identical, and who were separated in infancy and reared apart."

Many differences in twins, Doctor Newman and his associates found, were not consistent with differences in social environment. For instance, he said:

"Two of our boys, Tom and Dick, were alike in many outward respects. But Tom, who had been adopted by a poor family whose moral standards were not high, was manly, independent and pleasingly aggressive.

"His brother, who had lived for 12 years with the family of a wealthy physician, had not developed these pleasing characteristics. Of course these differences may even out in time."

In the case of Edith and Helen, identical twins who are now twenty-seven, Edith, who was reared on a farm, is boyish, athletic and aggressive, said Doctor Newman.

Helen, who had a softer, urban life, is lady-like, to an exaggerated degree, teaches music and dislikes athletics. She has a slightly higher intelligence quotient than her sister. This pair showed the widest differences in every way, Doctor Newman said.

Education Greatest Factor.

"Differences in identical twins," Doctor Newman said, "seem to be about 50 per cent due to education, 15 per cent to social environment, 10 per cent to health, and the rest to causes we cannot classify."

Mental differences of 11 years were found in the case of twins who, although endowed with the same mental capacities, had had different educational advantages.

"The case of Fred and Ed was our most celebrated one," Doctor Newman related. "It was almost like a Gilbert and Sullivan opera. These boys had been adopted from an orphanage when they were infants by families in widely separated parts of the country.

"But both had become electricians. They were married the same year; each had a boy child and each had a fox terrier named Trixie. Both worked for the Bell Telephone Co. Fred so often was mistaken for Ed and vice-versa by employees shifted throughout the organization that each began an investigation which brought them together."

Madison, Wis.—Two small printing presses, sandwiched between a desk and shelves bearing hundreds of books and pamphlets in Esperanto here, are the source of a bi-monthly magazine, Scienca Gazeto, published in this universal language.

The same room also is home of Karl Froding, the magazine's editor and publisher. A card on his door reads "The American Esperanto Institute."

One million persons in the world are adept readers of Esperanto, Froding estimates, and 10,000,000 more have some understanding of it.

Recognizing that it still is "too early to expect anything," Froding is working toward the day when he believes Esperanto will remove the barriers of national languages.

Heirs to $2,500,000 Are Sought in Vain

London.—The county courts of England are waiting and eager to give away $2,500,000 but they cannot find anyone to take it.

For a year courts all over the country have been trying to find the rightful owner of hundreds of thousands of dollars which have remained unclaimed in their possession for nearly a century. The money is made up of sums paid under the trustees relief act, equity cases, and nonclaimed dividends under administrative cases. The amounts range from a few dollars to thousands.

Before the county courts act of 1934 was passed this money remained in the court's custody indefinitely. Now under the new act, after a year's notice, all money paid into court more than 15 years ago is to be handed over to the national debt commissioners.

Dangerous Hill When Wet

By ALBERT P. TERHUNE

© McClure Newspaper Syndicate. WNU Service.

BECAUSE Lalage knew so little of business and because she knew so much about Billy Doorn's utter perfection in everything, she bade Billy go straight to the boss and demand a raise of pay.

Because Billy Doorn was in that dazedly drunken first stage of a first engagement which makes a youth reverently certain that his sweetheart has all the occult wisdom of a Sybil and all the mystic intuition which her sex claims for itself, he obeyed her command.

There was a slip-up somewhere. Both of them felt that, but neither of them could figure where it was. Both of them had read enough fiction to know that a loving woman is far wiser than a mere man. Also that men owe their most shining successes in life to following the uncannily wise advice of such women.

Yet Billy had followed not only Lalage's advice but her Napoleonic mandate. And here he was out of a job.

Varick Cressel, Billy's erstwhile business overlord, was a casual acquaintance of Lalage's parents, and thus of her own. Also, Cressel walked past her home every morning on his way to the office.

Lalage lay awake until sunrise. Then she crept out of the house and to the garage and set off downhill in her runabout toward the business section of the little city. Something she had read in last evening's paper had dribbled into her mind during her long waking hours, and had given her a fantastic idea.

Down the long slope of the street she drove, coming to a halt at the intersection of one of the many short cross-streets that led toward the river. From the end of each of these block-long cross-streets there was a sheer drop of anywhere from fifty to seventy feet, to the river below. Wherefore each street's river end was barred by a stout grill, from curb to curb.

A heavy motor-truck had turned into one of the streets the day before. It's brakes had gone bad. It had smashed against the rotting grill at full speed and plunged far down into the river.

As Lalage halted her runabout and gazed down the hundred-yard space which separated her home street from the drop, she saw a night shift of men at work repairing the damage.

Two hours later, Varick Cressel set forth from home on his daily trudge to the office. A scud of rain was beginning to fall. He turned up his collar.

"Good morning, Mr. Cressel!" hailed Lalage. "I'm going downtown. Don't you want a lift?"

Wondrous dainty and appealing she was, as she leaned far out of the runabout's doorway. Cressel clambered aboard the car beside her, gratefully, and with much appreciation; yet aware of a hope that she had not yet heard of her fiance's discharge from his office. Lalage glanced at the folded newspaper in Cressel's hand, as the runabout got into motion.

"Wasn't it horrible—that accident at the end of Prosser terrace?" she asked.

"Yes," he made answer. "It was. Disgrace to the city that such a rusty old fence should have been left there so long."

"And wasn't it a million times terribler," went on Lalage, softly pressing the accelerator, "about Billy Doorn losing his job with you? I say it was more terrible, because the truck-driver jumped in time and wasn't hurt. But Billy jumped into the trouble himself—because I pushed him into it. And now he's out of work and—"

"If you don't mind," said Cressel, stiffly, "I think I will get out. I don't care to discuss my business dealings with—"

"Oh, I'm so sorry!" lamented the girl. "But I'm afraid I can't stop and let you out. You see, I seem to have lost control of both brakes. They won't work. I—I have a feeling that when we get to Prosser terrace—"

"Don't be absurd!" snapped the bewildered man. "You haven't even touched the brakes. I—"

"And I seem to have forgotten how to," she lamented, as the runabout whizzed faster. "In fact, Mr. Cressel, the only thing that seems likely to bring back my memory is your solemn promise that Billy shall have his job back. You see, it's my fault. I tried to be like the wise girls in stories, and to run his work for him. I taught him a speech to make to you and got him to make it. It was my fault. Now I've got to undo what I've done. It's up to you, Mr. Cressel. So, if you won't let him come back to work—"

"Look out, there!" shouted Cressel. "You almost hit those people. Slow down or—"

"Yes!" sweetly assented Lelage. "Prosser terrace is only two blocks ahead. But—"

"Tell the young idiot to come back to work this morning!" snarled Cressel.

"Oh, how sublimely dear of you!" cooed Lalage. "See, just the very prospect of it makes the brake work again! That's a solemn promise? Because the story would sound so funny if I told it! See, we're safely past Prosser terrace. As soon as I leave you at your office I'll telephone Billy."

"Never mind about phoning to young Doorn to come back, Miss Goss," Cressel exhorted his secretary, ten minutes later. "Someone else is doing it for me. I thought the boy needed a lesson. That's why I made believe to let him go—useful as he was. But it was somebody else who needed the lesson. I think she got it. Women are queer, Miss Goss. Take dictation, please."

Diplomatic Papers to 1920 Published

Foreign Relations Record to That Year Revealed.

Washington.—In publishing another volume of "Foreign Relations of the United States," State department historians have carried to 1920 their exhumation of the diplomatic correspondence exchanged between Washington and foreign capitals. "Foreign Relations" is one of the oldest of government publications, extending back as far as the American Revolution.

The work of publication is necessarily slow, for the State department waits to obtain permission from foreign governments before it makes public notes, memoranda and other documents submitted by them to the American secretary of state. Many of these papers, at the time of their preparation, were confidential. Few governments, American officials expect, will be willing to agree to the publication of important documents that are less than fifteen years old.

Few Papers Omitted.

Foreign governments are not consulted as to the inclusion of United States correspondence. Since 1925 the Department of State has pursued a liberal policy in printing the correspondence between Washington and the American ambassadors and ministers abroad. Under this policy it omits publication only of documents that would embarrass pending negotiations, violate a confidence or give needless offense.

Under the rules there must be no alterations of text, no deletions without indicating the places in the text where the deletions are made, and no omission of the facts of major importance that led to a decision. Specifically barred, too, are any omissions designed to conceal or gloss over any alleged defects of State department foreign policy.

During the fiscal year 1933 and 1934 nine volumes in all were issued—three 1917 World war supplement volumes, three 1918 World war supplement volumes and three 1918 Russia volumes. Two 1919 volumes were issued last year and 1920 will require three volumes in all. Two 1921 volumes are nearing completion. Publication will continue indefinitely—as long as the United States has any interchanges on foreign relations to disclose.

Papers of Revolution.

Among the earliest collections, well known to historians, are the "Diplomatic Correspondence of the American Revolution," compiled by Jared Sparks, and the "Revolutionary Diplomatic Correspondence of the United States," compiled by Francis Wharton. These collections stop with the year 1783. Other volumes continue the story to 1829.

There is a blank, however. The 1829-61 period is not yet fully uncovered. The State department hopes eventually to bridge this gap, now only partially dealt with by scattered public documents. From 1861 onward the record is fairly complete. In 1929 publication of "Foreign Relations" was speeded up to an average of three volumes or more each year, as compared with a previous average of one volume a year.

Here is a recent photograph of Kemal Ataturk, president and dictator of the Republic of Turkey. He created something of a sensation recently by announcing the rearmament of the Dardanelles in violation of post-war treaties.

Fine Wire Valuable

Platinum fuse wire used in delicate electrical instruments, meters and special radio tubes is drawn so fine that one grade of it is not considered expensive even at a price that makes its cost $11,000,000 a pound, writes James Cooke, Philadelphia, Pa., in Collier's Weekly.

HEROISM

By

LEONARD A. BARRETT

A very beautiful story related in Holy Writ reads as follows: A man, poor, discouraged, and lonely, left the little prosaic town in which he lived and journeyed toward the big city where life was gay and pleasures abundant. Why he left the little town we are not told. Perhaps he grew tired of its sordidness and longed for sympathetic companionship. Perchance he wanted to taste the cup of riotous living. The interesting thing is that he never arrived at the city because of an unexpected tragedy. While he was journeying on the highway, he was assaulted by thieves who robbed him of everything he had, beat him almost into insensibility, and left him nearly dead. Shortly afterward, three men came along that same highway. Perhaps they, too, were journeying to the big city. The first man, indifferent to the sight of the wounded man, paid little attention to him. He did not take time to ask questions nor offer assistance. He left him where he had fallen and went quietly and piously on his way. The second man seemed more interested, for when he saw the wounded man, he stopped and looked at him. Perhaps he assumed an aspect of sympathy but he did not express it in word or deed. He, too, passed by and went on his way. The third man is a most interesting character. He not only stopped long enough to comprehend what had happened but he rendered helpful assistance. He put the wounded man on his own beast, and took him to a neighboring inn. He paid the innkeeper in advance for the lodgings of the wounded man and promised the inn-keeper more on a return journey, if this amount was not sufficient.

One of the questions suggested by the story is, What did the third man in the group see in the wounded man which the other two did not see? Something must have attracted him strongly or he would not have gone to so much trouble and expense. Undoubtedly, he saw a reflection of something in his own heart and life. Perchance, he, too, had suffered hardship and known what it was to be bruised in heart, if not in body. Perhaps in both heart and body he could show scars of many a successfully hard-fought battle. Was it sympathy? Yes, but not the fickle, conventional sort. It was a sympathy that suffered with the wounded, that understood because of similar suffering. Such sympathy gives rise to love, and love will sacrifice to the utmost when it is necessary.

Whenever we find expressions of heroism like the service rendered at recent mine disasters and airplane crashes, we may be very sure that the spirit motivating such service is a sympathy born of an experience which itself has suffered, struggled, and sacrificed.

To Frame Pictures

Pictures for nursery or game room walls may be displayed in a new way by pasting them flat on the wall and tacking a narrow, half-round molding along the edge. They are then given a thin coat of varnish, and the molding is lacquered the desired color. The lacquer is best applied before nailing the molding to the wall with headless nails

The Household

By Lydia Le Baron Walker

THE care of utensils used in the handling of foods, in kitchen and dining room apart from silver flatwear has undergone a change since stainless steel has come into use. No longer is the scouring brick needed for steel nor any of the granular substitutes for cleaning knives. No longer does the cutlery have to be rubbed until it shines like silver, and be wiped thoroughly dry, lest the blades darken with dampness. The stainless steel finish keeps its polish, and what a labor saving this means for the homemaker. It is important to remember that stainless steel must not be scoured as this impairs the finish.

When knives and other such utensils have handles of other substances, as they generally do, these should be kept out of water, even when washing them. It is ruinous to them to remain in water, especially hot water. Hold the utensils in the hand with blades under the water, and scrub the metal well, and then wash the handles with the soapy dishcloth. Rinse by wiping well with the cloth wet with clear warm water. Then dry blades and handle with brisk rubbing with the dish towel. Unless this method is followed, the handles will either crack, or the enamel finish peel off. Also the cement holding blade and handle together softens under heat, and the parts may separate or, what is almost as disturbing, the handles may warp making the knives difficult to use.

Ivory and Pearl Handles.

The choice and costly ivory and pearl handled knives and forks for table use are very susceptible to temperature, and few of the handsome antique pieces have weathered these changes. During the long years of use, sometimes they must have been carelessly washed. Long cracks in the exquisite old mellow-toned ivory tell the tale.

Celluloid handles though not choice, were once favored because while resembling ivory, they withstood the wear and tear of usage better. Genuine ivory was and is scarce, and expensive.

Havoc of Carelessness.

Carelessness plays havoc with a person's belongings, with the good looks of furniture, and all material things to say nothing of the ravages it can make into good health. Results of carelessness are everywhere present, so it behooves us to cultivate the habit of being careful. In doing this we have to keep a watch over ourselves to see that we do not become fussy in our attentions to things, nor over-critical of others' actions when they seem careless. There is a happy medium between being careless and critically careful.

One of the greatest causes of mishaps to materials and furnishings, is the prevalent habit of smoking cigarettes and laying stubs down while still glowing. It is not the smoking habit that is at fault, but the careless attitude toward the disposal of butts. Handsome table linens get seared or actually riddled with wee holes burnt through the cloth by cigarette sparks, stubs still a-light when laid down, or recklessly handled cigarettes. The frequency with which cigarettes are discarded and new ones lighted is much greater than when smoking cigars. Opportunity for accidents is magnified in the first instance.

Careful Management.

If the homemaker is careful she will have plenty of ash trays conveniently disposed in her rooms, and also provided for dinner or luncheon guests. Then it is gross carelessness on the part of smokers when accidents through cigarette smoking happen.

Edges of handsome tables are sometimes found marred by having the finish burnt off, and a careless smoker's desk is apt to be rimmed with burnt places. Cigarettes are laid down with the lighted ends well over the edge of the furniture. But, before the smoker realizes it the cigarette has burnt down to the edge, and the finish is off and the wood itself is charred.

Tailors will tell you of suits brought to them to have little burnt places mended, and invisible darning concerns make much of their money darning such places so they cannot be detected.

Stamps Clothes to Stop Wife From Pawning Them

He made this allegation when appearing in court here to answer a charge of failing to pay for goods, which he declared his wife had ordered without his permission or knowledge.

Describing his wife's habit of pawning almost everything in sight, Scott told the court he had a rubber stamp made bearing his name, address and the words "Not to be sold or pledged." He said he applied this stamp to his linen and other articles of clothing that could easily be pawned.

Judge Owen Thompson ordered a new trial on the ground that Scott had forbidden his wife to pledge his credit.

Bob Davis Reveals

Evils Done the Dead by Half-Cocked Writers of History.

WHEN Napoleon remarked, "All history is a lie," he launched a mouthful. The Little Corporal must have sensed what he was to suffer at the hands of his biographers, those ink-stained harpies who marked time against the hour his star fell at St. Helena where, on a frail army cot surrounded by a handful of the faithful, he writhed into the everlasting shadows addressing the mirage of his army. This man of destiny ended his earthly career in a welter of fat, his ankles bulging over patent leather shoes like something spilling into space . . . The jowls of him fell into a soiled collar, open at the throat, disclosing the ivory pulp of a flabby breast housing a heart that for twenty years had set the tempo for victorious cannonading under the banners of France.

Twenty thousand volumes written in every living tongue flowed for more than a hundred years from the impetuous pens of biographers, self-consecrated to lay bare the life of the Corsican-born adventurer who lived to shake the world. From the confusion wrought of countless pens, the fearsome Bonaparte now stalks—half monster; half god, an execrated and a deified personality, mythologized with the accumulating years, and all that is germane to his influence upon the Nineteenth century, is swept into historical disorder.

Biography Written by Ear.

Unfortunate, indeed, that history is not clarified by time. Once an error creeps into the record it remains there forever, modified at intervals but never wholly corrected for the enlightenment of posterity. It is quite the vogue with modern biographers, to take one characteristic of the deceased and upon that rebuild the personality to suit themselves.

Memoirs are equally noxious, not for what they present, but for what they withhold. Most biography is written in the measure of one grand sweet song whistled by an idiot who has no ear for music. Recently in Washington a conscientious attempt was made by a congressman and an artist to contrive a mural decoration that would show just how our colonial statesmen looked when properly garbed in the style of that period; nothing, y'understand, built along quantity production lines or shot with shoddy, but the crackerjack handmade breeches, buskin and waistcoat of the James Madison, Ben Franklin and Aaron Burr school, showing George Washington in profile and Alexander Hamilton from the front elevation.

Fair enough, and a knockout, so I understood. But has anything been done to clear up some of the exaggerations, inaccuracies and dirty cracks taken at George and Alex by the gentry who adulterate biography with fiction?

Not long ago I picked up a book that dealt in part with that dramatic chapter in the life of Bonnie Prince Charlie, who was rescued from British pursuers in the Isle of Skye by the heroine Flora MacDonald after the battle of Culloden, which rang down the curtain of Charlie's kingly ambitions. To quote:

Story of Royal Romance.

"It seems to have been his (Charlie's) thought that if she (Flora) cared for him that the two might well love; and he gave her every chance to show him favor. The youth of twenty-five and the girl of twenty-four roamed together in the long, tufted grass, or lay in the sunshine and looked out over the sea. But to the last he was either too high or too low for her, according to her own modest thought . . ."

Well, there it is, offered as history. Last year I spent a month in the Isle of Skye, snooping into that affair, variously distorted by writers totally ignorant of the truth. The facts are these: Following Culloden, Bonnie Charlie took it on the run with a £30,000 reward on his curly head. Loyal Highlanders, a mere handful, escorted him through the rain-swept barren hills, keeping him concealed under cover of night. Flora, true blue, unimpeachable and courageous, was selected by Charlie's escort to get the prince out of his difficulties. She agreed to take the risk and set about her arrangements to get him to a point of safety disguised as her maid.

Myth Is Debunked.

After ten days of breath-taking adventure, Flora, bossing the entire job, succeeded in her mission, and on the night of July 1, 1746, in the presence of Highland gentlemen, one of them a relative of Flora, the Bonnie Prince bade her a respectable unemotional good-by in Room 5 of Royal hotel at Portree, climbed out of the window and escaped in the boat that her efforts had provided. The actual time consumed in the plot for his flight was ten days, during five of which Flora never set eyes upon the prince. During the five remaining days she saw him three times, always in the company of his Highland henchmen. Rain and cold weather prevailed. Not once was the rescuer of the hapless nobleman alone in his society. To be perfectly frank, Charlie on the occasion of his last ten days in Skye was ragged, cold, hungry—and lousy.

News Review of Current Events the World Over

Sudden Death of Speaker Byrns—Rome Hails Badoglio While London Cheers Haile Selassie—Rural Housewives of World Convene.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.

DEATH, sudden and unexpected, came to Joseph Wellington Byrns, speaker of the house of representatives, and put an end to a notable career. The veteran Tennessee congressman suffered a heart attack, followed by a cerebral hemorrhage, and passed away within a few hours in his apartment in the Mayflower hotel, Washington. For 27 years Mr. Byrns had represented the "Hermitage district" of Tennessee in the house, and he was elected speaker when the Seventy-fourth congress convened in January, 1935. He was a master of parliamentary strategy and so fair-minded a presiding officer that all, even his political opponents, praised and admired him. Before becoming speaker he served long years on the appropriations committee, as member and chairman, and he also was leader of the Democratic majority and chairman of the Democratic congressional campaign committee.

J. W. Byrns

Grief for Mr. Byrns' death was general and sincere in Washington officialdom. "I am shocked beyond all imagination," said Representative Bertrand H. Snell of New York, the minority leader. "It is a terrible thing. It is an almost irreparable loss."

Senator Joseph T. Robinson of Arkansas, the majority leader, after expressing his own sense of loss, added: "His work during the session has been very difficult and trying. He was a great speaker."

President Roosevelt in a statement from the White House expressed well the high esteem in which Mr. Byrns was held. Said he:

"Fearless, incorruptible, unselfish with a high sense of justice, wise in counsel, broad of vision, calm in adversity, and modest in victory, he served his state and the nation with fidelity, honor, and great usefulness. I personally mourn the passing of a steadfast friend of many years."

Impressive funeral services were held in the chamber of the house, the President, members of the cabinet and numerous diplomats being present in addition to all members of congress. The body was then taken to Nashville, Tenn., for burial, and Mr. Roosevelt accompanied the special congressional committee there.

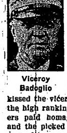
The house elected William B. Bankhead of Alabama speaker for the remainder of the session.

The death of Speaker Byrns followed closely that of another well-known congressman, A. Platt Andrew of Massachusetts, a Republican. He died of influenza at his home in Gloucester at the age of sixty-three. Mr. Andrew, who taught economics at Harvard more than thirty years ago, was director of the mint for a few months under President Taft and then was assistant secretary of the treasury. He was elected to congress in 1921, and supported much of President Roosevelt's early legislation.

MISS CLARA DUTTON NOYES, sixty-six, director of the American Red Cross nursing service, died in Washington a few minutes after she was stricken while driving to work in her car. Miss Noyes was assistant director of the American Red Cross nursing service during the World war. She also had been superintendent of nurses at the Bellevue and allied hospitals in New York.

Cyrus Hall McCormick, whose father developed the farm reaper and who himself helped organize the International Harvester company and was its president for 33 years, died at his home in Lake Forest, Ill., at the age of seventy-seven years. He was noted as a progressive business man, liberal with his employees and always interested actively in public welfare movements. He was rated as one of the wealthiest men in America and gave millions of dollars to educational and charitable organizations.

MARSHAL PIETRO BADOGLIO, conqueror of Ethiopia and now viceroy of that part of the reconstituted "Roman empire," returned to the Eternal City in triumph and was vociferously welcomed as a hero. Sixty thousand Romans welcomed him as he stepped from his train, and Premier Mussolini modestly waited in the background until they had shouted their greetings to the veteran warrior. Then Il Duce came forward and kissed the viceroy on both cheeks, and the high ranking Fascist military leaders paid homage. With the premier and the picked troops forming the escort of honor were the entire cabinet. Several days later a great military review was held.



Viceroy Badoglio

The other side of the picture was seen in London, where Haile Selassie, the deposed emperor of Ethiopia, arrived in tears and sadness, though he was given an ovation by the cheering thousands that had seldom been accorded to visitors to England. Many of the Londoners carried Ethiopian flags or scarlet banners reading "Welcome to the Emperor." With the white sympathizers were many African chiefs in native robes, Somalis, negroes, Hindus, Chinese, and colored people from all parts of the world.

There was an outburst of wild cheering when Selassie, bareheaded and wearing a long black cape, stepped from his private sleeping car and was greeted by many notables, including O. C. Harvey, private secretary of Anthony Eden, British foreign secretary. Harvey was the lone representative of the British government.

JUST as the "popular front" in France was taking over the government the country was distracted by strikes that spread rapidly to almost all industrial centers and involved all manner of trades. The workers demanded higher wages, a 40-hour week and a closed shop, and they went out by the hundred thousand though they knew they were causing great embarrassment to their own leaders. In many cases the strikers took possession of the closed plants.

In Spain the syndicalists tied up various industries by strikes that involved about 250,000 workers and that were marked by several murders and other outrages. Augusto Barcia, minister of state, said the government planned to outlaw the syndicalists if they persisted in disobeying orders from the ministries of labor and the interior.

J. H. THOMAS, until recently British colonial secretary, was found responsible by a special government tribunal for the leak in budget secrets which enabled some of his friends to profit largely through insurance against tax raises. Final disposition of the case was left to the house of commons. Thomas, once an engine wiper and later a powerful figure in organized labor and politics, termed the tribune's verdict "cruel." He said: "My own conscience is clear. I repeat what I previously stated upon oath: that I made no disclosures of budget secrets to anybody."

RURAL housewives from many countries began their third triennial conference in Washington with Mrs. Alfred Watt of Canada presiding. Their first meeting was held in 1930 in Vienna, and the second in Stockholm three years later. Secretaries Hull and Wallace and Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, wife of the President, extended greetings to the visitors, but beyond that there were no set speeches and little formality. Instead, the farm wives held "exchange of experience" sessions, viewed elaborate exhibits of rural needlework and crafts of organized countrywomen of the participating nations, and attended "open houses" held by all branches of the federal government in which countrywomen are particularly interested.

Mrs. Alfred Watt

Australian countrywomen maintain seaside homes for convalescents. Canada's Federated Women's institute promotes clubs for rural youth and combats maternal and infant mortality.

By conducting evening classes for young girls Danish countrywomen have helped to check their migration to town to seek factory work.

IN A report just made public the business advisory council proposes a simplified basis for industrial self-regulation through the medium of voluntary joint agreements on unfair trade practices enforceable by the federal trade commission. The report was prepared by the council's committee on unfair trade practices of which Lincoln Filene of Boston is chairman.

Outstanding among the committee's proposals were suggestions that each branch of an industry, such as wholesale, retail, and manufacturing, police the activities of each other through confidential reports to the federal trade commission and that no attempt be made to include trade practice and labor provisions in the same agreements.

THE so-called industrial mobilization plan of the War department, providing for a military dictatorship over labor, capital and industry, as well as censorship of the press in wartime, was severely condemned in a report to the senate by the munitions committee.

THE senate by a vote of 62 to 14 passed the deficiency bill carrying $2,375,000,000, of which sum $1,425,000,000 is handed to the President to spend as he pleases for "relief and work relief." As passed by the house, the measure turned the entire amount of relief money over to WPA Administrator Harry Hopkins.

By a senate amendment, the bill authorizes the President to order a restudy of reports on the $200,000,000 Florida ship canal and allocate another $10,000,000 to carry on work upon it during the coming fiscal year.

Efforts to do anything for the Passamaquoddy tidal project in Maine had proved unavailing.

NEW YORK state's law providing minimum wages for women and minors was declared unconstitutional by the United States Supreme court on the ground that it conflicts with the fourteenth amendment by violating freedom of contract. The decision, written by Justice Butler, was concurred in by Justices Van Devanter, McReynolds, Sutherland and Roberts. Chief Justice Hughes and Justices Stone, Brandeis and Cardozo dissented. A number of other states have statutes similar to the one thus held invalid.

CATHOLICS the world over celebrated the seventy-ninth birthday of Pope Pius XI, and the pontiff himself marked the day by attending a solemn mass in St. Peter's in the presence of 40,000 pilgrims who went to Rome especially for the occasion. These were mainly members of the Catholic Action organization which Pius XI founded, and to them he spoke for nearly an hour. He denounced communism, as he has done on other occasions, and declared the Catholic press was one of the best forces in combating the communists.

Pope Pius XI

It was evident to all observers the pope's age is beginning to tell on him and that he found the long ceremony very much of a strain.

NINE of the richest unions in the American Federation of Labor, having more than a million members, probably will be suspended soon by the federation's executive council, and at the next convention they will be expelled if the council can command the necessary two-thirds majority. Thus will come to a crisis the internecine contest between the craft unionists led by President William Green and the industrial unionists who follow John L. Lewis, head of the United Mine Workers.

Green wants to continue to organize industry by skilled groups while Lewis would seek to unite all workers, skilled and unskilled, by industries into one big union.

The craft unionists, it was learned, intend to suspend the charters of the nine industrial unions at the July executive council session, a power granted the council under the A. F. of L. constitution.

Lewis' group of unions includes 400,000 miners, Sidney Hillman's Amalgamated Clothing Workers, David Dubinsky's International Ladies' Garment union, the oil workers, typographers, flat glass workers, hat, cap, and millinery workers, mine, mill, and smelter workers, and textile workers.

THERE was every reason to believe that Japan had found, or manufactured, excuses for further encroachments in northern China, and that serious conflict between the two nations would ensue unless China were submissive. The Japanese alleged that a bridge on the railway line between Tangku and Tientsin was destroyed and that there was an attempt to wreck a troop train. The highest Japanese officers in North China were summoned to a conference in Tientsin.

Yakichiro Suma, Japanese consul general in Nanking, declared publicly that China must choose either "mutual interdependence with Japan or war with Japan," and he said he had informed Generalissimo Kai-shek, Chinese dictator, of this viewpoint. "Japan has gone too far to retreat now and must advance straight ahead with immutable convictions," Suma said.

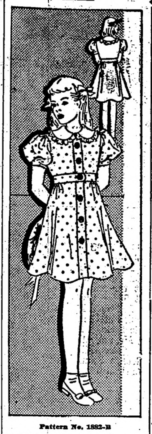
1. Privilege of building railroads, military and civilian air bases and army barracks.
2. Establishment of regular air service between China and Japan.
3. An economic, political and military position for Japan in China.

STEWART McDONALD, federal housing administrator, outlined to newspaper men a new program which provides for the construction of "garden homes" outside of large cities that will aid in the gradual movement of industrial workers from urban and suburban areas to small plots several miles out in the country. He said President Roosevelt was enthusiastic over the plan.

Emphasizing that "this is not anything in the way of a benevolent proposition" and that no grants of federal funds were involved, Mr. McDonald said it would be accomplished through a broadening of FHA regulations to permit government insurance of mortgages on such property. This will enable bankers and other leaders to advance funds for the development of these "in between" areas for residential purposes.

Gay Cotton Print Dress Easy to Make and Sure to Please Sprightly Maiden



Pattern No. 1882-B

The time for gay little cotton prints both for older sister and the younger set is at hand, and nothing could be simpler than this darling dress—so easy to make—so comfortable for nimble dears—and so smart to wear.

The French bodice effect and buttoned panel are cunning details which all little maidens love, especially the flared skirt, because it provides ample freedom for playtime. Decorative features are hidden in the contrasting collar trimmed with ruffled edging, and brief puff sleeves. The material may be a printed percale, lawn linen or gingham. If it is made in a plaid or checked gingham, you can omit the ruffled edging from the collar and make the collar of plain white pique.

Barbara Bell Pattern No. 1882-B is available in sizes 2, 4, 6, 8, and 10. Size 4 requires 1⅞ yards of 35 inch material plus ½ yard for contrast. Send 15 cents for the pattern.

All Around the House

For the picnic lunch basket, roll out baking powder biscuit dough about one-quarter-inch thick, cut with biscuit cutter, spread thickly with deviled ham, roll up and bake.

• • •

If table silver is placed in hot soapsuds immediately after being used, and dried, with a soft, clean cloth, much of the work of polishing will be saved.

• • •

Purchase seldom used spices in small packages, as it is more economical since spices lose some of their flavor when exposed to the air.

• • •

To prevent lilac suckers growing up around your lilac bush, cut a circular piece of linoleum about two feet wide, cut hole in middle for bush, slit linoleum from edge to center hole and place around bush.

• • •

To make radish roses, trim down to an inch of the stem. Cut off root, then cut down from the tip so that the red part of radish stands out like petals. Put in ice water for an hour or two and petals will curl up.

• • •

Powdered borax added to the water when washing fine white flannel, helps to keep them soft.

Heat a lemon thoroughly before squeezing and you will obtain nearly double the quantity of juice.

A teaspoonful of baking powder added to potatoes while they are being mashed, will make them light and fluffy.

Most of Warships Sunk at Scapa Flow Salvaged

Nearly all the German ships which were sunk by their crews at Scapa Flow after their surrender to the British have been salvaged and their metal parts disposed of. Some of the steel was used for rails; some went to motor car manufacturers. The steel in the armor plate and the big guns went to tool makers.

Some of it even went back to Germany. Reports from abroad state that nothing was thrown away.

25 Years Ago

Mr. and Mrs. George Hughes shipped their household goods to Ft. Francis where they decided to make their future home.

The Great Northern was preparing to partly roof the local stock yard, and to install new feed racks.

After being idle all spring, the sawmill at Thief River Falls was to commence sawing the following week.

Much experimenting was being done with "split-log" drags in effort to improve roads for automobiles which were then just coming into use in this section.

Ed. Peterson returned home after a short stay at Ft. Francis. He was not much impressed with either mill work or living conditions in the border town.

Altho other attractions the same evening may have served to cut the attendance somewhat, many local people attended the recital given at the school last Saturday evening under direction of Miss Maria Erdmann. All who attended were very well pleased with the program, as well as the progress made by the pupils under able direction of Miss Erdmann.

Stanley Olsen, who is superintendent of the village school at Judson, N. D., motored here last Thursday for a visit with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Olsen.

LIGHT VOTE CAST IN PRIMARY ELECTION

Reports from thruout the state indicates voters of Minnesota do not take primary elections very seriously. In only a small number of precincts was anywhere near the normal vote cast that is usual in a general election. St. Hilaire did better than most of the surrounding townships in polling 130 out of a possible 160 votes. Of this number 44 were Farmer-Labor, 51 were Republican and 22 were Democratic ballots.

All favored candidates on the three major tickets have apparently won out on face of unofficial state-wide returns. Theodore Christianson will be Republican candidate for U. S. Senator, Floyd B. Olson and Patrick Delaney will be Farmer-Labor and Democratic candidates, respectively, for the same position. For Governor the lineup will be Elmer Benson, F.-L.; Martin Nelson, Rep., and Fred A. Curtis appears to be leading as Democratic candidate.

MOVING WEEK IN THIS VILLAGE

Last week witnessed a number of changes of residence by people in the village. The Borgen Players moved from the H. F. Hanson house to the Bilden residence. Mr. and Mrs. H. F. Hanson, who had occupied the Hans Wilson place since last fall, returned to their own home. Mr. and Mrs. Hesse of Plummer took possession of the Hans Wilson property which they recently purchased. Mrs. C. Holloway of Thief River moved into the former Hage house now owned by Emil Just, and a family named Peterson of Valley City, N. D., moved into the John A. Hansen house on Railway avenue. An Everson family from North Dakota moved into the former Norander house in the Addition, and Mart McAndress, who had occupied that place, moved into new quarters in the Mrs. W. A. Case home east of the Ben Lardy home.

WIN OVER GARNES

The St. Hilaire baseball club annexed its third straight victory when it defeated Garnes in a rather one-sided game played at Garnes last Sunday. Bill Hallamack on the mound for St. Hilaire, allowed very few hits and was given fine support by his team mates. The final score was 15 to 2 in favor of St. Hilaire.

LOCAL TEAM GOES TO OKLEE SUNDAY

In its fourth scheduled game for this season in the Northern Minnesota League, the St. Hilaire club goes to Oklee next Sunday. With three straight victories to their credit, the local boys hope "Lady Luck" will be with them again when they meet the fast Oklee aggregation. Oklee has always had good ball teams. Some of the players on that team this year are veterans of many seasons' experience, so the local men do not anticipate any easy victory next Sunday. Nothing helps so much in winning a ball game as a good following of rooters, and the team hopes to have a good representation along for the Oklee game.

LEADERS MET YESTERDAY

Leaders of the different Home Management groups in this community, met here yesterday afternoon to receive instructions to be imparted later to members of their respective groups.

BONUS BONDS COME TO VETERANS HERE

First shipment of bonus bonds for ex-servicemen in this village and vicinity arrived at the local postoffice Monday morning, and another lot arrived Tuesday. A few of the ex-servicemen have not made application as yet, and their bonds will come later. In most cases, the bonds are being converted into cash with which to meet immediate or pressing demands. It is estimated that $25,000 or more in bonds will be distributed in this locality.

Tales About Town

Happenings of the Week, Told in Brief. News Concerning People You Know

Lars Vik returned Saturday after visiting a few days at the home of his sister at Minneapolis.

Another little shower of rain fell here Tuesday night. Cool weather has since prevailed which is ideal for growing crops.

Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Helgoe motored here Saturday from Hillsboro, N. D., and spent until Monday visiting at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Otto Johnson and with other friends.

Mr. and Mrs. Myles Jackson and daughter, Patty, accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. H. O. Jackson motored Sunday to Bagley and spent the day at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Sam Hauge.

Mr. and Mrs. Arne Vik returned Thursday after visiting at the home of their daughter, Mrs. Carlson, at Minneapolis. They also visited at Duluth, and at the home of his brother at Virginia while away.

Postponed meeting of the local school board is to be held at the school building this evening. Among other matters to be taken up is that of considering bids for bus service for the coming school year.

Mr. and Mrs. Emil Just, accompanied by their daughter, Mrs. Henry Stensrude of Thief River Falls, and by Esther Evensizer of Cando, N. D., a grand niece of Mrs. Just, motored Sunday to Grafton, N. D., and returned home that evening.

Ray Lindquist motored up Saturday from Minneapolis for a short visit at the home of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Lindquist. Upon returning home the following day, he was accompanied by his sister, Mrs. W. Strouts and son who returned to their home at St. Paul after a visit here.

Miss Lilly M. Johnson left Sunday evening for Seattle, Wash., to visit briefly with friends before attending summer sessions at the University of Washington. Following her term at school, she will visit friends, and places of interest in the west before returning home.

Harvey Olsen, who is employed at Chicago, arrived here Tuesday for a visit with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Henry A. Olsen, and other relatives. Mrs. Harvey Olsen accompanied him to Hendrum and stopped there to spend a few days with relatives. She is expected to join Mr. Olsen here the latter part of this week.

Supt. and Mrs. M. A. Graham and daughter returned today after spending a few days with relatives at Bertha and Wells, Minn.

Rev. and Mrs. H. A. Larson and family are expected home the latter part of this week after a visit with relatives at Minneapolis.

Mr. and Mrs. Adolph Satterberg motored Saturday to Litchville, N. D., for a visit with relatives. They returned Sunday evening.

Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Christensen, accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Fred Biskey motored Monday to Lake Winnibigoshish north of Deer River to spend two or three days fishing.

A large group of friends from this village and surrounding territory motored Tuesday evening to the Felix Anderson farm and greeted the newlyweds, Mr. and Mrs. Ferdie Anderson, by a rousing charivari.

Mr. and Mrs. Phil Anderson and family are planning to leave the latter part of this week to make their future home at Joliet, Ill. Many friends in the community join in wishing them a pleasant trip.

Mrs. Agnes Obert of Grand Forks, and her sister, Mrs. Carl Thorson of York, N. D., were guests at the Emil Just home here last Monday while others who had accompanied them, attended to business matters at Thief River Falls.

George Biskey, Sr., was taken ill again this week and went to the hospital at Thief River Falls for treatment. This climate does not agree with him after his sojourn in Colorado, and he intends to return to that state or Arizona as soon as he is able to travel.

TENT MEETINGS, JUNE 23-28

The Lutheran Tent Mission will conduct a series of meetings in St. Hilaire starting next Tuesday and continuing up to and including Sunday, June 28. Dr. A. W. Edwins, pioneer missionary of the Augustana Synod in China, will be the speaker at these meetings to which all are welcome.

PENSION CHECKS ISSUED

After being held up since the first of the month because of non-arrival of reimbursement funds from the state, old-age pension checks were mailed out Saturday by county officials. While the delay caused some apprehension among those entitled to receive the checks, this will be offset by the fact that next checks will be out in a little over two weeks, that is if state money comes thru on time.

EDNA ALMQUIST WEDS C. CARLSON

Last Saturday evening, at the home of her aunt, Mrs. Esther Benson at East Grand Forks, occurred the marriage of Miss Edna Almquist, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. Almquist of this village, to Mr. Clarence J. Carlson of East Grand Forks.

The room was prettily decorated for the occasion, and after the ceremony a wedding dinner was served to close relatives of the bride and groom. The young couple left the same day for a wedding trip to Yellowstone National Park. Upon return they will reside at East Grand Forks. Miss Almquist grew to womanhood in this community and was graduated from the local high school with the class of 1930. Friends in this community join in extending felecitations to Mr. and Mrs. Carlson, and in wishing them lifelong happiness.

NORMA ANDERSON, H. THELEN WED

On Friday, June fifth, at a quiet wedding ceremony at the bishop's home in Crookston, Miss Norma Elaine Anderson, daughter of Mr. Theodore G. Anderson, became the bride of Henry M. Thelen, son of Mrs. M. Thelen of Frazee. Rev. Fr. Keefe officiated in the presence of Maurice Jasper, cousin of the bride, and Pearl Doda, both of Crookston.

The bride wore a yellow knit sport dress with white accessories while her attendant wore a blue sport dress with matching accessories.

Mrs. Thelen is well known in this community, having attended school in Thief River Falls, graduating with the class of 1935. Mr. Thelen attended schools at Frazee, and is now employed by the Fort Peck Dam Construction Company in Montana. Friends here join in extending best wishes.

PLUMMER BEATS GOODRIDGE

The Plummer baseball team was victorious last Sunday in its game with the Goodridge aggregation, the final score being 10 to 5. A large crowd witnessed the game.

BLACK RIVER MAN MARRIED JUNE 10

Ferdie Anderson, son of Felix Anderson of Black River was united in marriage to Miss Margaret Sandberg, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Victor Sandberg, formerly of this community, on Wednesday, June 10th. The ceremony took place at the home of the bride's parents at Cornation, Alberta, Canada. There were twenty-six guests at the wedding, including Mrs. Clarence Hallstrom and Harold Hallstrom, who accompanied Mr. Anderson to Canada about two weeks ago. On the return trip here, the party went by way of Calgary, then south for a visit to Glacier National Park; stopped for a short time at Nashua, Mont., for a visit at the home of Tudy Brink, cousin of Mr. Anderson and Mrs. Hallstrom, then thru North Dakota on the way home. Mr. and Mrs. Anderson will make their home with his father on his farm west of town. Friends thruout the community will join in wishing Mr. and Mrs. Anderson lifelong happiness.

"The Ghost of San Vito"

By FLOYD GIBBONS

Famous Headline Hunter.

YOU know, boys and girls, for a long time I've been telling the world that truth is stranger than fiction, and now here comes Aurelius Menegus of Clifton, N. J., to agree with me. He had an adventure once and—well—he admits it's so fantastic that he has to pinch himself every once in a while in order to believe it could have actually happened to him.

I warn you right at the start that this is a ghost story. One of the best ghost stories I ever heard, at that. It happened to Aurelius on June 8, 1930, but the beginnings of the yarn go back farther than that, to take in the history of a room—a simple bed-chamber in a little mountain tavern near San Vito in the Italian Alps.

The story of that room was this: A year or so before, the curator of an Italian zoo stopped there with his wife. He had with him a collection of reptiles which he had caught in the mountains and one of them—a venomous snake—had bitten his wife to death. Thereafter, that room was hoodooed. Four tourists died in it, and all of them had been found with terrible expressions of horror and surprise on their faces.

The doctors who examined the victims said they had died of fright. No one in San Vito had the slightest doubt as to what had caused that fright. The ghost of the curator's dead wife haunted the room—so they said. And a terrible ghost she must be, to cause people to die from the sight of her.

Aurelius Goes Calling on the Spook.

That's the history of the room. Now let's turn the clock ahead a year or so to June 16, 1930, and get on with the story of Aurelius Menegus. He was more than a little interested in that ghost yarn, for he was something of an amateur zoologist and taxidermist himself.

So, finding himself in the neighborhood of San Vito, he determined to spend the night in that mountain inn—if possible in the very room where five people had died. He wasn't superstitious, and he certainly wasn't going to be frightened by what he considered an idle peasant's tale.

He asked for the room and got it. He had with him five white rats which he kept for experimental purposes, and these he put in the room. Then, after feeding the rats and getting a bite of supper himself, he prepared to go to bed.

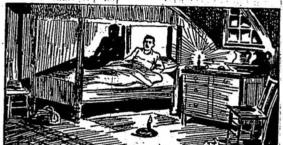
The room was a small one in the attic of the inn. It was lighted by candle and furnished with a small canopied bed, washstand and a few chairs. There was a small grating in the floor—evidently part of the ventilating or heating system.



A Three-Foot Snake Was Coiled on the Floor.

Aurelius let his white rats out of the perforated valise in which he carried them, to let them run free for the night. Then he slipped on his pajamas, blew out the candle on the chair beside his bed, and crawled under the covers. He was tired, and in a few moments he was asleep. But he wasn't destined to sleep long, for the ghost of the attic room was to come back to haunt him.

Aurelius had been asleep for half an hour, when suddenly he was awakened by a strident squealing. The squealing, he recognized, was coming from the white rats, which were scampering madly about the room.

Specter Turns Out to Be a Venomous Adder.

Aurelius began to feel the hair on his head rising. Some people say that an animal is conscious of supernatural things long before humans are. What did those rats see that was throwing them into such a panic?

He sat up in bed, lit a match and applied it to the candle. The dim yellow glow lit the room, but showed no presence other than his own. He was about to get out of bed and search the dark corners where the candle's rays didn't penetrate, when suddenly, he stopped, pulled his feet back into the bed again. There on the floor was a three-foot snake!

Aurelius knew enough about snakes to recognize this one. It was an Alpine adder—a deadly reptile that strikes with the swiftness of lightning and injects a venom that kills its victims almost instantly. That was the answer to the mystery of the haunted room. The snake which had killed the curator's wife had never been recaptured.

It had crawled away down the ventilator and had been living there ever since, killing the people who happened to be lodged in that room. A simple enough explanation. But Aurelius' plight was a bit more complicated.

"I didn't dare move," he says, "for fear of the adder which would spring at the slightest stir. I wondered if the reptile would take a notion to crawl up on the bed. If he did, there wasn't much hope for me. But no. The adder wasn't interested in me. He was attracted by the possibility of a meal from those squealing rats of mine. It turned to stalk one of them, and at that moment, the door of my chamber opened and the landlord, Giovanni Floriani came in."

Aurelius started to shout a warning, but it wasn't necessary. The old landlord had heard the rats squealing and scampering about overhead and, knowing the reputation of the room, had come prepared for any eventuality. He had a double-barreled shot gun in his hand and he fired point blank. The reptile's head was blown to pieces, and the white rats gathered round the body and began completing the destruction. The murdering ghost of San Vito wound up by furnishing a meal for some of its intended victims.

175 Medieval "Monsters" Left in French Flanders

A recent census in France reveals that there are 175 medieval monsters existing in French Flanders today, writes a Lille (France) United Press correspondent.

They are the world's biggest toys, averaging 22 feet in height and are one to five centuries old. The Flemish populations of France have been amusing themselves with these monstrous playthings since the Fifteenth century. The municipal councils provide communal shelter for these wood, cardboard and cloth giants which emerge once a year to preside at the town festivals and carnivals.

Gargantua, the historic brain child of Rabelais, resides at Bailleul and receives the homage of his subjects on Mardi Gras. Calais, the seaport town, is ruled by two gigantic sailors, each 20 feet tall, while Bergues has its own individual citizen named Berguemard, a giant of 1830 who wears a stove-pipe hat that is five feet high.

Goliath is at Ath, a village of French Flanders. Mrs. Goliath lives with him and their sole exercise is their annual and hilarious promenade through the streets of Ath.

The most socially prominent of the group is Gayang who has lived in Douai for 407 years. Dating from medieval times, he is fittingly outfitted with a shield and lance and is brought out every July 6, to repulse an imaginary invader.

He is followed by Mrs. Gayang, who dresses as a lady of the Renaissance period, and then come their three children, Jacquot, Filliot and Binbin. There is even a royal jester of colossal dimensions who accompanies the parade. Gayang has still another advantage over other Flemish giants as he has his own "national anthem," which is sung with fervor each year as he is paraded through the streets of historic Douai.

"Swell music, isn't it?" Floyd and his partner stepped and dipped in time to it.

Anne smiled dreamily.

"Say, you know, you're not such a bad dancer." Floyd's tone was a little magnanimous.

"Oh, how kind you are!" He failed to catch the hint of sarcasm in Anne's voice and answered:

"No kiddin'. You are! I'm glad to find someone I can really dance with."

Her murmured "You overwhelm me," encouraged him to greater heights of eloquence.

Then she laughed. "Were all the girls in your old high school good dancers, and good lookers?"

Later on they wandered out to the tennis courts. School grounds have a way of looking very different in the moonlight from their usual daytime appearance, and the sight of them went to Floyd's head. He kissed Anne.

"Why," she said, "you kiss like all the boys. Don't they do it any differently in your other high school?"

He laughed indulgently. "Look here, Anne. I like you better than any other girl in the school. Will you go with me steady?"

Anne was still for a little while. Then she said:

"I'll have to think about, Floyd."

"What?" he asked in surprise. "You'll have to—well, all right!"

"Uh huh. It's mine," said Floyd as he fumbled in the pocket for the cigarettes.

"My!" Anne sighed. "You must have plenty of money to have a car of your own. What does your father do?"

"Why, he's a—well, a corporation lawyer that looks after the interests of a chain of grocery stores. I'm going to be a lawyer when I finish school. There's lots of money in it."

At the close of the dance, Anne agreed to let Floyd take her home, rather reluctantly, to the young man's bewilderment. They dodged among the cars that were scuttling back and forth like trapped crabs, in search of Floyd's car. They came upon the place where the car should have been, and stopped. A dilapidated delivery truck stood in its place.

"Why, whatever has become of your car?" asked Anne. Then she saw the misery in his very pose. He was staring at the car, dropping, all his cockiness gone. On the body of the car was written his father's name, over the word "Groceries."

A note lay on the front seat. Floyd read it through. Then he crumpled it up and threw it away. But he picked it up again, smoothed it and handed it to Anne. She read, by the light of the head lights, as he had done:

"Mother and I have decided to go to a show. So I got the car and left the truck for you. Dad."

A painfully long silence followed. Then a miserable, "I can't take you home in this thing!"

"I don't mind. Truly!" At least she wasn't laughing. Then she said:

"So that wasn't your car?"

"No."

"And this is your father's business?"

"Yes."

Then he faced her. "I don't know why I lied like that, Anne."

But her face glowed in the moonlight.

"I do," she said softly. She put her head on his arm. "I like you better this way, Floyd. "I'll go—with you—steady."

"Aw gee—you're sweet!"

Indians in Michigan

The principal Indian tribes in Michigan were the Ottawas, Chippewas, Miamis, Hurons, Pottawatomies, Wyondottes and Menominees. According to a state gazeteer of 1839, nearly half of these were in the Upper peninsula, including the Chippewas, Ottawas and Menominees. Lanman's History of Michigan, published in 1839, lists the Indian population, with the residence and estimated population. Chippewas are listed in the valley of the Saginaw, Thunder Bay, Grand Traverse Bay, the shores of Lake Superior, Beaver and Drummond islands, the Soo, Black river, and Swan creek in St. Clair and Macomb counties, etc.; Ottawas in the Grand River valley, Little Traverse bay, east coast of Lake Michigan, etc.; some Wyandottes are listed in Monroe county; Menominees in the Green Bay district and Pottawatomies on the east coast of Lake Michigan. Soon after the founding of Detroit, villages of the Hurons, Ottawas, Miamis, Wyandottes and Pottawatomies were established in this neighborhood.

Conan Doyle on Dogs

Conan Doyle once wrote: "My line of thought about dogs is analogous. A dog reflects the family life. Whoever saw a frisky dog in a gloomy family, or a sad dog in a happy one? Snarling people have snarling dogs, dangerous people dangerous ones. And their passing mood may reflect the moods of others."

HAWAII EAGER TO BECOME 49th STATE

Majority of Island People Favor Statehood; Hawaii Contributes Liberally to Support of Federal Government, Yet Congress Withholds Favorable Action.

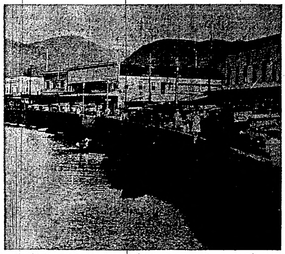
By WRIGHT A. PATTERSON

YAP is a loyal American citizen who lives in Honolulu. He went to American schools. He talks, thinks and acts American. But there is one American privilege he does not have, and he wants it—he wants to vote for a president of the United States. That is Yap's reason for wanting Hawaii admitted as the forty-ninth state.

Vernon C. Yap was born in the islands of Chinese parentage. His father and mother were small farmers on the island of Molokai. He has a Chinese wife and one son. His home is a small and unpretentious cottage, but typically American in furnishings and cleanliness. Yap is typical of a very large percentage of the second and third generation of the orientals in the islands, all of whom want to vote for a president of the United States.

I went to the islands to ascertain whether or not the people of Hawaii desired statehood. A sub-committee of congress had done the same thing. The members of the committee had held sessions in Honolulu and listened to statements made by 105 residents who wished to appear, of whom 90 advocated statehood.

In its report the committee stated that a "comfortable majority of the people of the islands favor statehood," that the territorial legislature since 1903 had repeatedly passed resolutions favoring statehood, and other reasons that seemed to favor admission of the islands as a state. But the committee voted five to three against the statehood bill then before congress I wanted to know why.



Oriental quarter of Honolulu, where Chinese and Japanese stores thrive and the fish markets clamor with activity.

Americanization Needed.

I talked to many people representing all classes and all races. Mr. Lorin Thurston, publisher of the Daily Advertiser, does not believe the islands are ready for statehood at this time, but will be when the orientals are thoroughly Americanized and when the dual standards of wages, of hours and of living have been overcome. He believes these will be accomplished within a few years.

Mr. Joseph Farrington, publisher of the Daily Star-Bulletin, is insistent that congress grant statehood now. Under the present territorial status he feels congress can at any time legislate the islands out of business by restricting or prohibiting exports to the American mainland, as was done in the case of sugar.

He said: "We have the population. We are a loyal people. We have the wealth and industry. We pay liberally toward the support of the federal government, and as a loyal people and taxpayers we have a right to representation."

A prominent native woman, who does not wish to be named, agrees with Mr. Thurston. She fears Japanese domination and Japanese control of state offices.

Doctor Dean, former president of the University of Hawaii, and Mr. Atherton, representing the industrial interests, are as insistent upon statehood as is Mr. Farrington.

Yap lives in a modest but comfortable cottage of five rooms. His small boy has shoes, but he wears them only on stated occasions and then under protest. Earl Thacker, one of the islands' prominent citizens, lives in a beautiful home in the Diamond Head district. His children have shoes, but they are worn only on stated occasions, and then under protest. The children of these two families typify social conditions in the islands. Children of such families attend the same schools, play the same games, compete in the same contests, without any regard to racial distinction.

Take Politics Seriously.

In a social, political or cultural way there is no race problem in Hawaii.

The island people, whether they be "haolis" (whites), orientals, Polynesians or native Hawaiians, take their politics seriously. But in politics there are no racial blocs. There are not more than 25 negroes in the islands, but a negro was elected to the island legislature. By far the largest single racial group are the Japanese, but never more than three Japs have been members of the legislature at any one time.

The Democratic national committeeman from the islands, and the present postmaster, John Wilson, is a mixture of Polynesian, Hawaiian and Scotch Irish. He served as mayor of Honolulu for nine years and is an ardent advocate of statehood as a matter of justice for the island people, believing they can better regulate their internal affairs than congress can do the job for them.

The professor, who rates as probably the top in higher mathematics at the University of Hawaii, is a Chinese woman. Teachers of all races are to be found in all of the school grades.

Japs Maintain Schools.

The one possible fly-in-the-ointment is the Japanese language schools. They are maintained by the elder Japs, those born in Japan. To these schools go the Japanese children before or after regular school hours. Here Japanese teachers teach the Japanese language, Japanese history and Japanese customs and culture.

The attendance at these schools is diminishing rather rapidly with the diminishing population of alien Japanese. In 1920 the total population of Jap aliens was 56,273. By 1930 the figure had dropped to 47,781, a decrease of nearly 1,000 a year, and the annual decrease grows larger each year. Without the influence of the elder Japs the language schools could not continue.

There has been no Japanese immigration since 1900 and it will be but a few years when all the Japanese born will have passed away and with them will pass the Japanese language schools.

The business of Hawaii is agriculture, confined to three commercial crops so far as exports are concerned. They are sugar, pineapples and coffee. For local consumption there are truck gardening, dairying and live stock raising.

Sugar and pineapples demand large scale operations. They are produced on big plantations of many thousands of acres on each of which you find villages peopled by plantation employees, good schools, churches, a hospital, recreation and playground centers, plantation stores, and always the big sugar mill.

Steady Work for All.

In the fields you find Japanese and Filipino workers. Whites and native Hawaiians work in the sugar fields. Chinese serve as clerks in offices.

Help on the plantations is well paid. The work of cultivating, cutting and loading sugar cane is done largely on a piece basis by the Japanese and Filipinos and their average earnings run around $90 a month, to which is added free house rent in comfortable homes, free fuel, cut to stove lengths for cooking, free medical, hospital and nursing services. The lowest flat wage paid to anyone is $1 a day, to which is added the free rent and all the free services.

There is no such thing as seasonal labor. Every employee is encouraged to work six days of each week and 52 weeks each year if he will. In fact, a bonus of 10 per cent is paid to those who work as many as 23 days in a month.

Workers in the sugar mills, most of them white or native Hawaiians, average better than $100 per month, and they too receive free rent and other free services, excepting only those who get $150 a month or more, who are charged a small hospital fee only.

The islands have a total population of some 384,000 people. Of that number in 1930, 61,445 were foreign born aliens. The population is larger than that found in ten of the present 48 states of the Union.

The islands pay more taxes into the federal treasury than 16 states and they pay their own governmental expense, except for the salaries of the governor and the members of the legislature.

Hawaiian Status Unique.

In Hawaii you never hear a reference to "the states" or to "the United States." To the people there it is "the mainland" and "the islands." The people insist on their place as a part of the United States. They resent being considered a foreign country, and especially resent such a reference when made in the halls of congress by congressmen, as has happened on several occasions.

The people insist the islands are not a stepchild as was the case with the Philippines and is the case with Puerto Rico. The islands are not a possession of the United States, but have a territorial status and as such are just as much a part of the United States as is any state.

They are not a conquered people. They sought annexation and did so at a time, in 1898, when the islands represented tremendous value as a naval base. The people tell you they could have been admitted as a state instead of a territory at that time, but the leaders of that time did not believe conditions then existing made statehood desirable.

Conditions, they say, have radically changed in 40 years and today they are asking that the status of the islands be changed from that of a territory to that of the forty-ninth state.

Right to Statehood Cited.

To demonstrate the right of the islands to statehood the people will quote you many figures. They will tell you the islands buy mainland products to the extent of more than $70,000,000 annually; that there is in the island property values of $385,565,812; that there are shipped to the mainland from the islands products valued at over $90,000,000 annually.

They will add that the islands have 184 excellent public schools employing 2,674 teachers and enrolling 83,319 students; that with all of the mixture of races there is only 15 per cent of illiteracy; that from 1900 to 1936 the population has grown from 154,000 to 384,000; that the people of the islands own and drive more than 50,000 automobiles; that Honolulu is one of the great ocean ports of the Pacific, with close to 1,300 ships of more than 1,500,000 tonnage, arriving and departing each year.

From such investigations as I was able to make, I would say that between 75 and 85 per cent of the people want statehood and an opportunity to vote for a President, but I did not discover why the congressional comittee voted against admitting Hawaii as the forty-ninth state, unless it was the reason assigned by people in the islands—politics.

WORLD FAMOUS DRIVERS KNOW ONLY ONE TIRE IS Safe!

THE MASTERPIECE OF TIRE CONSTRUCTION

Firestone GUM-DIPPED TIRES WIN INDIANAPOLIS 500 MILE RACE

On May 30th, Louis Meyer broke the track record, at 109 miles per hour, driving the entire race without tire trouble of any kind. He is the only driver ever to win the race three times, and has always used Firestone Tires. No tires except Firestone Gum-Dipped Tires could have resisted the terrific heat generated at such high sustained speeds. You can have no greater proof of blowout protection.

Not one of the thirty-three drivers would risk his life on any other tire, for each driver knows that heat is the chief cause of tire failure and blowouts. Firestone cords are soaked in liquid rubber, which saturates and coats every cotton fiber, preventing friction and heat and adding great strength. This is the Firestone patented process of Gum-Dipping, that gives you greatest blowout protection and safety.

Profit by the experience of famous drivers. See your nearest Firestone Auto Supply and Service Store or Firestone Dealer, and have your car equipped today with Firestone Gum-Dipped Tires.

Bedtime Story for Children

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

BILLY MINK FINDS SOME QUEER FENCES

When something new and strange you find,
Watch out! To danger be not blind.

THE trouble with a great many people is that they are heedless. When they find something new and strange they forget everything but their curiosity. Because of this they walk right straight into trouble. It happens over and over again.

But Billy Mink isn't this kind of a person. My, my, I should say not! He never has been. If he had he would have lost that beautiful brown coat of his long ago, and there would be no Billy Mink. Billy has his share of curiosity, but with it he possesses a great big bump of suspicion. When he finds anything new and strange he wants to learn all about it. But right away he is suspicious of it.

When Billy Came to This Place He Discovered Something Queer.

After he had discovered the trap set for him at the entrance to one of his favorite holes in the Laughing Brook and had fooled the trapper by getting the fish the trapper had placed in that hole, Billy went on up the Laughing Brook to see what else he could discover. Not very far above that place there was a steep bank on each side of the Laughing Brook. Along the foot of each bank was a narrow strip of level ground between the bank and the water. You see, at this season of the year the water in the Laughing Brook was low.

When Billy came to this place he discovered something queer. It was a little fence. It ran from the foot of the bank straight out into the Laughing Brook to where the water became deep. Midway in this little fence was a gateway just big enough to slip through comfortably. Billy looked across to the other side of the Laughing Brook. Over there was another little fence just like this one, and that little fence had an opening in it.

"Huh!" said Billy. "Huh! Those fences are something new. They were not here when I came down the Laughing Brook yesterday. I wonder what they are for. If it were not for those two little openings I would have to either climb the bank or swim around the ends of those fences, and that would be bothersome. I can go through that little opening there as easy as rolling off a log, but I'm not going to do it. No, sir, I'm not going to do it. There is something wrong about those fences. They look to me as if they had been built just to make me go through one of those little gateways. If that's the case, I'm not going to do it."

So Billy plunged into the Laughing Brook and swam out in the deep water around the end of the little fence. Then very carefully he approached the little opening from that side. The more he looked at it, the less he liked it. Right in the middle of that little opening were some wet dead leaves. "Ha, ha!" said Billy. "Another trap!"

MOTHER'S COOK BOOK

SECRETS OF GOOD FROSTINGS

Boiled Frosting.

Boil together two cups of sugar, two tablespoons of light corn sirup and one-half cup of water until the sirup spins a thread. Pour it very slowly over two stiffly beaten egg whites, flavor with one teaspoon of flavoring and beat until thick enough to spread well. To vary the recipe, add chopped nuts, raisins, figs or dates. Also coconut of various colors may be used to dust the top and sides.

Fudge Frosting.

Cut fine two squares of chocolate and combine with two cups of sugar, one-half cup of milk and one-fourth cup of dark corn sirup. Cook until it forms a very soft ball when dropped into cold water. Remove from the fire, set the pan in cold water and cool; then flavor and beat until thick enough to spread on the cake. For those who prefer maple flavoring use either maple sugar or the maple flavor instead of the chocolate.

Tropical Filling.

Put one-fourth cup of sugar, one teaspoon of cornstarch and one-fourth teaspoonful of salt into a double boiler; when well blended add a half cup of sliced orange peel, one-half cup of butter and one egg yolk; cook until smooth and thick. Remove from the heat, add a teaspoon of lemon juice and spread on the layers of the cake.

TRY THIS TRICK

THE MYSTERIOUS BALANCE

THE items required for this trick are four match boxes, all of similar make. With them the magician performs what appears to be a feat of jugglery.

Carefully setting the match boxes end on end, he holds them upright between his hands. When he takes his upper hand away his lower hand holds the match boxes balanced. Though he performs several maneuvers with the stack, the match boxes do not fall.

The trick depends upon an unsuspected secret. While arranging the stack the magician pushes down the drawer of the top box. Each drawer in the stack locks with the box below. This makes the balance quite simple. The boxes will not come apart until the magician removes them one by one.

ONCE IN A WHILE

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

ONCE in awhile we just remember
April and May, not just December.
Once in awhile we quite forget
All of the hurt the heart has met.
Once in awhile some hour or duty
Makes it again a world of beauty.
Once in awhile our minds recall
Joy, and nothing much else at all.

Once in awhile we cease our fretting;
Nothing has changed, we're just forgetting.
Once in awhile if that be true,
Isn't it always the thing to do?
Once in awhile we're done with sorrow,
But if today, why not tomorrow?
Why can't we whistle, can't we smile,
All of the time, if once in awhile?

ATLANTIC AIR MAIL SEEN IN TWO YEARS

Four Trips to Europe Weekly Are Scheduled.

London.—Transatlantic air mail service will be in operation within two years on a basis of four round trips a week, according to Sir Francis Shelmardine, director general of British Civil Aviation.

Sir Francis declares British authorities have developed three types of airplanes they believe capable of operating the services.

Recent negotiations between representatives of the British government, the Irish Free State, Newfoundland and Canada, and representatives of the United States, resulted in understandings being reached which it was hoped would bring about a transatlantic air service connecting these countries.

Full reciprocity between the countries concerned was agreed upon. Operation would be undertaken jointly by a British commonwealth operating organization and an American operating company.

Consider South Route.

Although it was recognized that the northern route via the Irish Free State, Newfoundland and Canada was shorter than the southern route, and would therefore have the advantage of more economical operation, this fact did not preclude the possibility of use being made of the southern route.

Thus will be forged the last main link in the chain of British empire air communications.

In view of the fact that on either route a stretch of approximately 2,000 miles is involved, it would at present be impossible to provide the capacity required for the whole of the mail. Little practical knowledge was available of flying conditions on these routes. Climatic conditions present a number of difficulties yet to be surmounted and the first services would be of an experimental nature.

New Planes Ordered.

Two highspeed land planes, capable of operating the service during the summer under all conditions and possibly even during the winter, have been ordered.

In addition, the air ministry has given financial assistance to Imperial Airways for the development of the Mayo composite aircraft. This is a combination of two aircraft and involves development of a new technique which would shorten the take-off normally required for heavily-loaded aircraft, and might enable a greater payload to be carried out at a lower power output than now possible.

Lyons.—A portrait of a red-haired child recently discovered in a private collection here is believed to be a painting by Leonardo da Vinci. There is no signature on the painting, which obviously dates back to the Fifteenth or Sixteenth century, but it is known that the great Italian painter used to mark his paintings by tucking his initials away in some obscure portion of the canvas.

To prove the authenticity of the painting it will be subjected to various experiments in microphotography. Dr. J. Locard, head of the laboratory of the Lyons police department, which is equipped to make microphotographs, has been engaged in this sort of detective work in regard to crime and counterfeiting.

This time, however, he will use his apparatus to detect the presence of the two microscopic letters L. V. which will give practical proof that Da Vinci was the original artist.

Beauty in Sixth Place in Coeds Life Rating

Ames, Iowa.—Love and health are more important influences in the lives of Iowa State college coeds than is beauty.

That was disclosed in a survey of the valuations placed on a list of 12 factors in the lives of students in Iowa State college home management classes.

Beauty, which was rated as of prime importance by women interviewed recently by a women's magazine, was placed in sixth place by the coeds.

The women whose answers were compiled by the women's magazine rated beauty first and love and affection second. The coeds rated love and affection first; health second. Both groups placed economic security in third place.

Youth was named by women as the fourth most important factor in their lives, while coeds placed it in ninth position. Religion was given twelfth place by both groups.

New Nome Will Rise From Ashes of Fire

Nome, Alaska.—A new and improved city is rising from the ruins of a disastrous fire which swept Nome in September, 1934. Among improvements listed are a reinforced concrete federal building to cost $500,000, a $65,000 schoolhouse, and Coast Guard quarters for crews and ships valued at $90,000.

PWA projects of water mains, combination city hall and fire department and graveled streets, costing $100,000, were recently completed.

Lights of New York

by L. L. STEVENSON

New York's hundreds of Chinese laundrymen have been hard hit by the depression. Furthermore, the outlook is dark since their business is not coming back to any great extent. An uptown neighborhood establishment, where six yellow men were busy from early morning until far into the night, washing, ironing, attending to customers and smoking cigarettes, now employs only two. A nearby place where the proprietor employed his three cousins, closed recently because there weren't enough patrons. Perfection of machinery, extension of delivery service, advertising and solicitation has turned much of the business away from the hand laundries to the big establishments. So the unemployed in Chinatown increase steadily. The situation, however, in the main, is accepted with true Oriental calm and Chinatown takes care of its own.

* * *

That the stoicism of the East in the face of disaster may disguise an internal ferment was disclosed recently when the Chinese Laundrymen's association met to elect officers. Usually that is merely a formality but the last session caused four men to be sent to the hospital and three to be arrested. It seems that those in power tried to put through a slate. Objections were voiced, accusations made and polite speech turned to hot words. Then there was action and a great scurrying on stairs when the police arrived. The explanation made to the officers was that the chief objection was the introduction of "American methods" into the proceedings.

* * *

In our town, the Chinese population consisted of Wah Lung. He was the most industrious man I ever knew. Not infrequently, he worked all through the night to keep up with the dirty linen of his customers. Also he possessed a remarkable dexterity in manufacturing a cigarette from ordinary pipe tobacco and a piece of newspaper. And I'll never forget the Sunday, he dressed up in peg top trousers, high standing collar—one unclaimed by a patron—toothpick-toed tan shoes and a derby hat and attended the First Presbyterian church.

* * *

The best dog story I've heard in some time was told by Miss Anna B. Sprague. It seems that over in Tea Neck, N. J., there is a big friendly police dog that makes frequent calls at homes in the neighborhood. If the dog happens to be hungry, it heads straight for the kitchen and stands in front of the refrigerator until fed. Recently, it called at the home of a friend of Miss Sprague. Unfortunately for the visitor, the refrigerator contained nothing whatsoever that would appeal to a canine appetite. The lady of the house tried to make her caller understand that but the dog merely continued to stand looking longingly at the refrigerator and nothing she did or said caused it to change its position.

* * *

Finally in desperation, the housewife called the dog's owner.

"I can settle that," said the woman at the other end of the wire. "Put him on the 'phone."

"What do you mean?" asked the worried woman.

"Hold the receiver to his ear and let me talk to him."

The dog didn't want to leave the refrigerator but was led to the phone and the receiver held to its ear.

The dog listened, then ran out of the door.

It seems that his mistress had ordered him to come home.

* * *

Statuesque, imperious looking, she attracted much attention as she came down the aisle of the theater during a performance of "Sweet Aloes." She had on a long fur cape, reddish in color and different from anything worn by any other woman. Plainly it was an expensive wrap and the wearer just as plainly was not at all unconscious of that fact and of the eyes turned toward her. A short distance behind her followed one of those ruddy-faced, evening-attired gentlemen who always seem to me to type the "man-about-town." Suddenly, he glimpsed the lady with the cape. "No wonder there isn't any fox hunting any more," he remarked to a companion. And the lady evidently overheard as her leisurely pace changed to a quick-step.

English Manor of Tenth Century Passes as Inn

Winchester, England.—One of England's most ancient feudal manors, the "God Begot" hostel here, dating back to the Tenth century, no longer will be a mecca for American tourists.

The hostel, which attracted hundreds of Americans arriving by boat at nearby Southampton, has been sold and will not be utilized as a hotel in the future.

The half-timbered Tudor structure was conveyed to Queen Emma, free of all burdens, by her husband, Aethelred, and she in turn bequeathed it to St. Swithin's monastery.

The manor became a sanctuary for criminals and fugitives and held its own courts of justice until the reign of Henry VIII, when it passed to the dean of Winchester cathedral. The main structure of the manor, built in 1558, remains virtually untouched.

Who Are You?

The Romance of Your Name

By RUBY HASKINS ELLIS

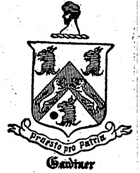
A Gardiner?

THE watchword of the Gardners and Gardiners, "Praesto pro patria" ("I stand for my country"), as their history will show, has been like a burning torch held high in every generation of this splendid famly.

The principal family of Gardiners in this country derive their descent from Lion Gardiner, a native of Scotland, who served under General Fairfax as an engineer in the Low counties. He was sent to America in 1635 by the Lords Say, Sele and Brooke, to build a fort on their grant of land at the mouth of the Connecticut river. This he did and called the fort Saybrook, in honor of his patrons. His eldest son, David, born in Saybrook in 1636, was the first white child born in the Connecticut colony.



Praesto pro Patria

Gardiner

Lion Gardiner bought from the Indians an island in Long Island sound, called by the English Isle of Wight, paying for it a black dog, a gun and some Dutch blankets. Here he settled with his family and called it "Gardiners Island." This island remained in possession of the family for many generations.

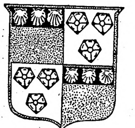
The original Gardners and Gardiners seem to have used the same coat of arms and both spellings of the name, so it is believed that in the beginning they were the same family. Even in America, both houses use the same arms. The above reproduction represents the arms of Joseph Gardiner, of Rhode Island. He came to America by way of Holland in 1650 or 1651. His father was Sir Thomas Gardiner, who fought in the army of Charles I.

* * *

A Graham?

FEW indeed are the families who can boast of a name of greater antiquity or historical renown than the Grahams. The name is Scotch and is derived from one Greme, who was regent of Scotland during the minority of Eugene II, in the year 419. Greme took his name from the Anglo-Saxon "grim," meaning surly or sullen, not a very attractive attribute, but perhaps they interpreted it as one having a stern and courageous look.

The story is that the founder of the family of Greme, a great warrior, breached the wall which formed the Roman occupation of Scotland. In later times a chieftain of the Grahams was a loyal supporter of Sir William Wallace, who succeeded in freeing Scotland from the English yoke, and at the famous battle of Fodden Field the loyal head of the house of Graham fell by the side of his king.



Graham

This family has always been a powerful one in its native Scotland, owning many vast estates, lordships and dukedoms and earldoms. The earl of Montrose was allied with the Stuart cause and paid the penalty with his life on the scaffold in 1660. In Scotland "the great Montrose" is an imperishable memory of its history.

The plaid of the Grahams (all prominent Scottish families belonged to a clan and each clan had its characteristic plaid) is in blue, black and gray. Their war cry was "Killecranie," and their badge was laurel.

Among the earliest American settlers of this family was Benjamin Graham, who located in Hartford, Conn. James Graham was an attorney general, of Boston, Mass.

William Graham was the founder of the first classical school in the South, which is now known as Washington and Lee university, in Lexington, Va.

Sea Keeps Pushing Cape Hatteras Light Around

Century Old Contest With Hatteras Continues.

Washington.—King Neptune and Mother Nature won by a washout!

Thus might read the terse description by a modern sports writer who witnessed the recent abandonment of the famous black and white striped Cape Hatteras lighthouse.

"To keep a light burning on Cape Hatteras has been a struggle," says the National Geographic society. "In 1798 the first tower was erected. It was two miles from the coast but it took only 72 years of relentless pounding of the Atlantic to reach the base of that sandstone pile.

"The recently abandoned 'light,' a brick structure, succeeded the old tower. It was built only slightly more than a mile inland, but the sea has taken 66 years to come dangerously near it. One reason for the slower progress of the waves to the second structure was the repeated attempts of the government to fight back. One device to prevent erosion of the coast was interlocking sheet steel piling driven into the coastal sands. A new steel tower has been built another mile inland and the battle is on again.

Sea Changes Coast.

"The whole contour of the eastern coast of the United States is constantly being changed by the sea which cuts away some beaches and builds up others. The average force of the Atlantic waves in winter is estimated at from one to three tons per square foot.

"Cape Charles, Virginia, is one of nature's most active seacoast battle grounds. In 1827 a lighthouse was built 700 feet from the shore. It was deserted in 1863 because the site was undermined by erosion. A second tower, built the following year farther inland, was also undermined and abandoned. In 1895 a third tower was built nearly a mile from shore. This tower, a skeleton iron structure, is still in use.

"Neptune has been no respecter of geography in wielding his chief weapon against lighthouses—erosion. The Cape Canaveral light on the east coast of Florida; the Hunting Island light, South Carolina; and the lights at Cape May, New Jersey, and Sand Island, Alabama, are among those that have succumbed to the sea's invasion.

"The abandoned tower on low-lying Cape Hatteras was the tallest in the United States, being 193 feet from its base to the top of its lantern, but it was not the country's highest light. The honor goes to the light at Cape Mendocino on the coast of California. The squat tower is itself only 43 feet high, but it is on a cliff about 379 feet above high water. This light, of 130,000 candle power, is visible 28 miles.

"The country's most powerful coast light is located at Navesink on the highlands south of New York harbor. This is a huge electric light of 9,000,000 candle power. Since it is only 246 feet above sea level, it can be seen only 22 miles out to sea, however. The proper elevation of lighthouses is a problem. Lights must have a reasonable elevation above sea level to overcome the curvature of the earth; yet if built too high, they may be obscured by fog.

Electricity Used.

"Most of the major seacoast lights today use electricity, although incandescent oil vapor, and oil wick lamps are still used extensively in harbor and river lights. The lights are intensified by large lenses. Both lights and lenses are protected by outer lanterns of glass. The earliest lighthouses burned wood, after which coal, candles, whale oil, kerosene, acetylene gas, and electricity were successfully introduced.

"The first United States lighthouse in this country is at Sandy Hook, New Jersey. It had been in operation 12 years when the Declaration of Independence was signed. Its stone and brick walls are seven feet thick at the base. While lighthouses have been built of stone, brick, wood, and iron, most of the modern structures are of steel or concrete.

"The first United States lighthouse exposed to the open sea was that on Minots Ledge, a reef off Boston which had long terrified mariners. An iron-frame lighthouse, built there in 1848, was lost in a gale one year later, and was replaced by a stone structure which was completed in 1860 and is still in use. Surf breaks against its base, and in stormy weather, the waves dash almost to the lantern.

"At the more prominent and dangerous points along the seaboard, rivers, and lakes of the United States and its possessions, are located 525 lighthouses with resident keepers. The United States lighthouse service employs 1,100 lighthouse keepers, only one of whom is a woman."

Safety Council Suggests Drivers Imitate Animals

Egyptian Beauty Dead 57 Centuries Is Found

London.—Perfectly preserved 5,736 years after burial, the slender body of a lovely princess of ancient Egypt has been discovered intact, reposing in a tomb under one of the Gizeh pyramids, the Daily Telegraph reported in a dispatch from Cairo.

The beautiful princess, who died 3800 B. C., was believed to have been a daughter of the great Pharaoh Chephren, who erected the second loftiest pyramid in Egypt.

Costly and delicately carved pieces of jewelry decorated the body of the princess. At her feet lay two heaps of gold.

Working with infinite patience, Professor Hassan toiled for 34 hours removing the thin layer of mud on the mummy.

The finely featured face of the princess, and her soft, smooth neck were particularly well preserved.

In an attitude more of graceful slumber than of death, the princess' body was reclining on its side.

Her small wrists were encircled with bracelets of thin gold.

So fragile is the body that work of excavating and removing it from the dark depths of the pyramid is expected to require a great deal of time.

7,000-Mile Journey of Newlyweds Covers Desert

Sydney, N. S. W.—A 7,000-mile honeymoon caravan tour of Australia has ended—eight months after the bride and bridegroom set out.

The honeymooners were Mr. and Mrs. Francis Birtles of Sydney, and in the course of their trip they traveled up the Australian east coast, across the north and down the center, through tropical jungle and sandy desert.

Their caravan was fitted with a refrigerator, wireless, a sink with running water, water tanks and a portable bath. It was as heat and fly proof as it was possible to make it.

Eight months' supplies of groceries were taken by the couple when they started from Sydney. With rod and gun they kept themselves supplied with fish and meat.

The bride had to prepare most of her cosmetics herself. She invented a face cream which also proved useful for polishing the car which hauled the caravan.

Plow Enthused Webster More Than Public Life

Daniel Webster was a firm believer in deep tillage. A century ago, convinced that plowing was too shallow, Webster developed a plow 12 feet long from the tips of the handles to the tip of the beam, with a share 15 inches wide. It turned a furrow 14 inchs deep. Eight oxen pulled it.

Webster was delighted with his plow, and wrote: "When I have hold of my big plow . . . in a brush-covered pasture and hear the roots crack, see the stumps go under the furrow out of sight, and observe the clean, mellow surface of the land, I feel more enthusiasm than comes from my encounters in public life in Washington."

The LOST VALLEY OF TIBET
An adventure of CAPTAIN FRANK HAWKS
ON HIS FLIGHT AROUND THE WORLD WITH JERRY AND JANET
CAPTAIN HAWKS, holder of 214 aviation records, and his young friends, Jerry and Janet, charter members of the Air Hawks Club, are swept off their course by a sudden storm from the lofty Himalaya mountains of Tibet. At last he sights a safe landing place.
WHAT ARE THEY SAYING, CAPT. FRANK?
I DON'T KNOW-LET'S FOLLOW THEM INTO THE TOWN.
CAPTAIN FRANK, THIS POOR OLD MAN WANTS SOMETHING!
SH-H! FLEE WHILE THERE'S STILL HOPE!
GREAT SCOTT-HE SPEAKS ENGLISH!
YES, I AM ENGLISH-...WHAT IS LEFT OF ME! THESE EVIL MONKS HAVE KEPT ME HERE IN THE HIDDEN VALLEY OF TIBET FOR 20 YEARS...I'VE BEEN TORTURED...OH SH....THEY'RE WATCHING!
COME ON.. RUN FOR THE PLANE.. IT'S OUR ONLY CHANCE!
OH-THAT POOR OLD MAN! WE CAN'T LEAVE HIM!
NEVER MIND THAT-KEEP RUNNING-WE'RE GOING TO MAKE IT!
GET IN, YOUNGSTER I'LL SHOW THOSE RUFFIANS A TRICK THEY NEVER SAW BEFORE!
HOORAY! GO GET 'EM, CAPTAIN FRANK!
CAPTAIN HAWKS SENDS HIS PLANE ROARING AT THE MONKS. THEY FLEE IN TERROR.. BUT THE PLANE IS HEADED STRAIGHT FOR THE STONE WALL OF THE TOWN AND DESTRUCTION!
THE MATCHLESS SKILL OF CAPT. HAWKS STANDS HIM IN GOOD STEAD...HE PUTS THE PLANE INTO AN ALMOST IMPOSSIBLE VERTICAL BANK.. AND RETURNS TO PICK UP THE OLD BEGGAR.
OLD FELLOW YOU'RE SAFE NOW. BACK TO CIVILIZATION FOR ALL OF US!
OH, CAPTAIN FRANK, THAT WAS WONDERFUL!
MY! I'M GLAD TO BE OUT OF THAT AWFUL VALLEY! IT SURE IS GOOD TO BE EATING THESE SWELL POST'S BRAN FLAKES AGAIN!
YOU BET. IT'S THE BEST TASTING CEREAL IN THE WORLD.
THAT'S THE STUFF! NOTHING LIKE POST'S BRAN FLAKES FOR MY AIR HAWKS! DIG INTO ANOTHER BOWLFUL!
COMING, IN AN EARLY ISSUE OF THIS NEWSPAPER: "THE OASIS OF LIVING DEATH," ANOTHER ADVENTURE OF CAPTAIN FRANK, JERRY AND JANET ON THEIR WORLD FLIGHT.

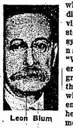
New French Premier Helps Labor Win All Demands

STRIKING workers who paralyzed the industrial life of France at the moment when the "popular front" socialist majority was taking over the reins of the government, won complete victory with the aid of Leon Blum, new premier, as the general strike was settled, a disquieting note was added by a walkout of 150,000 coal miners and textile workers in northern France.

Labor won the following five demands:

1. Wage increases from 7 to 15 per cent.
2. Recognition of workers' rights to organize in unions.
3. A forty-hour work week.
4. Vacations with pay.
5. Collective bargaining contracts.



Leon Blum

Settling of the strike marked a significant victory for the new government which assumed extraordinary powers to devise measures to bolster France's financial system and revitalize national defenses. "White collar" workers were the only group excluded from the general agreement which was signed by employers at the behest of the government, but the premier promised relief for them. Premier Blum gained support from conservative forces with his announcement that "The People's Front is and will remain hostile to devaluation of the currency." The end of the strike restored a measure of confidence to a panic-stricken nation faced with possible famine due to the tie-up of its transportation, processing and distribution systems by 1,000,000 striking workers.

Texas Opens Its Great Centennial Exposition

TEXAS celebrated the one-hundredth anniversary of its independence by opening a $25,000,000 centennial exposition in Dallas. Foremost among distinguished visitors attending the world's fair the first week was President Roosevelt. To obtain the centennial exposition Dallas made available more than $9,000,000 in cash and property. The exposition will be open until November 29. Numerous other celebrations marking the state's 100 years of freedom have been held in various cities and towns of Texas. The exposition presents educational, historic and recreational features associated with a major world's fair.

Largest building on the exposition ground is the $1,000,000 Texas Hall of State, which cost an additional $200,000 to equip. The building was erected as a memorial to the patriots and pioneers of Texas, and is the largest historical museum on the North American continent.

Other buildings and their erection cost include:

United States building, $325,000, largest federal building ever erected at a world's fair; Negro Life building, $100,000, also erected by government funds; Exposition Farm Center, consisting of five great buildings, erected at a cost of $1,000,000; Travel and Transportation building, $365,000; Varied Industries, $440,000; National History museum, $250,000; aquarium, $180,000.

Speaker Byrns of House Is Taken by Death

J. W. Byrns

DEATH, sudden and unexpected, came to Joseph Wellington Byrns, speaker of the house of representatives, and put an end to a notable career. The veteran Tennessee congressman suffered a heart attack, followed by a cerebral hemorrhage, and passed away within a few hours in his apartment in the Mayflower hotel, Washington. For 27 years Mr. Byrns had represented the "Hermitage district" of Tennessee in the house, and he was elected speaker when the Seventy-fourth congress convened in January, 1935. He was a master of parliamentary strategy and so fair-minded a presiding officer that all, even his political opponents, praised and admired him. Before becoming speaker he served long years on the appropriations committee, as member and chairman, and he also was leader of the Democratic majority and chairman of the Democratic congressional campaign committee.

Grief for Mr. Byrns' death was general and sincere in Washington officialdom. "I am shocked beyond all imagination," said Representative Bertrand H. Snell of New York, the minority leader. "It is a terrible thing. It is an almost irreparable loss."

Senator Joseph T. Robinson of Arkansas, the majority leader, after expressing his own sense of loss added: "His work during the session has been very difficult and trying. He was a great speaker."

President Roosevelt in a statement from the White House expressed well the high esteem in which Mr. Byrns was held. Said he:

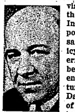
"Fearless, incorruptible, unselfish with a high sense of justice, wise in counsel, broad of vision, calm in adversity, and modest in victory, he served his state and the nation with fidelity, honor, and great usefulness. I personally mourn the passing of a steadfast friend of many years."

Impressive funeral services were held in the chamber of the house, the President, members of the cabinet and numerous diplomats being present in addition to all members of congress.

Senate Passes Its Own Tax Revenue Measure

THE senate passed the $829,000,000 compromise revenue measure by a vote of 38 to 24. The bill then went to conference with the house of representatives which had enacted a revenue measure carrying out tax proposals made by President Roosevelt. The senate measure called for a 15¼ to 18 per cent tax on net corporate incomes as compared with the present 12½ to 15 per cent levy; a new type of 7 per cent tax on undistributed profits; repeal of the existing exemption of dividends from the 4 per cent normal income tax; an increase of 1 per cent in the individual income surtax on surtax brackets between $6,000 and $50,000. The house measure called for a tax on corporate net income scaling up to 42½ per cent, depending upon the amount of undistributed profits.

Chester Davis Appointed to Reserve Board



Doctor Tolley

AGRICULTURE was given representation on the federal reserve board through the appointment by President Roosevelt of Chester C. Davis, administrator of the AAA to that body. In discussing his appointment, Mr. Davis said: "The fiscal policy of the federal government has never been tied in closely enough with agricultural problems." Mr. Davis has spent most of his life in agricultural activities. He was born on a farm in Iowa, was graduated from Grinnell college and later owned and operated a farm. For some years he was a newspaper publisher and then became editor of the Montana Farmer.

Mr. Davis was succeeded as AAA administrator by Dr. Howard R. Tolley. Nationally known as a soil expert, Doctor Tolley helped Mr. Davis draft the soil conservation plan, enacted after the United States Supreme court decision invalidated the AAA. He has been carrying on this program during the absence of Mr. Davis in Europe.

Filene Plan Urges Ban on Unfair Trade Practices

IN A report just made public the business advisory council proposes a simplified basis for industrial self-regulation through the medium of voluntary joint agreements on unfair trade practices enforceable by the federal trade commission. The report was prepared by the council's committee on unfair trade practices of which Lincoln Filene of Boston is chairman.

Outstanding among the committee's proposals were suggestions that each branch of an industry, such as wholesale, retail, and manufacturing, police the activities of each other through confidential reports to the federal trade commission and that no attempt be made to include trade practice and labor provisions in the same agreements.

Sir Samuel Hoare Back in British Cabinet

Sir Samuel Hoare

CALLED back to the British cabinet, which he left some months ago as a political scapegoat, Sir Samuel Hoare was made first lord of the admiralty, to succeed Viscount Monsell. Sir Samuel, who boldly faced a hostile house of commons last December to defend his part in the Anglo-French peace plan which would have given Mussolini only a part of Ethiopia, will face the task of solving problems arising out of British-Italian fleet difficulties in the Mediterranean. The biggest task facing Hoare, however, is restoration of the British navy to an undisputed position of supremacy on the seas.

Industrial Mobilization Plan Is Condemned

THE so-called industrial mobilization plan of the War department, providing for a military dictatorship over labor, capital and industry, as well as censorship of the press in wartime, was severely condemned in a report to the senate by the munitions committee.

The committee objected particularly to the proposed conscription of labor as being dangerous to democracy.

Thomas Held Responsible for British Budget Leak

J. H. THOMAS, until recently British colonial secretary, was found responsible by a special government tribunal for the leak in budget secrets which enabled some of his friends to profit largely through insurance against tax raises. Final disposition of the case was left to the house of commons. Thomas, once an engine wiper and later a powerful figure in organized labor and politics, termed the tribune's verdict "cruel." He said: "My own conscience is clear. I repeat what I previously stated upon oath: that I made no disclosures of budget secrets to anybody."

South China Declares War on Japanese

Chiang Kai-Shek

WITH a declaration of war against Japan by the Canton (south) Chinese government, first steps were taken in what may become a nationally concerted effort to resist further encroachment by Nippon on China's territory. Leaders were hopeful that a coalition of the Canton and the Nanking (north) governments might give China a united front against Japan for the first time. Should the South China war lords succeed in enlisting the support of Generalissimo Chiang Kai-Shek and his Nanking forces, a substantial movement to expel the Japanese from North China could be undertaken.

Sec. Ickes Complains of Wallace's Encroachments

THE Department of Agriculture recommended to the senate that the administration of the Taylor grazing act, affecting 80,000,000 acres of range land, be transfered to its control from that of the Department of the Interior. Secretary Ickes retorted with the accusation that the Agricultural department had hindered his program to rehabilitate western grazing lands. He said Secretary Wallace's department has insisted upon having so many CCC camps for the forestry service that the Interior department could not get enough CCC help to administer efficiently the Taylor act.

Is Father Once More at the Age of 96

GEORGE ISAAC HUGHES, ninety-six-year-old Confederate veteran, amazed the medical world by becoming a father again. This time a girl was born to Hughes' twenty-eight-year-old wife, Libby Hill Hughes. The Hughes' first born is now a lusty lad of seventeen months. Surprisingly vigorous for his age, Hughes was the only veteran in his area to attend recent Confederate memorial exercises. The veteran's mental faculties are clear. He is able to do considerable physical work including caring for a garden, chopping wood and doing odd jobs.

Marshal Badoglio Is Given Roman Triumph

Viceroy Badoglio

MARSHAL PIETRO BADOGLIO, conqueror of Ethiopia and now viceroy of that part of the reconstituted "Roman empire," returned to the Eternal City in triumph and was vociferously welcomed as a hero. Sixty thousand Romans welcomed him as he stepped from his train, and Premier Mussolini modestly waited in the background until they had shouted their greetings to the veteran warrior. Then Il Duce came forward and kissed the viceroy on both cheeks, and the high ranking Fascist military leaders paid homage. With the premier and the picked troops forming the escort of honor were the entire cabinet. Several days later a great military review was held.

The other side of the picture was seen in London, where Haile Selassie, the deposed emperor of Ethiopia, arrived in tears and sadness, though he was given an ovation by the cheering thousands that had seldom been accorded to visitors to England. Many of the Londoners carried Ethiopian flags or scarlet banners reading "Welcome to the Emperor." With the white sympathizers were many African chiefs in native robes, Somalis, negroes, Hindus, Chinese, and colored people from all parts of the world.

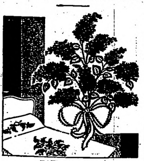
There was an outburst of wild cheering when Selassie, bareheaded and wearing a long black cape, stepped from his private sleeping car and was greeted by many notables, including O. C. Harvey, private secretary of Anthony Eden, British foreign secretary. Harvey was the lone representative of the British government.

Red Cross Mourns Death of Clara Dutton Noyes

MISS CLARA DUTTON NOYES, sixty-six, director of the American Red Cross nursing service, died in Washington a few minutes after she was stricken while driving to work in her car. Miss Noyes was assistant director of the American Red Cross nursing service during the World war. She also had been superintendent of nurses at the Bellevue and allied hospitals in New York.

Cyrus Hall McCormick, whose father developed the farm reaper and who himself helped organize the International Harvester company and was its president for 33 years, died at his home in Lake Forest, Ill., at the age of seventy-seven years.

Bedspreads Welcome Delicate Lilac Motif



PATTERN 1152

Dark and light lilacs, tied with a flourish into the loveliest of floral sprays, is far and away the nicest—and easiest—flowery touch one can give a bedroom. Even an amateur will find the large spray easy to embroider on a bedspread with four smaller sprays on the bolster, or scarf ends. The flowers are entirely formed of lazy-daisy stitch and French knots, the leaves of blanket stitch—the rest is in outline. With cotton or rayon floss the designs are seemingly done in no time, in shades of lilac, orchid, or palest yellow.

Pattern 1152 comes to you with a transfer pattern of a motif 18 by 21 inches and two reverse motifs 4 by 5½ inches. Color suggestions; illustrations of all stitches needed; material requirements.

Send 15 cents in coins or stamps (coins preferred) to The Sewing Circle, Needlecraft Dept., 82 Eighth Ave., New York, N. Y. Write plainly pattern number, your name and address.

King Sent Pilgrims to America on Fishing Trip

"What induced a Scottish king to sign the Mayflower's charter to sail to America was not possible gold mines, much less religious freedom, but just Labrador's naturally abundant wealth, viz., 'fish,'" says Sir Wilfred Grenfell in "The Romance of Labrador."

"When the application from Leyden for permission for the Pilgrims to go to America was handed to King James," says Sir Wilfred, "that canny Scot asked simply, 'Why? What profit hath it?' 'Fishing, Sire,' was the improvised reply. 'By God's soul, 'tis an honest calling,' he answered. ''Twas that of the Apostles.' And he forthwith signed the charter.

PLAN HOMECOMING HERE JULY FOURTH

The Spectator has been asked to convey a message to former residents of the village who may be planning a trip back to the old home town for the Fourth. Such a trip has been mentioned at different times at meetings of the Twin Cities-St. Hilaire organization, but nothing definite has been done. The people of St. Hilaire, especially those who have relatives and old friends in the Twin Cities and vicinity, want them to know they will be welcome should they decide to make the trip. If enough signify their intention of coming, the friends and relatives here will arrange for a picnic or similar gathering where all old friends may meet. Any who will make the trip will confer a favor by dropping a card to Adolph Satterberg stating they are coming.

TENT MISSION OPENS

The large tent of the Lutheran Tent Mission was erected Tuesday immediately north of the Swedish Lutheran church, and the first of a series of six meetings was held there Tuesday night. As was the case last year, all the meetings held here are well attended.

LOCAL TEAM DOWNS OKLEE LAST SUNDAY

The St. Hilaire baseball team annexed its fourth straight victory for this season when it defeated Oklee by a score of 10 to 5 on Oklee grounds last Sunday. A large delegation of rooters from here accompanied the team and helped cheer them on to victory.

The Oklee team will play its return game with St. Hilaire on local grounds next Sunday, and the local lads hope at that time to repeat their good showing of the previous week. As income for all teams in the league consists entirely of gate receipts on their home fields, the home team would appreciate a good turnout for the game next Sunday.

Cream Patrons:—No cream will be accepted at the St. Hilaire creamery on July fourth, and the creamery will be closed all during that day.

HEAT DAMAGES CROPS

Excessive heat and lack of rain the past week has caused some of the small grain crops in this locality to head out, and growth of much other grain is greatly retarded. Should sufficient rain fall within the next week, prospects for fair grain crops will be good altho straw will be very short. Reports from all sections of the territory indicate that all hay crops will be good this year.

WEED MEETING SET FOR MONDAY

The annual weed meeting for Pennington County will be held at the Court House in the City of Thief River Falls Monday, the 29th day of June, at 1:30 o'clock P. M. All town chairmen are, as usual, directed to attend as provided by the Weed Act. But, everybody is invited to attend and participate in the discussion of weed and seed control. The subjects to be discussed will be as follows: New phases of the weed problem. Weed eradication methods, costs, implements, etc. Pure Seeds and weed seeds, bargain seeds, cheap seeds, etc. Reports of weed inspection, how to get your neighbor to cut his weeds, relief seed, feed and hay, and other interesting subjects will receive attention. Come, everybody, and listen to your Town Chairmen tell of his work of weed inspection for the past year.

Baglo-Austin

Friends here received announcements recently of the marriage of Mr. George L. Austin of Rosholt, S. D., to Miss Gyda V. Baglo of Fergus Falls. The ceremony occurred June 17 at Fergus Falls.

Mr. Austin formerly was manager of the local creamery some over twenty years ago. Later he was travelling representative for a large creamery concern. During recent years he has been owner and manager of a creamery at Rosholt, S. D., where he and bride will make their home. Friends thruout this community will join in wishing Mr. and Mrs. Austin much happiness.

The Mission Ladies' Aid will be entertained at the G. M. Erickson home Thursday evening. Mrs. Erickson and Mrs. John Norman will be hostesses.

Tales About Town

Happenings of the Week, Told in Brief. News Concerning People You Know

Mrs. Arvid Dahlstrom and daughter left last week for a visit at the home of her sister at Washington, D. C.

Twelve young people received the rites of confirmation at exercises held last Sunday at the local Norwegian Lutheran church.

The Community M. E. Ladies' Aid will be entertained at the church by a group of ladies, Friday afternoon this week. All welcome.

Co. Commissioner Paul Roy was at Thief River Falls the first three days of this week to preside at meetings of the county board.

Roy Sumpter, who has been employed in the state park near New London, came up Sunday morning to make arrangements to move his family back to this village.

Equalization board for the village met at the village hall both Monday and Tuesday to review assessments of real estate and personal property made for this year.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Allen, Mr. and Mrs. Wendell Corbet motored Sunday to Lake Julia north of Bemidji and spent the day visiting relatives and trying their luck at fishing.

Richard Gother, long engaged in the mercantile business at Wylie, has sold his store and intends to take a trip with his family to the Pacific coast country with view of finding a new location.

Members of the Birthday Club, accompanied by Harry Winter and M. R. Graham, motored yesterday afternoon to Argyle for a visit with Mr. and Mrs. Theo. Skatrud and family, and to help Mrs. Skatrud celebrate her birthday anniversary.

Theo. Landa of Landa, N. D., came Sunday for a visit with his cousin, Mrs. R. L. Hauge, at the Otto Johnson home. He went up to Badger this week to visit briefly with relatives there. While here, Mr. Landa had a pleasant visit with Chr. Molstad who was his neighbor back in homestead days in North Dakota.

John Bundy, veteran representative of the International Harvester Company, died last week at a Minneapolis hospital. Mr. Bundy drove one of the first, if not the first, automobiles to pass thru this village some over thirty years ago. His first auto was one of the high wheel, chain drive ones that was manufactured by the company he represented.

Light and power bills for the current month should be paid before 4:00 P. M., Monday, June 29 in order to take advantage of discount for prompt payment.

Mr. and Mrs. Roy Johnson motored here last week from Beach, N. D., for a visit at the home of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Martin Bjerk. Mr. Johnson is resident manager of the telephone exchange at Beach.

The open-air concert by the school band, and the dance given here last Saturday drew one of the largest crowds that had gathered in St. Hilaire in years. Parking space was at a premium of the main highway as well as all side streets during the evening.

The Luther League of the Norwegian Luth. Church will hold a meeting at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Vik on Friday evening, June 26 at 8 o'clock. Mesdames Ed. Aubol, O. T. Haugen, Carl Surmo, Arne Vik, Sigurd Vik and Edw. Vik will entertain. All are cordially invited to attend.

Mr. and Mrs. Phillip Anderson and family departed the first of this week enroute to Joliet, Ill. They will visit a week or two at the home of Mrs. Anderson's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Paul Pautz at New Holstein, Wis., and with friends in nearby towns before going to Joliet where they expect to make their future home. During many years of residence here, Mr. and Mrs. Anderson and family have made many friends who, while regretting their departure, will join in wishing them happiness and prosperity in their new place of abode.

TO TENNIS PLAYERS

All who are interested in having the school ground tennis court put in shape for use this year are asked to make a small donation to help defray cost. Donations may be left with Mrs. Fred Biskey, or with Viola Pearson at the library.

Soo Winnipeg Flyer Hits Motor Car at Alexandria

The Soo Line Winnipeg Flyer crashed into an automobile at Alexandria last Thursday night, injuring all four occupants of the car, two probably fatally.

Suffering fractured skulls and unconscious are two brothers, Milton Bakke, 20 and Walton Bakke, 17, sons of Herman Bakke of Alexandria. Dr. R. W. Steube said their condition is "very critical."

In a hospital, where the brothers were taken, is Mabel Engstrand, 15, while the fourth occupant, Jose Mohawk, saved herself from serious injury by jumping from the car a moment before the crash. She sustained only bruises.

BASS SEASON OPENS

With opening of the season for large and small mouth bass, crappies, and sunfish in the northern zone on Sunday, June 21st, the taking of these species is now legal thruout the state. The daily limit for bass is 6 per day with 12 permitted in possession. For sunfish and crappies the daily limit is 15; the possession limit is 25 for crappies and 30 for sunfish.

USE ARMORED TRUCK FOR HAULING LIQUOR

Following hi-jacking of two auto truck loads of liquor consigned to the municipal liquor store at Red Lake Falls from wholesale houses at Minneapolis, city officials at the lower Falls have arranged to have future cargoes hauled by armored truck. A Twin City concern is to furnish the new equipment which will consist of the latest type of truck, with bullet proof glass; outfitted with tear gas and arms sufficient to resist any ordinary attack. In addition to taking all these precautions, the cargo will be fully insured.

SCHOOL NOTES

Two Bus Routes Let

At the regular meeting of the School Board of District 102, the route for the East Bus and the West Bus was laid out and contracts let. The East bus will travel east one mile, south to the county line, west three miles, then north and east to reach the road coming in one mile east of Hazel. The West bus will travel over the same route as last year.

Buses will have approximately 25 passenger capacity, thus caring for the additional number who may wish transportation on the bus route.

Any new families on or near the bus route who will want their youngsters transported kindly communicate with Superintendent Graham at an early date.

The School Board is to be complimented on the splendid service this will afford to the surrounding territory.

Contracts were let to Clarence Hallstrom, for the East route and to Elmer Johnson for the West route.

Band Concert Saturday Evening at 8:30

In order to make it easier for those who find it difficult to get in early Saturday evening the time for beginning concerts has been set one-half hour later.

Band practise will be held at the school on Thursday evening to accommodate Luther League which comes on Friday. The Band will play at Luther League at Ed Vik's this Friday evening.

Because of lack of space, it was found necessary last week to eliminate many items of country correspondence.

MAIL ROUTE CHANGE ON RURAL ROUTE 1

Beginning July 1st, a change will take place in delivery of mail on R. F. D. No. 1 of St. Hilaire. This route, as well as north half of the present Wylie route are to be consolidated and will be known as No. 5 of Thief River Falls. South half of the present Wylie route will be attached to No. 3 of Red Lake Falls and will be served by the carrier on that route. Henry Schneider, veteran carrier on the Wylie route, has been transferred to Thief River Falls to serve Route No. 3 of that city.

Carrier on the new Route 5 will leave Thief River Falls in the morning in time to arrive at the local office in time to attend to distribution and pickup of mail coming on the morning train which brings bulk of all Twin City papers and first class mail. This means, according to instructions now on file at the local office from the postal department at Washington, that all patrons on old St. Hilaire No. 1, and those on north half of old Wylie route, will receive their mail thru St. Hilaire office on day of arrival. It will not be necessary for any patron, except those on river road between here and Thief River Falls, to make any change of address in order to get delivery of mail on day of arrival.

RED LAKE FALLS TO CELEBRATE FOURTH

Red Lake Falls is making extensive preparations to observe the national birthday, July Fourth, this year in its usual style. A good program of sports of all kinds, including a ball game, races, etc., is being worked out. Music by several bands will help enliven the occasion during the day, and there will be dances and fireworks during the evening. Crookston also is putting on a fine celebration, and is making a strong bid for attendance by people thruout this section of the state.

FROM NORTH DAKOTA

Mr. and Mrs. Joe Lardy of Manfred, N. D., were here from Monday until Tuesday for a visit at the home of his brother, Ben Lardy, at his farm home in Rocksbury. Mr. and Mrs. Lardy were enroute to their home after attending the wedding of their daughter, which occurred last week at Eden Valley, Minn.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Thom, Mr. and Mrs. Erwin Thom and son, Richard of Aurora, Ill., motored here Sunday and visited until Wednesday at the H. R. Allen home. Chas. Thom is a brother of Mrs. Allen.

Townsend Plan Flops

WASHINGTON.—Dr. Francis E. Townsend's fanciful dream for payment of pensions of $200 per month for everyone over sixty years of age seems to have gone up in smoke, but there are developments in connection with the California doctor's unworkable scheme that merit comment. The good doctor and his half-baked idea have been skidding rapidly since the House investigating committee showed up the plan as a befuddled idea and as I once predicted, the bubble burst in a big way.

While I am inclined to believe that Dr. Townsend was honest and sincere in proposing the $200 per month pension, it was the sort of thing that serves as an inducement for racketeers to gather. It was the old molasses barrel for the flies in the world of racketeers. It never had a chance to go anywhere and never will, because it was fundamentally unsound. We can dismiss it then except for the two phases which ought to be vigorously condemned by right-thinking people everywhere.

The two circumstances which I hear discussed most frequently are: The tragedy, the heartaches, that obviously follow in the wake of "movements" such as the Townsend plan that cannot succeed and that draw to themselves thousands, if not hundreds of thousands, of persons who believe they are going to benefit; and secondly, it seems to me that the House committee, headed by Representative Bell, of Missouri, overplayed its hand with the result that it has brought upon House committees the same public disgust and distrust as characterizes 90 per cent of the Senate investigations.

Each of these conditions is to be deplored. Each is definitely destructive. There can be no more excuse for some of the methods employed by the House committee in crucifying Dr. Townsend than for Dr. Townsend himself to wreck hearts and hopes and homes by pushing forward such a miserably impossible proposition as his $200 per month pension program.

The House committee had within its power opportunity to do a magnificent job in exposing the racketeering that become part and parcel of the Townsend plan. It had within its hands the capacity to educate millions within the United States against following such an illusion, such a mirage, as the Townsend plan. If it had confined itself to that work, Representative Bell and his committee should receive the plaudits of the nation. But the sad story is that the committee under Mr. Bell's guidance allowed itself to become an agency of prosecution, even persecution, rather than an unbiased investigating unit, determined only to obtain the truth.

Committee Errs

Since there never was any question that the Townsend nostrum would fall of its own weight eventually, it is difficult to understand why the committee resorted to the tactics it used. I watched some of those hearings. As the committee delved deeper into the activities of Dr. Townsend and his associates, it became infuriated. That was where it made its big mistake and it is going to be quite a long time before House committees again can have a reputation throughout the country of conducting unbiased and reasonable investigations.

Dr. Townsend was sufficiently "hard boiled" to justify the committee in making a vigorous investigation. He was sufficiently indifferent to their offers or hints of co-operation to warrant a feeling on the committee's part that they had to "bear down." Yet, it must be said the committee went beyond all reason and I imagine that in the end it will flare back on the individuals.

Now, Dr. Townsend surely cannot blame anyone other than himself for the fact that he is faced with proceedings by the United States attorney. It will be remembered, of course, that Dr. Townsend deliberately walked out of the committee and refused to testify. That has always been held as contempt and Congress has the right to punish for contempt. In this instance, the House of Representatives elected to turn Dr. Townsend's case over to the United States attorney for punishment in court rather than to employ a House vote which might send the elderly dreamer to jail.

Further, the whole Townsend investigation has turned out to be something of a mess like the Townsend plan itself.

* * *

Second Type of Politics

Thus, there is every evidence of a second type of politics in this investigation. The evidence of politics lay in the fact that the House voted the inquiry largely because many of the individual House members were afraid, they were too cowardly, to take a definite stand in their home districts against the Townsendites. True, they did not know how strong the Townsend movement was. So, as politicians always do, they dodged the issue and moved to expose it through the medium of a House investigation rather than fight individually to show how ridiculous, how unsound, the plan was.

Having set up the picture showing an utterly impossible program on the part of Dr. Townsend and his associates and followers, the House politicians were confronted suddenly by Dr. Townsend's arrogance in his refusal to testify. That presented a sudden change in the scenery. To explain the dangers in this new problem, it is only necessary to say that if the House had acted promptly by voting that Dr. Townsend was in contempt and must spend some time in jail, I expect the result would have been martyrdom for Dr. Townsend. Martyrdom is always bad from a political standpoint if the opposition has the martyr.

The house, therefore, has turned over the affair to the courts and the courts, being slow moving as they always are, will not get around to prosecution of the case until it is too late to have any influence on the election. So we can see readily that Dr. Townsend is left out in the cold. He can neither use the influence that is characteristic of martyrdom nor can he say that his skirts are clear. The house has left him hanging conveniently in mid-air and it was done solely for political reasons.

There may be some more hearings on the Townsend plan during the summer but the chances are that Representative Bell will not call the committee together again for some months. Practically, the case is closed. It has undoubtedly stopped to a large measure the drain that the Townsend organization was making on the unthinking, the aged and the destitute whose quarters, dimes and nickels have financed the thing thus far. While the committee did a good job by exposing the character of the scheme, I still am doubtful that it has brought to itself or to the house of representatives any fresh confidence in our governmental structure.

17-Year Locusts

The national capital, along with many other sections of the country, has been listening to the purring of hordes of "locusts." I use the word locusts in quotation marks because they are not really locusts. They are cicadas but to the most of us they are and will remain the seventeen-year locusts.

It is said that the first colonists in America, never before having met with the insects and believing that everything of God's creation was accounted for in the Bible, concluded they were locusts and the name has stuck. In any event, they appear in greatest numbers at seventeen-year intervals and 1936 seems to be a banner year.

Back in 1919, trees in many sections of the country were pierced by tiny saw-like instruments which the Department of Agriculture says are part of the equipment of the female cicadas. Billions of eggs were deposited under the soft bark. A month or two later, grubs emerged on the branches and dropped unnoticed to the earth.

Then, the chronology of the life of these cicadas becomes a matter of darkness for seventeen long years. The insect in grub form burrowed itself in the soil and subsisted on the juices of roots. As far as anyone knows they did little or no harm but after sixteen years and a few months of this life, the grubs awoke this spring and out they came. They acted on instinct, of course.

Through the last several weeks these great beetle-like bugs with wings like isinglass have been humming and thrumming and leaving their empty shells attached to trees and grasses.

During that period, the males have spent their daylight hours singing. The Department of Agriculture is not quite sure why this singing has gone on because it has ascertained that all of the lady cicadas are quite deaf.

Perhaps I have devoted too much space to the story of the seventeen-year locust. Perhaps the seventeen-year locust is not important at all except to the robins and the starlings and the sparrows and the other birds which have had a feast in 1936 that almost no other bird now living has known. But I have a thought about these seventeen-year locusts, a train of thoughts, in fact. They lead to this:

What will conditions be in 1953, or seventeen years hence when those humans on earth will hear again the mating song of the locusts?

Will the policies and the principles initiated by Franklin D. Roosevelt and called "the New Deal" be firmly imbedded as American traditions or will they be cast out as impractical and forgotten? Will the changes in civilization be such that people will be willing to submit to regimentation, to have their government tell them what to do and how to do it, or will this nation be a nation of individuals who insist upon the rights and the privileges which the founders of our country believed to be just and right?

You Can't Rely on Tomorrow

"Manana," meaning tomorrow, is the usual answer a foreigner receives if he asks a Central or South American to do a piece of work which will be well paid for when it is performed.

Perhaps it is the heat. Perhaps it is just the nature of the South American native. But it cannot be wholly his nature, for when a war is going on he can fight hard and consecutively.

* * *

I have known many men who were not at all lazy, who would toil like Trojans after they started, but the difficulty of getting them started was so great that few people would take the trouble. I think most of us are a little like that. There are men—and I know some of them, who love work as fat men love food, and who are never happy when they are idle. But to most men, the business of getting started is unwelcome.

* * *

I have told before the story of Balzac, the astoundingly prolific French novelist. He loved to loaf, as many other men do, but he knew that if he didn't write there would be neither food nor fame for him. Being quite able to use both of these, Balzac hired a man whom he charged with the duty of chaining him to a chair, and not unchaining him till an adequate number of pages had been written.

Sometimes the novelist would get restive, leave off his writing and suggest to his keeper that enough work had been done for the day. But the servant was inexorable. When the regular number of sheets were unfilled, there was no furlough for M. Balzac. He would beg and plead with his servant, but all in vain. At last with a weary sigh Balzac would take up his work, and write furiously so as to get to an end of the business of that day. The world ought to remember that servant as a real benefactor of the race.

Happy are the people who escape from the curse of restlessness or laziness. It can soon become almost a disease. It has ruined the prospects of many people who without it would have been among the keenest minded and most useful of people. But since it exists, it must be taken into calculations.

* * *

If you have this restlessness or laziness, your work will be twice as hard, for you will cull out little holidays all the time and have to toil doubly hard making up. It is fortunately a fault that many people lack. But they are the lucky ones. If you have it get rid of it, and get rid of it as soon as it is humanly possible. If you don't, you will run for the rest of your life at half speed, and probably not arrive in a very desirable destination when you should be taking life more easy.

Uncle Phil Says:

Work First, Then Play

Play is an important part in the program of life, but work must be done before we can afford to play.

Somehow or other it seems so much easier to profit by the mistakes of others than by our own.

It is not a few faint wishes, but a lifelong struggle, that makes us valiant.

Reliability First

The worst thing that can happen to a man is to lose his reputation for reliability. Nothing can square him.

Since there are so many mistakes to make, what's the use of making the same one twice?

It isn't necessary to be forward to make progress.

Earth's Temperature May Be 8,000 Degrees 100 Miles Down

Wells, water, gas or oil, show what the interior of the earth is like. Deep wells in California reveal that the temperature of the earth rises about one degree for every 25 feet of depth. In Wyoming the temperature mounts one degree for each 22 feet. At 3,500 feet there, water boils.

Other parts of the earth are not so hot, however. The average rise in temperature is only about 80 degrees per mile, or about one degree for each 66 feet of depth. At this rate, the temperature of the earth 100 miles down may be 8,000 degrees, only a thousand degrees cooler than the sun's surface!

Blemishes Made Her Old Looking

Face Clear Again with Cuticura Soap and Ointment

Here is a letter every skin sufferer should read. Its message is vital. "There were blemishes on my face, of external origin, and they made me look old and haggard. They were red, hard and large. They would hurt, and when I scratched them the skin would become irritated, and I would lie awake at night and start digging at my face.

"But after using two cakes of Cuticura Soap and one tin of Cuticura Ointment my face was cleared again." (Signed) Mrs. L. Whetzler, 2nd St., Floreffe, Pa., June 15, 1935.

Physicians can understand such letters. The Cuticura formulas have proved their effectiveness for over half a century. Remember, Cuticura Soap and Ointment are also for pimples, rashes, ringworm, burning of eczema and other externally caused skin blemishes. All druggists. Soap 25c. Ointment 25c.—Adv.

An American Version of Buddhism's Advent Into Japan

AT THE BATH

DON'T think of coming to Japan without making Miyanoshita and Hakone, heart of the natural hot springs country, part of your itinerary; that is, if you wish to meet nice people and clean people, like, for example, one of my own countrymen who blew me to a beautification in one of the numerous boiling pools prevailing in that region.

Not only was he a bearcat for taking the waters twice a day at any and all temperatures, but a guide book as well in matters pertaining to history following the dawn of the Christian era. He was at his best when reviewing the introduction of Buddhism into Korea, China and Japan. At 118 degrees Fahrenheit, seated on a hot rock, his skin glowing like a boiled lobster's, he was 100 per cent when discussing the past.

"Actual dates never meant anything to me," he said, "and I don't think they do to most people. One hundred, three hundred, five hundred years one way or another is near enough. What I'm interested in is legend and mythology, if you get what I mean. Now, take the Buddhist religion and the story of how it came to this part of the world. Swell stuff I call it and worth telling, if you don't mind listening. It shows how that thing called faith takes root and becomes permanent, belief that time cannot shake from its foundations.

Monks Camp in a Tree.

"Anyhow, 53 Buddhist monks shook from their sandled feet the dust of India, reaching, after a year's pilgrimage, the peninsula of Korea, now called Chosen. Making their way to the northeastern section in the region of the Diamond mountains, they came to Yutenji. I was there in 1918 and know the country thoroughly, but don't get the idea that I guarantee the legend which was handed out to me. Accept or reject it, as you please. Remember, however, that the prevalence of Buddhism in Korea and its spread to China and Japan is founded on what occurred at the time to which I refer."

"Wasn't this information to be found in existing books?" I queried.

"Never as I'm giving it to you," said the American, "and I very much doubt that you will find it anywhere between covers. Appears to have been handed down from century to century, along with a thousand other tales, many of which I have heard. But of the bunch, this one is the best.

"As I was saying, the 53 monks, fed up on touring, finally came to a mammoth spring, beside which grew one whale of a tree, with branches extending into a considerable area of space. In its welcome shade the monks rested, bathed in the pool and had a pow-wow. Night came down. 'We may as well pitch our tents and stay here for a spell,' said one of the Buddhists. 'I'm for that,' said the head monk, 'but not on the ground. Safety first, in a strange country. Let's climb the tree and sleep in its branches.'

Dragon Disturbs Sleep.

"About midnight, as the monks, all spread out on the leafy branches, were sleeping like one man, and dreaming of India, a dragon, with flaming eyes, a long tongue and a spine of sharp prongs suddenly appeared on the opposite side of the pool and began to bellow in thunderous tones, inviting the Buddhists to come down and get theirs. Nothing doing; the tree suited the lodgers all right, all right, and that was that. What does the dragon do but cause a hurricane to come romping down through what is now known as 'Sleeping Dog Pass,' so named because it was so steep that a dog had to take a nap before attempting to climb it, and literally blow the tenement house tree from the landscape."

To all intents and purposes, the history of Buddhism in Korea should at this point have to come to a conclusion; it was quite abrupt. To lighten the suspense, my informant slid from his hot rock, deflated his lungs and sank from view, returning rather playfully after a few seconds and blowing like a pup seal.

Monks Vanquish Dragon.

"Well, sir," he went on, swiping the hot water from his jowls, "it certainly looked bad for those 53 monks when the tree left for parts unknown. But Buddhists don't quail from trouble; they can take it. After the tree had disappeared, what did the dragon behold but the batch of 53 holy men suspended in midair between heaven and earth, reclining or seated in the same positions they had occupied in the tree before the blast, and with no visible means of support. It was a sock in the eye for the dragon.

"Into the pool below, the monks cast prayer scrolls and magic gadgets that caused the water to boil violently and to fill the air with steam. Blinded by this vapor, the dragon, confused for the first time in his long life, floundered about, lost his footing, tumbled into the hot water and sank, boiled to a turn, never to rise again. At daybreak, the victorious Buddhists, descending to earth, set up a shrine and took possession of the property in the name of Buddha, the Great and All Powerful Defender of the Faith."

IF YOU are one of the girls who have written to Karen Morley asking for some of her old clothes, cheer up—you may receive something soon.

The lovely Karen found, not long ago, that she had to put on some weight. So she did; moved to the beach, and put on fifteen pounds. She was delighted, but naturally none of her clothes would fit, so she's sending them to the girls who have written to her in the past. Lucky girls—and generous Karen! Some of our pretty ladies of the screen would have sold the cast-off garments, or saved them, just in case they needed clothes of that period in future, and grew slim enough to wear them.

In the course of a personal appearance tour, John Boles recently visited Lynchburg, Va., in order to take a look at Randolph-Macon college, which his wife attended. The visit was a triumph, with the girls mobbing John, and John telephoning his wife, who is in London, from the president's office.

John Boles

But imagine the chagrin of the business man who formally presented him to an audience as "Major Bowes!" However, it's innocent blunders like that one that produce spontaneous laughs.

Nowadays the door that leads to endless opportunities seems to be the one that leads to a radio studio—almost any radio studio. Not long ago Anne Nichols attended a broadcast of the radio version of her current play, "Pre-Honeymoon." (It was Miss Nichols, you'll recall, who wrote "Able's Irish Rose.") In the cast engaged for the broadcast was a girl named Pat Lederer. And Miss Nichols liked her work so much that she promptly engaged her for a role in the stage version of the play.

"Fury" is one of the pictures you'll want to see. It's a picture with a message, a scathing indictment of lynching, and the leading roles are magnificently played by Sylvia Sidney and Spencer Tracy. Don't miss it.

Apparently Eleanor Powell has gone romantic in a big way. The young man is John Payne, who hails from Richmond, Va., and is a grandson of John Howard Payne, author of "Home Sweet Home." The two young people were in a play together in New York. Eleanor was instrumental in persuading him to go to Hollywood to work in "Dodsworth," and has been coaching him for the screen.

Incidentally, Eleanor might never have attained the heights in Hollywood if she hadn't been annoyed because somebody patronized her when she was introduced as a tap dancer. Right then she decided that she'd show those Hollywood people what she could do as an actress.

Nowadays when you see and hear an actor singing in a picture, the chances are that what you hear wasn't recorded while the actor was photographed. This may be a good idea, because so many singers make funny faces when they sing, but on the other hand, it destroys the illusion that the singer is really singing.

But Grace Moore is lucky. She not only sings beautifully, but she looks beautiful while she's doing it. So she sings while the cameras grind, and the result is perfect.

If you want to be slender, says Mary Boland, don't sleep too much. She gives a rule that she has found effective during her long and successful career on the stage, and she's observed it during her equally successful movie career.

Mary Boland

"Six hours' sleep for a man, seven for a woman, eight for a fool," says she. But she won't find many followers in Hollywood, because movie stars are told to get plenty of sleep so that they won't have circles under their eyes.

Paramount executives ought to rejoice over "The Princess Comes Across." It's a delightful picture, with Carole Lombard and Fred MacMurray at their best, and offers both a delightful satire on moviedom and a murder mystery for your entertainment.

ODDS AND ENDS . . . Anita Louise returned from Europe on the first sailing of the Queen Mary, and Irene Dunne and her husband sailed on the return voyage . . . Fans have sent Anne Shirley so many requests for locks of her hair that she'd be bald if she complied with them . . . In "The Garden of Allah" you'll see Jadaan, the horse Valentino rode in so many pictures . . . Maureen O'Sullivan can't get away to visit her family in Ireland, so she's bringing them all to Hollywood . . . Erick Rhodes is going to try to swim across Boulder Dam, a distance of eight miles.

No. 1889-B

Who isn't excited about the new wider shoulder width that tends to slenderize the waistline?

Note the unusual bodice lines, the panel extending to the hem, and kick pleats that contribute dash and ease. The natty collar is just right to take a pin, clip or posy. The frock is quickly fashioned and costs so little to make.

Barbara Bell Pattern No. 1889-B is available in sizes 14, 16, 18, 20; 40 and 42. Corresponding bust measurements 32, 34, 36, 38, 40 and 42. Size 18 requires 4⅜ yards of 39-inch material. Send fifteen cents in coin for the pattern.

The Summer Pattern Book containing 100 Barbara Bell well-planned, easy-to-make patterns is ready. Send 15 cents in coin for your copy.

Care of Little Things

Life is made up of little things and he that scorns them despises his own real interest. There is an old and true saying, "Take care of the minutes and the hours will take care of themselves." This may be rendered, take care of the little things, and the more mighty matters will be likely to be well done.—J. W. Barker.

LIVELY ACTIVITY AMONG COUNTY 4-H CLUBS AT PRESENT

As part of the educational feature of the 4-H club programs in Pennington County the assistant county agent, Howard Grow, and Thelma Solie, county club leader, have spent some time in drilling 4-H club members in parliamentary procedure and explaining Roberts Rules of Orders. Every club is devoting at least 15 minutes of three meetings to parliamentary law.

Mr. Grow is planning to visit the homes of the club members and check up their projects. Every project should be well on its way at this date. The county fair is only six weeks away. All record blanks and projects are due at that time.

Miss Solie, has been visiting the girls enrolled in 4-H club projects and has met with several project meetings to help the girls with demonstrations and project material. Each girl enrolled in the bread, cake or meal planning and preparations projects is expected to give a demonstration. Several demonstrations are also being given in the clothing projects. If any questions come up in regard to demonstrations, Miss Solie will be glad to help any of the girls with whatever information they may need.

High Temperatures Hit N. W. Region Wednesday

Hot weather arrived in this section Wednesday, with the mercury registering well up in the 90s. The official reading at Grand Forks in the afternoon was 97, while at Bismarck, N. D., the mercury soared to 107. No rain has fallen in this locality during the past two weeks, and as a result the crops are beginning to show the effects of a lack of moisture. Somewhat cooler is the prediction for Friday.

RED LAKE FALLS HIJACKERS PLEAD GUILTY TO CHARGE

Four confessed liquor hijackers pleaded guilty to kidnaping charges Monday before Judge M. M. Joyce in federal court in St. Paul.

They are Leonard Parish, Russell Arend and Bernard Martineau of St. Paul and Matthew Stegbauer of Minneapolis.

They will be sentenced July 27 following investigation by the probation officer. The kidnap charges grew out of a hijacking last March 30 near Mentor, Minn., where a truck carrying $3,000 worth of liquor belonging to the municipal liquor store of Red Lake Falls, was halted by two automobiles.

The hijackers took the drivers, Felix Barrette and Fred Farrington, into one of the cars. Both cars and the truck were driven toward Crookston but the truck and one of the cars became stuck in the snow near there.

The hijackers drove the other car to Grand Forks, N. D., taking the two truck drivers with them. Later they extricated the truck and the other car and released the truck drivers.

In taking the drivers over the state line into North Dakota, they fell afoul of the federal law.

CONGRESS QUITS WITH PASSAGE OF RELIEF MEASURE

Congress quit Washington Monday for the political wars—a four month's campaign in which major controversies of the 74th congress are expected to be principal issues.

Republicans said they would base their attack on the New Deal upon many of the major acts passed during the second congress of President Roosevelt's administration. Democrats indicated willingness to accept the challenge.

The second session of the 74th congress ended early Sunday after a week of hectic activity that saw passage of the new budget tax bill and the deficiency relief bill carrying $1,425,000,000 to continue work relief.

The 74th congress was the largest spender in peace time history. It added about $20,000,000,000 to the $15,000,000,000 appropriated by the first New Deal congress, the 73rd, for a record total of $35,233,000,000 in four years.

Major acts of the session beginning last January 3, were:

1. Enactment of the soil conservation act involving indirect control of farm production and benefit payments to replace the AAA.
2. Approval of immediate payment of the $2,000,000,000 soldiers' bonus over President Roosevelt's veto.
3. Appropriation of $1,425,000,000 to continue work relief under the WPA.
4. Extension of the neutrality act designed to keep the United States free from foreign conflicts.

State Road Program Awaiting Action by Executive Council

The state highway department's department's proposed $7,400,000 federal aid road construction program for the fiscal year beginning July 1 cannot be launched until the state executive council authorizes the sale of bonds to meet the state's share of the program, according to N. W. Elsberg, state highway commissioner.

The legislature authorized a $4,000,000 issue of highway bonds to match a $3,400,00 federal aid allowance for this fiscal year. The executive council, however, must approve the bond issue before the highway department can obtain the money. Mr. Elsberg said he hopes for early action by the council so there will not be too much delay in getting the program under contract.

GEORGE W. BISKEY CALLED BY DEATH

George W. Biskey, long-time resident of this village, and veteran mail carrier on the rural route here until his retirement a few months ago, died Thursday afternoon at a Thief River Falls hospital of complications resulting from asthma with which he had suffered many years. Born at Rockford, Minn. on October 3rd, 1879, Mr. Biskey was 56 years, 8 months and 22 days of age. He spent his early years in and around Rockford, and was united in marriage to Exilia Marier there in December 1904. The following spring they came to St. Hilaire and Mr. Biskey was employed in the sawmill until he was appointed mail carrier in 1906 which position he held continuously until forced by ill health to retire last fall. Last winter Mr. and Mrs. Biskey went to Colorado in hopes a change of climate would benefit him. They returned about a month ago with intention of closing up their affairs here before moving to Colorado to make their permanent home.

Blessed with a cheerful nature, Mr. Biskey was always willing and agreeable despite his affliction which made life almost a burden at times. Many friends in the village and on the rural route which he served so long will miss his cheerful smile and ready greetings.

To mourn the loss of a kind and devoted husband, father and brother, Mr. Biskey leaves his widow and twelve children. The children are Mrs. Melvin Anderson, Fred Biskey, Mrs. Z. Picard, Mrs. Conrad Hovie, Mary, George, Jr., John, Ralph, Robert, Warren, Marjorie and Elaine who all reside in this vicinity or at home. He is also survived by his mother, Mrs. Jane Biskey of Buffalo, Minn., and by the following sisters and brothers: Mrs. Mary Perisian of Buffalo, Mrs. James Cooper of South Haven, Mrs. Anna Gallagher of Minneapolis, Mrs. Arthur Erickson of Osseo, Mrs. Robert Higgins of Buffalo, Mrs. Andrew Nelson of Sauk Rapids, Alphey Biskey of Wahkon, William Biskey of Clear Lake, and John Biskey at Swatara, and by three grandchildren. All the relatives mentioned were present at the funeral service which was conducted by Rev. Geo. V. Peterson of the Evang. Mission church at the Norwegian Lutheran church Monday afternoon. The church edifice was filled to overflowing by the many friends who came to pay their last respects to Mr. Biskey, and the floral tributes were both numerous and beautiful, showing the esteem in which the deceased was held in the community. Interment was made in the cemetery east of the village.

Friends thruout the entire community join in extending heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved family and relatives in their sad loss.

LEAVE ON TRIP TO WESTERN STATES

Mr. and Mrs. Verner Nelson and daughter, Clarine, of Warren, Mrs. Esther Schantzen and son of Minneapolis, accompanied by Mike Fricker, father of Mesdames Nelson and Schantzen, left from here Wednesday morning on a motor trip to Wyoming and Colorado. They will visit with Mr. and Mrs. William Peterson at Laramie, Wyo., with Mr. and Mrs. Nels Nelson and family at Golden, Colo., besides with friends in that section. They expect to be gone about three weeks. Possibly the one looking forward with keenest anticipation to this trip was Mr. Fricker who had a try at mountain trout fishing out there last season. He went well equipped this trip, and there just won't be any big ones getting away from him this time.

Tales About Town

Happenings of the Week, Told in Brief. News Concerning People You Know

Thorstein Walseth is building a neat cottage on his farm southeast of the village.

The Hesse residence property, the former Hans Wilson place, has been repainted recently and now presents a very neat appearance.

Theo. Johnson is back on the job as carrier on the Hazel route following a vacation which he and family enjoyed by taking an auto tour.

Mr. and Mrs. Ed. J. Eide and family motored here last week from their home at Duluth and visited with relatives in the community south of Hazel.

Larson Bros. started construction work this week on a new warehouse, size 22x30, in the rear of their store building. The warehouse will be used for storage of heavy hardware and bulky goods.

Mr. and Mrs. Nels Hauge and family, Bertha and Henry Hauge of Ruthven, Iowa, Mr. and Mrs. S. J. Hauge, Bertine and Rasmus Helgoe of Halstad were guests last Sunday at the farm home of Mr. and Mrs. Otto Johnson east of the village.

Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Mortenson left yesterday for Isle, Minn., to look after property interests there, and to visit with friends. They were accompanied as far as Detroit Lakes by Mrs. Richard Larson and son, Raymond, who were to visit relatives there.

Kundert-Weed

A pretty June wedding took place Sunday afternoon at 1 o'clock at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Chas. L. Kundert of this city when their second daughter, Miss Marjorie Joyce Kundert became the bride of Dr. Vernon A. Weed of this city, son of Mr. and Mrs. Alex Weed of Big Fork, Mont.

The ceremony was performed by Rev. H. N. Lindholm pastor of the First Presbyterian church in the presence of some 35 guests. The bride wore a full length gown of aqua-marine mousseline de soie and carried an arm bouquet of white roses. She was attended by her sister, Miss Marcia Kundert who wore pink mousseline de soie and carried pink roses. Carl A. Kankel was the groom's attendant.

The wedding march was played by Miss Jane Buse, Mrs. V. B. Pushing of Olivia, sister of the bride, sang "Because." The home was decorated with seasonal flowers.

Red Cross:—Next meeting of the local Red Cross will be held next Tuesday evening at 8:00 at the home of Mrs. L. F. Olson.

The Wylie Co-op. Elevator Company will hold its annual meeting at Wylie on Saturday, July 18. The meeting will open at 1:00 P. M.

Frank Sweet, local station agent, motored Saturday to Crookston and took a train from there to Alexandria where he spent Sunday with his parents.

Several parties from the drought stricken areas in North Dakota have been in this locality this week looking over the country with intention of locating.

Mrs. Clarence Hallstrom entertained a group of friends at her home Tuesday afternoon at needlework and conversation. A delicious lunch was served by the hostess.

Mr. and Mrs. Roy Sumpter and family returned a few days after having spent several months at New London where Mr. Sumpter was employed on a state park project.

Ernest H. Johnson, district representative of the Brown-Williamson Tobacco Corporation with headquarters at St. Cloud, motored up Sunday to spend a week with his father, brothers and sister at their home west of town. Mr. Johnson will return Sunday to St. Cloud.

Meeting of the River Falls Home Management Project group was held Wednesday last week at the home of Mrs. Otto Johnson, with Mrs. Herman Jepson and Miss Iris Larson giving the lesson. Hostesses were Mesdames Frank Johnson, P. Omundson, Ernest Erickson and Otto Johnson.

Mrs. John Henderson Hoffman of Journey's End, Coatsville, Pa., announces the engagement of her sister, Miss Harriet E. Ives to Thomas C. Schermerhorn of Philadelphia, Pa. The wedding will take place in October.

The above taken from the Red Lake Falls Gazette, will be of interest to many St. Hilaire people as well as former residents of the village, as Miss Ives was at one time a resident of St. Hilaire.

WARNING

Youngsters who ride bicycles on the walks must bear in mind that the walks are intended for pedestrians who have the right of way at all times. While we realize it is often dangerous to ride on the highway, and are willing to see the walks used for that purpose to a certain extent, we wish to make it plain to bike riders and their parents that the walks are not bicycle speedways, nor shall pedestrians be molested in any way. Failure to obey this warning will result in enforcement of the ordinance which prohibits entirely the use of walks for bicycles.

LOCAL TEAM BEATS OKLEE HERE SUNDAY

Before a large crowd of enthusiastic fans, the St. Hilaire ball team defeated the Oklee aggregation in a rather one-sided contest on local grounds last Sunday. The final score was 18 to 2.

Bill Hallaback on the mound for St. Hilaire, allowed but little in the way of hits and he was given airtight support by his team mates. The St. Hilaire team now has five straight games to its credit in the season schedule of the Northern Minnesota League.

The team goes Saturday to Plummer to play a game as a feature of the big Fourth of July celebration being put on in that village. A large number of fans have signified their intention of accompanying the team.

MISS ERDMANN WED TO FRED E. MILLER

At a pretty home wedding which occurred Tuesday afternoon, Miss Marie Erdmann, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Erdmann of River township, became the bride of Mr. Fred E. Miller of Red Lake Falls. The ceremony took place in the presence of relatives and close friends of the contracting parties. Following the ceremony, a sumptuous wedding supper was served to those present. Mr. and Mrs. Miller left for a short wedding trip to the Iron Range country after which they will return to make their home at Red Lake Falls. Friends thruout this community will join in extending felecitations and best wishes to Mr. and Mrs. Miller.

BAND TO RED LAKE FALLS

The school band has been engaged as one of three bands to furnish music at the big celebration at Red Lake Falls on July Fourth. The youngsters, in charge of Supt. M. A. Graham, will go down in the forenoon and will spend the entire day at Red Lake Falls.

RED LAKE FALLS TO CELEBRATE FOURTH

All roads in Northwestern Minnesota lead to Red Lake Falls Saturday, July 4th for the biggest and best Independence Day celebration in this part of the state. The day's program starts with a big parade at 10:30 o'clock Saturday morning and this will be followed by a fine program of sports, foot races, novelty races, horse races and other contests. A baseball game between Red Lake Falls' and Thief River Falls' fast team is scheduled for 3:30 o'clock.

St. Hilaire, McIntosh and Red Lake Falls bands will furnish music for the celebration and will give frequent concerts. The fireworks display in the evening, consisting of heavy artillery bombshells, fiery set pieces and giant sky-rockets will be as spectacular as any exhibit that can be seen in the Northwest. There will be dancing at the American Legion Pavilion at the Fairgrounds and at the new City Auditorium down town to the music of high grade orchestras.

The citizens of Red Lake Falls invite the people of neighboring towns and communities to celebrate with them July Fourth and promise that there will be never a dull moment.

ST. HILAIRE PLAYS GOODRIDGE SUNDAY

The local ball team goes next Sunday to Goodridge for a return game with the team of that village. Goodridge is reported to have improved its lineup since its first game with the locals, and is prepared to put up a good battle next Sunday. As has been the case with all games played thus far this season, it is anticipated a good sized crowd of rooters will accompany the team Sunday with expectations of seeing St. Hilaire annex its sixth straight victory.

WILL PICNIC JULY FOURTH

The Swedish Lutheran congregation of Black River is sponsoring a community picnic to be held July Fourth at the C. A. Melin farm in Polk Center. Dinner will be served at the grounds at noon, and refreshments will be served during the day. The folks of Black River community extend a cordial invitation to everyone to join with them in celebrating the national holiday.

BANK ASSETS SOLD

At a hearing held Monday at Thief River Falls, the remaining assets of the defunct Merchants State Bank of St. Hilaire were sold. Final dividend to depositors will be paid in a short time.

All Set for Big Race

Washington.—The Republicans and the Democrats have their Presidential tickets. The elephant and the donkey have their jockeys for the campaign. The tumult and the shouting—and the blistering, withering fire of politics, have begun.

It is a long way to the finish line where the checkered flag falls for the winner of the race. But the big fight is really on and it is interesting as well as significant to note how it has started.

It is always a sure sign that party leaders respect and fear their opponents when they start a campaign with a declaration that the enemy is weak; that his selection resulted from chicanery or bossism, or that the particular candidate selected has been put up as a sacrifice. That is what has happened already in the current campaign, and you can expect it to continue because it is stating no secret to disclose that the New Dealers fear Gov. Alf M. Landon of Kansas, the Republican nominee, and that the Republican leadership, beneath the surface, are wishing for a clairvoyant or crystal gazer to tell them how much of a chance they have to beat President-candidate Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Of course, no astute political observer would dare predict at this stage of the game who the winner will be. On the other hand, it is part of the psychology of the game of politics for politicians to claim everything in sight. Yet, I know that each side expects a real battle, a horse race. The November result is pretty likely to be determined by events of the next two months. At the end of that time, trends will be evident and some appraisal of the campaign will be possible. In the interim, claims and high sounding phrases will be offered by the basketful and enthusiasm will be promoted. Yet, the end, the result, will not begin to be evident until afterward because this is the season for the tumult and shouting.

I cannot concur in the claims already advanced by Postmaster General-Chairman Farley that the election is in the bag for Mr. Roosevelt any more than I can believe that Chairman John Hamilton of the Republicans is equipped with special foresight enabling him to say that Governor Landon is a sure winner.

I said above that the campaign has all of the appearance of a horse race and a close one. To that extent it is a condition much more favorable to the Republicans than obtained three months ago when, as I recall, I suggested that if the election were held at that time, Mr. Roosevelt had a 60-40 advantage over anybody the Republicans could name. To say now, therefore, that the race probably will be close necessarily indicates two things: unification of Republican strength, and some mistakes by the Democratic leadership (one may properly inquire what has brought about the unification of the Republicans). The answer seems rather obvious. It is that the Republican party has been reorganized from tip to toe. The reorganization has been more sweeping and more effective and the result much more satisfactory to the country than most political observers had any reason to expect. I say "satisfactory to the country" because the Republican party is a major political unit and, though at present a minority party, will come back to power some time. The Democrats have been a minority party, and the course of human events has witnessed it restored to power. So the people have a stake in either party, and whichever one proceeds to improve its political structure is giving something of vital value to the country as a whole.

G. O. P. Cleans House

The Democratic attack on the Republicans for the last sixteen years has been concentrated to a large extent on the charge that the Republicans were boss-controlled. Chairman Farley has continually harped on that alleged condition. When the Republicans did their house cleaning job at Cleveland, they took away an important issue from the Democrats, but even so some of the Democrats and some independents, like Senator George Norris of Nebraska, refused to accept the purging as genuine.

Senator Norris disclosed his attitude very definitely the other day when he broadcast a radio speech. He employed the time-worn allegation that the Cleveland convention was dominated by "special interests," and that the platform adopted there was plainly reactionary."

Senator Norris has not supported a Republican candidate for 12 years, although he ran for re-election six years ago as a Republican. He believes in Mr. Roosevelt and insists that Mr. Roosevelt alone can save the country.

It is to be assumed also that Mr. Roosevelt will have the support of the LaFollettes, Senator Bob and Governor Phil, in Wisconsin. These men, however, have labeled themselves as Progressives, and have not carried the party label of either the Democrats or Republicans.

There will be others of the same warp and woof. There will be old-line Democrats who will do as Senator Copeland of New York has done, take a walk. Alfred E. Smith is not going to support the New Dealers nor will a great many of his followers. So, it is obvious that each party will be subjected to defections of one kind or another.

* * *

Some Mistakes

Now, concerning mistakes that have been made:

Chairman Farley made a bad mistake politically when he said that Alfred M. Landon was "just the little-known governor of a typical prairie state." That remark has been rising to haunt the Democratic chairman almost daily since it escaped from his lips, and unless I miss my guess he will hear it repeated, thrown into his teeth, so many times between now and November that the words will give him a stomachache equivalent to green apples.

The reasons this remark was a serious blunder are two. First and foremost is that every state in the Union rightfully has justified pride of its people, its commerce and industry and its future prospects. Every state feels profound resentment when its capacity to do great things is questioned. Consequently, when Mr. Farley catalogued Kansas as a typical prairie state and its governor as little-known, there was a surging tidal wave of resentment, and it was not confined to Kansas alone.

The second reason why Mr. Farley's remark cut the wrong way was that Mr. Farley is a New Yorker and a Tammanyite. There is something repulsive to the millions of mid-westerners about Tammany, and a very great many residents of prairie states long have objected to the attempt of certain New Yorkers to "run things" for the whole United States.

Another mistake that has been made, really a series of mistakes, is the coercion that has been permitted to go on among those receiving relief. It is not exactly fair to charge Mr. Farley and President Roosevelt with these, yet I am inclined to believe they could have prevented local Democratic politicians from attempting to force relief clients to vote the Democratic ticket. That condition has obtained in as many as fifteen states.

It is one of those things in politics that naturally causes a revulsion of feeling, yet it is one of those things with which the leaders possibly may have had nothing directly to do. The fact that they might have prevented it and did not is accepted by the average voter in exactly the same light as though a written order directing such procedure had been issued.

The handling of the tax question by the administration in this session of congress has not been of a character warranting too much praise. It has alienated many influential persons who might otherwise have supported Mr. Roosevelt. Of course, in the end the President can say that he wanted additional funds in order to start the balancing of the national budget, but I know of a great number of Democrats in congress who have been thoroughly displeased by the White House insistence for a reform tax law rather than a revenue law. It seems to me, therefore, that a considerable amount of campaign material will be developed from this fact.

And so it goes with Democratic mistakes.

On the Other Hand

On the other side of the picture, the Republicans can make mistakes yet, plenty of them. They have an advantage over the Democrats in one regard: they have not been charged with the responsibility of government for the last three and one-half years, and therefore will not have to answer for mistakes in administration. It lies in the hands of the Republican managers, therefore, to prevent political mistakes between now and election if they are capable of so doing. They have started out with an offensive campaign and have an opportunity to continue it, whereas the Democrats can conduct an offensive campaign only so long as they can avoid entering into a defense of Roosevelt New Deal policies.

I understand that the Democratic national committee is loaded to the dashboard with material for attack, but from this stage of the battle it seems quite apparent that they are going to need plans for defense as well as offense, and they will not have enthusiastic support from some spots in their own army.

The Democrats are prepared to attack Governor Landon on the theory that the country cannot feel sure of his plans and policies; that he has done nothing to enable the country to appraise him and that there is no assurance, in event of his election, that he is a big enough man for the job of Chief Executive. On the other hand, the Republicans can counter-attack by using the language of Senator Copeland, New York Democrat, who declared that no man nor party disregarding its pledges was to be trusted, and right there is where the New Dealers must begin to defend.

Thief River Falls—The Minnesota Farmers Unoin passed out of existence through action of a special state convention. The name of the organization was changed to "Co-operative Activities," complying with a court order. Delegates voted to amalgamate with the Farmers Educational and Co-operative Union of America, Minnesota division.

Duluth—Nature is working valiantly to restore forests of Minnesota, and there is indication of improvement, Dr. Raphael Zon, director of the state's forest experiment station, said. A survey just completed shows the volume of white and Norway pine in Minnesota and Michigan is considerably higher than in 1933, and an increase has been noted in other varieties of timber.

Grand Marais—An ancient landmark of the early Indian tribes in the Superior national forest—the great magnetic rock—has recently been discovered. Mrs. John Kerfoot of this town, believed the first white person to find it, directed forest rangers to its location. This point of historic interest will be made available to tourists by a trail leading inland from the Gunflint road, and extending past the rock to Gunflint lake which is part of an established canoe route.

Minneapolis—For the first time in four years Minnesota Democrats are in perfect harmony as they turn to plans for a campaign victory. A pledge of harmony was avowed following a conference of state and congressional nominees when they selected Judge J. F. D. Meighan of Albert Lea, as chairman of the state central committee. Mr. Meighan was chosen by unanimous vote to succeed Joseph Moonan of Waseca, who has held control of the state committee for the last two years.

Tones Him Down

Most experience limits a man's future venturesomeness.

At Right Weight, Age, Sex One May Go Foodless 75 Days

According to Prof. A. J. Carlson of the University of Chicago, a healthy, well-nourished man can live from fifty to seventy-five days without food, provided he is not exposed to severe cold, avoids physical work and keeps his mental calm. It may thus be inferred that the length of time during which a man may live without food depends on height, weight, age and sex, says the Medical Record. The heavier of two men will generate more heat and probably live longer.

Watch Your Kidneys!

Be Sure They Properly Cleanse the Blood

YOUR kidneys are constantly filtering waste matter from the blood stream. But kidneys sometimes lag in their work—do not act as nature intended—fail to remove impurities that poison the system when retained.

Then you may suffer nagging backache, dizziness, scanty or too frequent urination, getting up at night, puffiness under the eyes, feel nervous, miserable—all upset.

Don't delay? Use Doan's Pills. Doan's are especially for poorly functioning kidneys. They are recommended by grateful users the country over. Get them from any druggist.

Democrats Renominate President Roosevelt—Drought Again Causes Crop Destruction — International Conference Considers Mediterranean Problems.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.

PRESIDENT FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT was renominated by the Democratic convention in Philadelphia in a demonstration of great popular acclaim.

President Roosevelt

The convention unanimously adopted a strong New Deal platform and voted the abolition of the historic two-thirds rule.

The sessions were marked with extreme enthusiasm. Party harmony and a determination to stand militantly on the administration's record in the past three years and present a united front in the coming campaign characterized the convention.

The abolition of the two-thirds rule for the nomination of candidates was one of the significant achievements. This rule, which had been in use for more than 100 years, was superseded by the adoption of the rules committee's report recommending that at future conventions only a bare majority be required for nomination. While some southern and the eastern and western states opposed abrogation, they were reconciled to it by the committee's recommendation that changes be made in the apportionment of delegates.

The platform pledged continuance of soil conservation, benefit payments to farmers, a sound currency, a balanced budget and a constitutional amendment if necessary, to achieve the party's broad social program. It praised the accomplishments of the New Deal in a preamble, declaring that it planned to continue them in the interest of the nation. The platform's keynote was that the Roosevelt administration has put and will keep the nation "on the road the recovery and prosperity."

Regarding the Constitution, the platform declared that while the Republican platform proposes to meet national problems by action of the separate states, the Democratic party recognizes that minimum wages, maximum hours, child labor, monopolistic and unfair business practices, dust storms, drouth and floods could not be handled by states. It stated:

"If these problems cannot be effectively solved by legislation within the Constitution, we shall seek such clarifying amendments as will assume to the legislatures of the several states and to the congress of the United States each within its proper jurisdiction, the power to enact those laws which the state and federal legislatures within their respective spheres shall find necessary, in order adequately to regulate commerce, protect public health and safety and safeguard economic security. Thus we propose to maintain the letter and spirit of the Constitution."

In addition to soil conservation and benefit payments, the farm plank pledged the Democrats to financing share-croppers and tenants in buying lands; favored commodity loans on farm surpluses and retirement of ten million acres of submarginal land from production and rural rehabilitation.

Reiterating the "good neighbor" policy, the foreign relations plank reaffirmed the party's neutrality program pledged to keep the nation out of foreign entanglements. It reasserted the reciprocal tariff policy, but demanded "adequate" protection to farmers and manufacturers against unfair foreign competition.

Denouncing monopolies and concentration of economic power, the platform declared that the administration would "vigorously and fearlessly enforce the criminal and civil provisions of the existing anti-trust laws."

Other planks pledged: Expansion of the social security program; continuance of rural electrification; protection of the rights of labor to bargain collectively; extension of federal housing projects; just treatment of war veterans and their dependents; extension of the merit system through classified civil service; freedom of speech, press, radio, religion and assembly; projection of public works projects to aid unemployment; opposition to Communism and "the menace of concealed Fascism.

THE specter of drouth stalked in the Northwest. Damage to crops on heat-parched farms in South Dakota, Wyoming and Montana caused great concern and recalled the disastrous drouth conditions of two years ago.

Railroads serving the drouth areas agreed to place emergency freight rates into effect on live stock shipments to other grazing areas. Wheat and corn crops have suffered severe damage, reports indicate.

In Washington, a relief program for the drouth-stricken northwest states was mapped out by Relief Administrator Harry L. Hopkins. Work relief projects designed to give work at once to 5,000 farmers in the Dakotas and parts of Wyoming and Montana, whose crop lands have been laid waste for the seventh consecutive year, were planned.

In the Middle West the fact that June of 1936 has been cooler than the same month two years ago has offset the serious effects of lack of rain. Figures on June rainfall for 1936 and 1934 compiled by Nat C. Murray, crop authority of Chicago, showed that Ohio had 39 per cent of normal this year and 90 per cent in 1934; Minnesota 46 per cent in 1936 and 32 per cent in 1934; Missouri 26 per cent in 1936 and 62 per cent in 1934; and Kansas 37 per cent in 1936 and 65 per cent in 1934.

Added to the seriousness of the drouth situation was a plague of grasshoppers that swept over eastern Nebraska, threatening to destroy hundreds of square miles of crops. The swarm was reported to be 100 miles long. In spots the insects were said to be so numerous that they hid the sun as they passed over valuable farm lands.

MEETING in Montreaux, Switzerland, an international conference sought settlement of military and naval problems in the Mediterranean. The conference had been called by the powers as a result of Turkey's request to fortify the Dardanelles, which were demilitarized under the Lausanne treaty of 1923.

The possible threat of Russia's growing naval strength caused an alignment of the British and Japanese. Japan announced it was willing to accept any limitation on Japanese warships authorized to enter the Black sea, providing similar restrictions were placed on Russian warships leaving it.

Russia demanded free westward passage of warships and submarines out of the Black sea through the Dardanelles, adding she was unable to see why other powers not bordering on this body of water desired unlimited passage to it. Because of her mutual assistance pact with the Soviet, France was expected to side with Russia.

REPRESENTATIVE WILLIAM LEMKE of North Dakota announced that he would run for the Presidency as candidate of a new political group known as the Union party. Father Charles E. Coughlin, Detroit priest, is the leading sponsor of Lemke's candidacy. Thomas Charles O'Brien of Boston will be the vice-presidential candidate on the ticket, it was announced.

Rep. Lemke

Mr. Lemke made public a 15-point platform embodying demands for refinancing of farm mortgages, old age security, a living wage for all workers, limitation on individual incomes, the establishment of a central bank, the issuance by congress of all currency and its regulation of the value of all the money.

Plans were made for the new party to hold a national convention some time during August in Cleveland.

Mr. Lemke said the Union party has the support of farm unions, labor, the National Union for Social Justice established by Father Coughlin, the Townsend old age pension movement and "all other liberals who have been driven from the old parties."

Mr. Lemke was co-author with Senator Lynn J. Frazier of North Dakota of a $3,000,000,000 farm mortgage refinancing bill defeated in the house of representatives.

ARTHUR W. CUTTEN, who achieved spectacular wealth as a grain trader, died of a heart attack in his home in Chicago. He was sixty-five years old.

An exponent of individualism, Mr. Cutten went his way alone in the grain market, playing his "hunches" against the field. In 1924, he made a profit estimated at between $1,500,000 and $2,000,000 in a corner on the corn market. He repeated his success with a coup in the wheat market the following year.

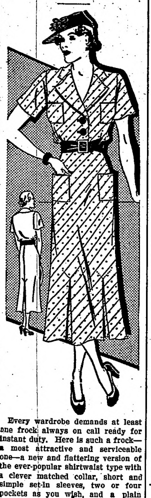
With a group of associates, he entered the stock market in 1928 and during the boom months made millions of dollars.

Most of his life Mr. Cutten was a "long" trader, who bought for the rise in the market, but following the crash, he is said to have become a "bear" or short seller. His operations as a bear in the Chicago Board of Trade brought his suspension by the grain futures administration for two years, but he won a reversal of this ruling in the United States Supreme court.

STRIKES and industrial difficulties continued to harass France, although their ultimate solution was forecast in a conciliatory attitude assumed by the new "popular front" government toward the French chambers of commerce. Representatives of the chambers of commerce received assurance from Premier Leon Blum that no further manufacturing plants would be tied up by "folded arms" strikers, whose number at their peak reached approximately 1,000,000 employees.

In the meantime a strike of sailors in Marseilles was settled after a three-day refusal to work, when the shipowners capitulated to the strikers' demands. Fifty ships were affected by the walkout. The sailors demanded a 40-hour week, vacations with pay and bedsheets on their bunks.

Cool Shirtwaister For Busy Women



Every wardrobe demands at least one frock always on call ready for instant duty. Here is such a frock—a most attractive and serviceable one—a new and flattering version of the ever-popular shirtwaist type with a clever matched collar, short and simple set-in sleeves, two or four pockets as you wish, and a plain skirt with two kick pleats in the front and a center seam ending in another kick pleat at the back.

HEAVY RAIN FALLS HERE

Heavy rains which meant a great deal to growing crops, fell over this section Tuesday afternoon and evening. The heaviest fall in the village was during the evening. For about five minutes the rain was accompanied by small hail which covered the ground. No damage was done to either crops or garden truck by the hail. Reports from other districts state the rainfall was quite general.

Service on the new R. F. D. No. 5 of Thief River Falls, which is served from both Thief River and St. Hilaire postoffices, commneced July first with Ward Mathewson as carrier.

"Jim, here's all it costs us for ELECTRIC COOKING"
"Is THAT all it costs? Well, I'm going to get Mary an Electric Range too"

WITH all its advantages such as cleanliness, and better cooking results, modern electric cooking is economical too. Special, low steps added to the electric rates keep the monthly cost as low as a penny per meal per person.

Electric cooking saves you money in many ways. Cheaper cuts of meats can be used—yet, roasted in the electric oven they will turn out deliciously tender and full of flavor. Costly shrinkage is reduced because electric cooking keeps the juices in the meat. Vegetables retain their health-giving properties.

You'll save too in cleaning and redecorating costs. Electric heat is as clean as sunshine. There is no grime, no soot. Your walls and curtains STAY clean.

FIRE DESTROYS BARN NEAR HERE

A fire of unknown origin destroyed the large stock barn and chicken house on the Erickson Bros. farm west of here last Sunday. The Erickson family was away from home when the fire started. Passersby noticed the fire and did everything possible to save contents of the structures as the flames had already advanced so far as to preclude any possibility of saving the buildings. A team of horses, five calves, harnesses, and a milking machine and all stanchions were lost in the fire.

Origin of the fire is a mystery as there was no fire of any kind on the premises when the family left that day. Coming at a busy season of the year, loss of the buildings represents not only a sizeable financial loss, but it means considerable inconvenience to the owners.

RED LAKE FALLS PLAYS HERE SUNDAY

The St. Hilaire ball team, as yet undefeated in its Northern Minnesota League schedule of games, will cross bats with Red Lake Falls here next Sunday. Up to last week, Red Lake Falls had two victories to its credit out of five games played this season. Unlike the game played at Plummer the Fourth, when some of the local players were missing, the locals will have their regular line-up in action next Sunday so ball fans can be assured of seeing a real contest. As previously stated, income for teams in the league consists entirely of gate receipts from games on their home grounds, therefor, the boys desire to see a good turnout for the game here next Sunday.

BLACK RIVER NEWS

Mr. and Mrs. Emil Person, Myrtle, Evelyn, Delores and Arleen visited Sunday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Westby of Hazel.

Mr. and Mrs. Victor Mosbeck and children of St. Walburg, Canada were Thursday evening visitors at the home of his uncle Gunard Lindquist.

Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Ludtke of Ely, Minn. visited at the V. G. Brink home on Sunday afternoon.

Mrs. Gunard Lindquist, Vivian and Vernon were Thief River Falls callers on Wednesday.

Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Lindquist, Alice and Mae were Sunday evening visitors at the G. Lindquist home.

Mr. and Mrs. Alec Swanson, Lorraine, Doris and Kenneth, Mr. and Mrs. Gust Peterson, Muriel, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Lorentson and family and Mr. and Mrs. Chris Kruse, Shirley and Darlene were Saturday evening visitors at Felix Anderson's home.

Mr. Alfred Dahlstrom and Alvin spent July 4th at Moorhead, Minn. with friends.

Mr. and Mrs. Alb. Anderson and daughter, Merriem were Tuesday evening visitors at the Chris Kruse home.

Mr. and Mrs. Melcher Erickson, Jimmy and Margaret and Baby and Mr. and Mrs. Aug. Scholin, LeRoy and Arlo, Ivan were visitors in Crookston on Sunday.

Rev. and Mrs. Elmer Dahlstrom and children and Hutlie Dahlstrom were Saturday evening visitors at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Anderson.

Earl Arthur and daughter of Portland, N. D., accompanied by friends from that village, motored here Sunday for a call on old friends. Mr. Arthur was a resident of St. Hilaire years ago when his parents operated the Hotel Markham in this village.

GRAIN PRICES GO UP

Following reports of widespread damage to crops in most sections of the grain growing area in this country and Canada, prices of grain have commenced going up. Local market for wheat yesterday was $1.15 per bushel. Durum is up to $1.05, rye is $.57, barley is $.45, oats 30 cents, and flax is $1.88 with prospects of still more advances.

DEFEAT GOODRIDGE THERE LAST SUNDAY

The St. Hilaire ball team annexed its sixth straight league schedule game last Sunday when it defeated Goodridge by a score of 7 to 1 in a game played at Goodridge. Bill Hallamack on the mound for St. Hilaire, pitched airtight ball and allowed very little hitting as the score indicates. Not only was Hallamack in good form, but he was given loyal support by his team mates.

In an exhibition game played as a feature of the celebration at Plummer the Fourth, the St. Hilaire team took Plummer into camp in a fast game by a score of 7 to 2. This game was not included in the regular league schedule and is not credited as such in the team standing for this season.

St. Hilaire plays Thief River in that city July 26, and Thief River plays its return game here August 2nd.

TOM CORNO IS DEAD

John Gauthier received word this week of the death of his brother-in-law, Tom Corno, which occurred June 2nd at a ranch near Fort George, B. C., where he had been employed several years. Mr. Corno was a resident of St. Hilaire during sawmill days and will be recalled by all who were here at that time.

FINISH WAREHOUSE

Larson Bros. have completed construction of a new warehouse, size 22x32, in rear of their store. The warehouse will be used for storage of wire, tanks, fencing and other similar bulky articles.

Dr. Horn, the dentist, is scheduled to be here the first two days of next week.

Marvaette Phippin of St. Paul, granddaughter of Emil Just and Martha Geske of Thief River were guests at the Just home here last Sunday.

Mrs. J. Buhn died Tuesday this week at her home at Maple Lake, death being due to old age. Mrs. Buhn was a sister of the late Mrs. P. A. Eckstrom who resided west of here some years ago.

Axel Larson, who resides southeast of here, purchased a residence property last week at Thief River Falls which was owned by Mrs. Knute Jorgenson of this village, and will move there with his daughters as soon as the present tenant vacates the place.

Harry Just and Sanford Platson of Hatton, N. D., visited from Friday to Sunday at the home of the former's father, Emil Just. On their return trip, their car broke down at Crookston so Mr. and Mrs. Just motored down and took the boys to Hatton where they are employed.

John Habeck of Baldwin, and Fred Habeck of McKenzie, N. D., were here last week looking over the country with view of locating. They reside now in the drought stricken section of North Dakota, and wanted to locate somewhere where there is more assurance of raising a crop. The former secured an option on the Knute Jorgenson property in the south part of the village, and the latter leased the Benson farm. Both men intend to move here the coming fall.

Tales About Town

Happenings of the Week, Told in Brief. News Concerning People You Know

Mr. and Mrs. Lester Olson spent the Fourth with relatives from Grand Forks at a lake near Cass Lake.

Miss Grace Dahle, who is attending summer sessions at the University of North Dakota, spent last week-end at home.

Mr. and Mrs. Ronald Schantzen left Friday for Portland, Ore., where Mr. Schantzen expects to be employed at garage work.

Rev. and Mrs. M. Dahle and children, Grace and Manford, spent Sunday at the annual Bible Camp, held at Wabanica Creek near Baudette.

William and Roy Engh motored Friday to Edinburgh, N. D. and spent until Monday at the home of the latter's parents. They report crops to be nearly all burned out in the section they visited.

Contrary to time-honored occurance, there was no rain to spoil celebrations the Fourth this year, nor was there any rain the following day anywhere in this section of the state.

Mrs. M. H. Jackson accompanied by Mrs. H. O. Jackson, Mrs. Lester Olson, Mrs. M. Graham and Mrs. G. Gunstad attended a ladies aid Thursday at the home of Mrs. Louis Giese north of Euclid.

Arthur Hanson motored Sunday to Crookston to visit with Mrs. Hanson who was a patient at the St. Vincent Hospital. He was accompanied on the trip by Mrs. Leo Carpenter and children who visited with friends at Crookston.

Mr. and Mrs. Pete Hanson motored here Thursday from No. St. Paul for a brief visit with friends, and to look after matters in connection with their farm southeast of town. They left the same day to spend the week-end holiday at Itasca State Park before returning home.

Most residents of St. Hilaire celebrated the Fourth this year at Red Lake Falls, Plummer and at the picnic at Black River. The fact that the band was engaged for celebration at Red Lake Falls, drew quite a number that way, while others followed the ball team to Plummer. Still others spent the day at the different lake resorts.

Dr. and Mrs. Cephas Swanson and daughters motored up Saturday morning for a week-end visit at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Winter. They saw part of the celebration at Red Lake Falls while enroute. Afternoon of the Fourth they visited with old friends and attended the picnic given at the Melin farm in Black River community.

There was no meeting of the B. M. Club this week.

The village council held its regular monthly meeting at the council room last Monday evening.

Mrs. Arthur Hanson returned Tuesday night from the hospital at Crookston where she had received treatment a few days.

Melvin Nohre is planning to purchase a garage at Blackduck and expects to move there with his family if the deal is made.

A group of friends from Black River community were entertained Sunday evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Hallstrom.

A. F. Hall and family, accompanied by Mrs. A. L. Patterson and daughter, Mabel, motored up Tuesday night from Maple Lake for a brief visit at the O. Gunstad home.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Black of Thief River Falls are the happy parents of a daughter born July 2nd. Before her marriage, Mrs. Black was Miss Alice Gigstad of this village.

Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Gigstad of St. Paul, and Mr. and Mrs. Kenard Hovet and daughter of Little Falls motored here Saturday and spent the Fourth with their relatives, returning home Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Lyon motored here Friday from St. Paul and spent until Sunday visiting with relatives. Upon returning home, they were accompanied by Mrs. Lyon's sister, Mrs. Frank Peterson, who went to spend a few days with them in St. Paul.

Mr. and Mrs. E. O. Burkee and daughter, Beryl, motored here Saturday from Moorhead for a visit at the homes of his mother, Mrs. B. E. Burkee, and with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Olsen. Mr. and Mrs. Burkee returned home Sunday, but Miss Beryl stayed for a longer visit.

Mrs. A. W. Brink and son left last week to join others at Grand Forks for a trip to the Brink Ranch at Eight Point, Mont. They expect to be gone a couple of weeks or more while Mrs. Brink looks after matters in connection with the real estate owned by her husband and herself, in Montana.

Mr. and Mrs. A. F. Hall and daughter, Kathleen, of Albert Lea, Minn., motored up Friday to Maple Lake and spent a few days at the Mrs. Anna L. Patterson cottage. They were in St. Hilaire Tuesday night for a short visit with friends, and Mr. Hall called on old acquaintances here Wednesday. They returned home Thursday morning.

HEAT DAMAGES CROPS

Excessive heat, with temperatures of over 100 degrees in all sections of the Northwest this week, has caused immense damage to growing crops. Many parts of North Dakota and southern Minnesota are burned out entirely. While the heat has caused some damage in this locality, crops look fair especially on the heavy lands. Hay promises to be a fair crop this year which means considerable to this dairying and stock raising section.

ATTEND WATER SUPPLY MEETING

L. F. Olson, W. Corbet, S. Olness and Frank Sweet, members of the village council, represented St. Hilaire at a meeting held Tuesday at Crookston for the purpose of discussing ways and means of securing a better water supply in the Red Lake river. At present the water in the river here is so polluted by sewage that it is unfit for even use by livestock. While St. Hilaire is not so much interested in the river as a water supply, it is vitally interested from a health standpoint. While nothing definite has been done so far, it is hoped and expected that some action will be taken toward securing a supply of clean water in the river.

Miss Alice Skottem returned recently after having spent about a month with relatives and friends at Grantsburg, Wisc. Miss Marie Skottem, student nurse at Fargo, spent last week-end here with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Sever Skottem.

Mr. and Mrs. Louis Giese and children of East Grand Forks were here Sunday for a short visit with Mrs. Giese's parents, Mr. and Mrs. H. O. Jackson. Prior to coming here that day, they had attended the fiftieth anniversary observance at the German Lutheran church near Wylie.

After spending a week here at the home of her sister, Mrs. B. B. Burkee, Mrs. Wm. Eickhoff left Sunday for a short visit at Detroit Lakes before returning to her home at Wittenburg, Wisc. Her son-in-law and daughter, who reside at Detroit Lakes, motored up Sunday for her.

Mr. and Mrs. Adolph Satterberg motored Saturday to Round Lake near Brainerd to spend the week-end at an outing with Mr. and Mrs. Gust Fellman and Mr. and Mrs. Sig. Engh of Minneapolis, and Mr. and Mrs. Herman Adams of St. Paul. Mr. Satterberg returned Monday, but Mrs. Satterberg stayed to spend the week, and he will go down Saturday for her.

ANNUAL SCHOOL MEETING JULY 21

Annual school meetings in Minnesota will be held July 21, the third Tuesday of the month, when all common and independent districts will hold the voting at 7:00 P. M. unless the time has been changed at previous meeting of the board. At these meetings, officers of districts are to be elected for the ensuing term, and school levies for the school year will be made.

It is interesting to note that the state is now contributing an increasing share toward local school costs. The state's annual contribution is now placed at 30.6 per cent of total cost. While the local school levies made at the annual meeting is assessed entirely against general property, the state's share comes largely from three state funds (1) Permanent school trust funds; (2) state one mill tax; (3) special state aid appropriations from the general revenue fund secured thru property taxation and from other sources.

Taxpayers should realize the importance of providing equal educational opportunities for every child, and at the same time keep an ever watchful eye on education costs.

HAVE FAMILY RE-UNION

Members of the Hauge family from widely separated sections of the northwest gathered last Sunday at Cross Lake near Fosston for a family re-union, and also to celebrate Grandma Hauge's 79th birthday anniversary. Those present were Mr. and Mrs. Nels Hauge and children of Alpha, Minn., Bertha and Henry Hauge of Graettinger, Iowa, Mr. and Mrs. Joe Hauge and family, Tom Vigen and Cora Helgoe of Bemidji, Mr. and Mrs. S. J. Hauge and children, Alma, Bertine and Sidney Helgoe of Halstad, Mr. and Mrs. Eitel Braunsweick, Laura, Louis and John Hauge of Ada; Mr. and Mrs. Otto Johnson, Mrs. R. L. Hauge, Oscar and Andrew Hauge and Ed. Hauske of St. Hilaire.

Thousands of tourists from nearby states, as well as many Minnesota people, took advantage of the double holiday to spend the Fourth at Minnesota's numerous lake resorts to to escape the oppressive heat. Auto traffic was the heaviest in history of the state during the week-end, and stopping places were taxed to their limit to provide accommodations for the thousands who desired them.

Paul Roy, accompanied by his mother, Mrs. J. S. Roy, and sisters, Mrs. J. A. Hansen and Mrs. Chr. Kies, motored Tuesday to Frazee to attend funeral services for a brother-in-law of Mrs. Roy who died July fourth.

What Goes On at Home

No wonder people sometimes believe houses are haunted. When we are away for a day or a week the fire and the lights go out, the house flies, the chimney sweeps, the clock strikes, the pillow slips, the mirror reflects, the tea leaves, the ice melts, the butter runs, the iron is sad and the moth balls. How do we know? Why, the meat saw sawed it.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Eczema in Big Watery "Bumps"

Burning and Itching Relieved by Cuticura

The records abound with grateful letters of praise like the following. Name and full address are printed to show that Cuticura letters are genuine beyond question.

"My eczema began with an itching on my hands, arms and feet, and when I scratched, big, watery bumps came. They burned and itched so, that I scratched and irritated the affected parts. It worried me so I could not sleep.

"I had this eczema for five years before I started to use Cuticura. After using three cakes of Cuticura Soap and three tins of Cuticura Ointment the irritation was relieved." (Signed) Miss G. E. Reid, 850 Central Av., Hamilton, O.

Drouth Crisis Brings Federal Aid—Business Revival Continues in First Half of 1936—Steel Industry Fights Drive for Unionization.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.

FEARS that drouth may irrietrievably destroy farm crops in North and South Dakota, eastern Montana and Wyoming prompted President Roosevelt to marshal $500,000,000 in relief funds to combat the damage and to develop further plans for fighting drouth.

Secretary Wallace

Secretary of Agriculture Henry W. Wallace, who left Washington for a personal survey of the stricken areas, declared that from all reports conditions had become as serious as they were in 1934, due to lack of sorely needed rains.

The secretary declared that unles rains descend in the sun-scorched regions the government will buy 30,000,000 head of cattle in the next month.

In St. Paul, Minn., the governors of the five drouth-stricken northwestern states met with Federal Works Progress Administrator Harry L. Hopkins and administrators from the various states. Mr. Hopkins ordered relief jobs made immediately available for from 25,000 to 50,000 farmers who have seen their sole source of livelihood destroyed. The jobs were to be made available on water conservation projects, farm-to-market roads, rural schools and recreational projects.

President Roosevelt, in Washington, appointed a special committee composed of Secretary Wallace, Budget Director Daniel Bell, Aubrey Williams, Assistant Works Progress Administrator and Dr. Rexford G. Tugwell, resettlement administrator. They will work in cooperation with a committee of department of agriculture officials. The President instructed Budget Director Bell to study government appropriations to determine what funds are available.

CONTINUING business recovery during the first six months of 1936 fulfilled the hopes of optimistic prognosticators and surpassed the expectations of conservative forecasters.

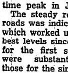
All the leading trade barometers registered fair business weather at the close of the first half of the year. The production of automobiles reached 2,400,000 units in the first six months of 1936, the best for the period since 1929.

Improvement was further reflected by the steel industry, the operations of which rose from 49.2 per cent of capacity at the start of the year to 71.2 per cent at the end of June. The output of electricity climbed steadily to reach an all time peak in June.

The steady recovery of the railroads was indicated by carloadings which worked up to approach their best levels since 1931. The figures for the first six months of 1936 were substantially better than those for the similar period of 1935.

A strong upsurge of home building gave impetus to the construction industry although it still remained at subnormal levels.

AN INCREASE of 90 per cent in the cash farm income on cotton, wheat, tobacco, corn and hogs from 1932 to 1935 was recorded under the Agricultural Adjustment act, invalidated by the Supreme court last January, according to the annual report of Chester C. Davis, former administrator, made public in Washington.



Chester Davis

Cash farm income from these five major farm products which came under production control, rental and benefit payments was $1,365,000,000 in 1932, the year before the AAA became operative. For 1935 it was $2,593,000,000.

The report pointed out that cash farm income from all other products increased in the same period from $3,012,000,000 to $4,307,000,000.

Mr. Davis, who was recently appointed by President Roosevelt to the Federal Reserve board, declared that cash available for living expenses, taxes and interest from farm cash income was the highest in 1935 since 1929, and two and one-half times greater than it was in 1932.

DEFYING a drive to force unionization of its 500,000 workers, the steel industry in a strongly worded statement issued by the American Iron and Steel institute declared "it will oppose any attempt to compel its employees to join a union or pay tribute for the right to work."

Although the statement did not mention him by name, it was regarded by observers as the first official response to the recent announcement by John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers of America, of a campaign to unionize steel employees.

In order to prevent the "closed shop," the industry said it "will use its resources to the best of its ability to protect its employees and their families from intimidation, coercion and violence and to aid them in maintaining collective bargaining free from interference from any source."

The unionization attempt comes at the time when steel operations have set a new record for 1936.

Reasserting its belief in the principles of collective bargaining, the industry's statement pointed out that employees now pick their own representatives for collective bargaining by secret ballot. The statement declares:

"The steel industry is recovering from six years of depression and huge losses and the employees are beginning to receive the benefit of increased operations. Any interruption of the forward movement will seriously injure the employees and their families and all business dependent upon the industry and will endanger the welfare of the country."

IN ESTES PARK, Colo., Gov. Alfred M. Landon, Republican Presidential nominee, continued his vacation begun with his family the week before and made plans for reconvening of the Kansas legislature and for the acceptance speech he will deliver in Topeka on July 23.

Gov. Landon

Although Governor Landon was resting preparatory to the rigors of the campaign, affairs of his state and conferences with political advisers occupied considerable of his attention.

When the Kansas legislature reconvenes a proposed amendment to the state constitution will be introduced, giving the state broad power to provide far-reaching legislation for social welfare and to co-operate with the federal government. Governor Landon was quoted as describing the proposed amendment as "satisfactory."

The amendment, which may be the basis for similar action in other states, reads:

"Nothing contained in this constitution shall be construed to limit the power of the legislature to enact laws providing for financial assistance to aid infirm or dependent persons; for the public health; unemployment compensation and general social security and providing for the payment thereof by tax or otherwise and to receive aid from the federal government therefor."

"YIELDING to the urgings of party leaders, Gov. Herbert H. Lehman of New York announced that he would run again for the office of governor. The governor had announced several months ago that he would not be a candidate again, giving as his reasons the press of personal business and a desire to retire to private life.

Democratic leaders declared the governor's decision will help the national ticket to carry New York in the election next November.

In a statement issued to newspapermen, Governor Lehman said he could "no longer resist" the appeals of national and state Democratic leaders. The statement said:

"Regardless of personal considerations, however compelling, I feel that I can no longer resist the pleas of my party both in the state and in the nation or of those with whom I have worked in closest association for many years and with whom I have waged the fight for equal opportunity and social security.

"Therefore if my party in this state chooses to nominate me again and if the people of the state again call on me for service I shall proudly accept the call and will devote myself wholeheartedly to the interest of the people of the state."

RETIRING from the post of Comptroller General, J. R. McCarl announced that following the expiration of his term of office he would aid in the government reorganization study undertaken by the senate committee headed by Senator Byrd of Virginia.

Gen. McCarl criticized New Deal emergency agencies as "loosely and extravagantly set up" and as "tax consuming in the extreme." He declared that a systematic reorganization of both regular and emergency agencies would improve government administration and reduce the cost to taxpayers.

CIRCULAR STREETS IN OUR CAPITAL CONFUSE VISITORS

One thing that confuses many visitors to the National Capital, especially the motorists, is the many circles. How far around a circle do you go to hit the right street again is, indeed, a problem, unless you know your Washington circles. Some tourists, after running around in circles and getting lost several times, wonder why they made so many old circles anyway.

Washington's many circles have a real historical background. L'Enfant, the French engineer friend of George Washington, who laid out the plans for the National Capital drew his inspiration, it is said, from the circles of gay Paris. In that city where civil insurrections were then frequent it had been proven that circles at city intersections were quite useful as weapons of defense against the rebels. With one gun mounted in the center of a circle a few soldiers stationed there could control any and all of the various approaches to the circle.

Washington's circles now get the blame for much of the city's traffic problem. If the traffic authorities had their way, L'Enfant's beautiful circles would likely be squared.

Good Books

If a man wants to read good books, he must make a point of avoiding bad ones; for life is short, and time and energy limited.—Schopenhauer.

Try Living Today

Gambling for future affluence is the most insidious form of future-fixation afflicting American males. It brought on the depression. It doesn't matter in the least whether a man dies a pauper or a millionaire. What does matter is how he lives and how his family lives.

Men who gamble for wealth often seek to justify themselves by the argument that wealth will bring happiness to their wives and children. This isn't true. Wealth and poverty are equally likely to prevent real living. The happiest people are those with enough money to live on and enough wisdom to use their money for that purpose.

A great many of those who answered the query as to what they lived for said that they were "just waiting to get money enough to travel." Yet the people who have traveled more than any other family I know have no money at all. They like to travel, and so they travel. Their other affairs are arranged to make traveling possible.—William Moulton Marston in Cosmopolitan.

THE COAT THAT SQUEALED

OR THE CAPTURE OF COSTELLO, THE INTERNATIONAL FORGER

AN INSIDE STORY OF MELVIN PURVIS AMERICA'S №-1 G-MAN

MELVIN PURVIS, who became America's ace G-Man, who directed the capture of Dillinger, "Pretty Boy" Floyd, many others. Mr. Purvis reveals here methods used in capturing criminals. Names have, of course, been changed.

MELVIN PURVIS could tell that it was a woman's coat because of this small, but important detail: women's coats always have the buttons on the left (see left, above), men's coats on right (above, right). The coat found in the car had THE BUTTONS ON THE LEFT.

BOYS AND GIRLS! JOIN MY JUNIOR G-MAN CORPS! I'LL SEND YOU FREE THE OFFICIAL JUNIOR G-MAN BADGE, PLACE YOUR NAME ON THE SECRET ROLL AT HEADQUARTERS, SEND YOU A BIG EXCITING BOOK THAT TELLS ALL ABOUT CLUES, SECRET CODES, INVISIBLE WRITING, FINGERPRINTS... A VACATION TIP FROM MELVIN PURVIS:

"JUST try Post Toasties with cold milk or cream and ripe fruit for a mid-afternoon snack... or for a grand, cool luncheon treat on hot summer days. They sure do hit the spot!

"Post Toasties are made from the sweet, tender hearts of the corn, where most of the flavor is. And every delicious flake is toasted double-crisp to keep its crunchy goodness longer in milk or cream. And remind Mother of this—their price is low!"

Yours,

(Signed) Melvin Purvis

All Around the House

Air the bread and cake boxes frequently during the summer months. Mould is likely to form on breads and cakes kept in boxes during the warm weather.

* * *

Do not remove husks from green corn until just before putting on to boil. Corn spoils quickly, so it should be used as soon as possible after purchasing.

* * *

Never put hot foods in your refrigerator or ice box. Wait until they have cooled.

* * *

Mayonnaise may be kept for several weeks in refrigerator if a tablespoonful of boiling water is added to it before bottling.

* * *

Sandwiches may be kept moist for 24 hours if they are wrapped tight as soon as made, in waxed paper, then placed in a box lined with a damp cloth and covered with a cloth. Keep in a cool place.

* * *

A little garlic rubbed over the broiler on which steak is broiled gives steak a delicious flavor.

* * *

Chamois wet in cold water and wrung dry will polish mahogany furniture that has become cloudy.

The Smith Bolt

Washington.—The arrival of the first robin does not guarantee the immediate arrival of spring but when the first robin is observed, folks generally consider that there is little left of winter. An out and out bolt by an individual in party politics likewise does not guarantee important defections, but, like the arrival of the early robin, an individual bolter, if he be a man of consequence, has a story of its own to tell. A bolt in party politics never attracts attention unless the bolting individual is of some consequence and, therefore, has a personal following. Thus it is that when we observe a bolt by a nationally known individual from his lifelong political affiliation, we immediately understand its significance. The scope of this significance, however, is the thing that concerns us.

Nearly everyone knows now that former Gov. Alfred E. Smith of New York, Democratic Presidential nominee in 1928, has made known that he cannot support President Roosevelt for re-election. They know as well that the four other individuals who asked the Democratic National convention to push Mr. Roosevelt aside and nominate a Democrat can be classified as important individuals along with Governor Smith. No one dare say that former Sen. James A. Reed of Missouri, former Governor Ely of Massachusetts, Bainbridge Colby, secretary of state in Woodrow Wilson's administration and Daniel F. Cohalan, one time Tammany chieftain, are unimportant in politics. They have consistently figured in Democratic party councils and thus it becomes apparent that these five robins presage something more than just their own departure from the ranks of Roosevelt supporters.

I make this statement notwithstanding the declaration by James A. Farley that he would not dignify their statement with a reply. Of course, Mr. Farley as postmaster general, chairman of the Democratic National committee, chairman of the New York State Democratic committee and delegate to the Democratic National convention, necessarily was a very busy man at the time the Smith statement, refusing support to President Roosevelt, was released for publication. Nevertheless, I am in a position to know that the Smith statement threw quite a scare into New Deal ranks. Frankly, they did not like it.

How much they do not like the Smith statement remains to be seen. I believe that no one can forecast exactly how much strength this group can pull away from Mr. Roosevelt in the November election. Much will depend upon their personal activities henceforth. If men like Smith and Jim Reed and Ely take the stump, if they go out onto the hustings and actually campaign for Governor Landon, the Republican nominee, it seems to me obvious that such campaigning will damage the Roosevelt cause materially.

It was the natural strategy for Mr. Farley to follow in declining comment on the Smith defection. His assertion that the Smith statement was so unimportant as to require no reply will be convincing to a very great many voters who already have made up their minds to support Mr. Roosevelt. But the truth is that the election has not been won yet by either side and any votes that are influenced by such a group as that headed by Governor Smith will have weight in the final determination of our next President.

* * *

Lemke Third Party

The Smith defection becomes the more important in my opinion because it occurred almost simultaneously with the development of a third party under the leadership of Rep. William Lemke, of North Dakota. This picture may not be entirely clear to everyone. It is substantially this: Lemke and his colleagues are attempting to draw together the extreme radicals, the leftist groups. The bulk of these will come from the Democratic party if the Lemke organization develops any particular strength. The Smith group represents the conservative, or rightist, element in the Democratic party. Thus we see detraction from the Roosevelt strength on two sides.

I do not mean to say here that the combination of these circumstances will insure President Roosevelt's defeat. Anyone who would make such a declaration at this time demonstrates his lack of knowledge of political maneuvers. What I am seeking to show, however, is that robins have arrived in the back yard and in the front yard of the New Deal party and if the leaders of the two obstreperous groups engage viciously in this campaign, the time may come when Mr. Farley will recognize their importance.

There already has been evidence of the influence of the Lemke radical segment. I think everyone agrees that the announcement of the third party's organization vitally affected the type of platform that was written in Washington and adopted by the Democratic convention at Philadelphia. From many sources comes information that the Democratic platform was made much more liberal—some critics describe it as more socialistic—than would have been the case had Representative Lemke stayed out of the political picture. He has the backing of Father Coughlin, the Detroit radio priest, and his national union for social justice and he has the backing of the remnants of the late Huey Long's share-the-wealth adherents. In addition, the Townsend $200-a-month pension followers will be found behind Lemke to some extent.

I have observed these third party movements many times before and usually they have failed to live up to expectations. They nearly always have developed fights among themselves because the very nature of and the very reason for their existence lies in their varied conceptions of what government ought to be or ought to do. Their sincerity precludes them usually from compromise and when politicians refuse to compromise, their organization, whatever it may be, naturally disintegrates.

This may be the year when the leftist segment will stick together and if it does, it naturally threatens Mr. Roosevelt's success. I confidently expect to see overtures seeping out from New Deal sources in an effort to placate some of the Lemke followers. It is a logical piece of strategy for the New Dealers to seek to wean these recalcitrant folks from the third party.

Trouble in Europe

The European disturbances continue apace. It is a situation that is extremely interesting and one that probably will unfold as the weeks go by, in curious ways. I say curious because to us in America, it has been rather difficult to understand the meaning of many of the maneuvers that followed the outright subjugation of Ethiopia by the power thirsty Mussolini of Italy.

Word that comes rather direct from inner councils in Europe indicates a tremendous fear on the part of Italy and France about German plans. The British likewise are displaying nervousness and the present alliances and combinations of power existing in Europe are none too stable. It is just possible that Germany's Hitler may, by his present activities, force a new cementing of these alliances and understandings among other powers but at this time there is no mistaking the fact that Europe, outside of Germany, is a bundle of nerves.

It seems that the basis for this nervousness is rooted in the clever scheming of Dr. Hjalmar Schacht, who is something of an economic dictator under Hitler. Dr. Schacht is a brilliant negotiator. He understands economics, trade and finance as well as any man in Europe today and when you couple such knowledge with diplomatic keenness, you obviously have a man capable of accomplishing results.

Dr. Schacht is employing the methods he knows best, namely, economic understandings, in making new connections with central European power and the Balkan states.

Italy's Case

In the case of Italy, an economic weapon in the hands of Germany might easily prove disastrous because Italy virtually exhausted her gold reserve in the late war and her government cannot go on much longer in furnishing purchasing power for her people. France has been able to open certain markets to the little entente and to the Balkans and has, in addition, provided some financial aid. Thus, when Dr. Schacht pats the neighbors of Germany, on the back and points out where markets can be made for them in Germany, France and Italy quickly develop cases of jitters.

It seems that Austria and Hungary cannot depend fully on Italian markets because of the low gold reserve in Italy. In the meantime as well, France has been losing millions in gold as her own domestic situation has been embroiled in a political whirlpool. The Austrians and the Hungarians and some of the other central Europeans recognize that unless France gets straightened out, there will not be purchasing power available there for their surplus produce. So, Dr. Schacht is cultivating what appears from this distance to be a fertile field.

Uncommon Sense ◆

By JOHN BLAKE

© Bell Syndicate.—WNU Service.

Make up your mind that it is senseless to quarrel.

You will meet many people that you dislike.

At Least Tolerate Your Neighbor

Many of them will be quarrelsome, conceited, ill tempered. Avoid such people, but tolerate them. They may turn out to be better than you think they are.

There is plenty of room on this earth for human beings of all sorts and kind.

Some of them will differ with you in politics, others in religion.

Some may be downright ugly.

But they are as they are made. Quarreling with them will make you unhappy, and you're going to need all the happiness you can find as you travel through life.

* * *

Some of them may be snobbish and "high hat". You can easily keep away from that sort.

But you will be thrown in with certain people whom you cannot avoid.

They may live next door to you, they may belong to the same church or club, they may intrude themselves upon you in many unpleasant ways.

It will do you no good to "get your back up" when they are around.

You will get only misery out of quarreling with them.

Just convince yourself that there must be that kind of people in the world with you, and that the easiest way is to be as cheerful as possible in their presence, eschew arguments with them, and let them go their own way.

* * *

You can kill mosquitoes and spiders and rattlesnakes and other creatures with which you may be thrown as you go on.

You can't kill human beings without getting into serious trouble. I do not contend that you ought to nurse odious people in your bosom, or try to reform them.

All I suggest is that if you must be with them you will not be unhappy about it, but get along as well you can.

And now and then you are pretty sure to find that somebody you thought was a pest was a really good sort when you came to know him well, and that you lost a good deal by not getting better acquainted with him.

* * *

Dislike reacts on the person who harbors it. Better figure that wherever you go you will find men and women who are constant irritations to you.

Leave them alone if you can. If you can't, just be civil and pleasant and if they resent that keep out of their neighborhood.

But toleration will put it out of their power to annoy you.

Try this plan for a couple of weeks. I think you will profit by it.

FLORAL ORDERS GIVEN PROMPT ATTENTION

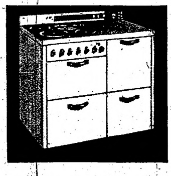
"Gosh it's hot, but you look fresh as a daisy. Is dinner ready?"
"Sure, cooking is a pleasure with a cool Electric Range"

SUMMER is the time you really appreciate ELECTRIC cooking. You can cook a full meal in the oven—yet your kitchen will stay cool. Thick insulation keeps the heat in the oven, where it belongs. And in surface cooking, the electric burners concentrate all the heat on the bottom of the kettle, not up around the sides into the air.

However, with an electric range there is no need to stay in the kitchen. Imagine spending the afternoon away from home—then arriving just before dinner to find an entire meal, deliciously cooked, ready to serve. Safe, automatic controls do your cooking for you without watching, whether you are at home or away.

Change to electric cooking for the same reason you changed to electric lights. It's modern, clean, cool—and your cooking results will be tastier and more healthful.

See the beautiful new electric ranges demonstrated at your dealer or our showroom. $5 down will install one in your kitchen—balance in 24 small monthly payments.



EASY TERMS
24 MONTHS TO PAY . . . FREE WIRING . . . FREE INSTALLATION

The New Era Automatic Electric Range . . . a perfect harmony of modern beauty and convenience. Finished in white porcelain or cameo ivory, the New Era's flat sides and back, with sturdy steel base recessed for toe space make it especially adapted to modern ensemble kitchen installation.

MERCURY REACHES ALL-TIME RECORD

An all-time record for heat in this section was reached on several occasions the past week when the mercury climbed to 105 degrees at this place. Rain falling Monday evening brot temporary relief, but the muggy weather following was fully as unpleasant as the intense heat. According to weather forecasts, another high temperature wave is moving in from the west, and it is likely abnormally high temperatures will prevail for another week or more.

The Twin Cities and southern half of the state felt effects of the torrid weather more than northern Minnesota. Hundreds of deaths have occured in that area, and hospitals are being taxed to capacity to care for heat victims. Death toll thruout the nation has already reached imposing figures.

Another menace faced by many towns, and ascribed directly to the heat wave, is a fast diminishing water supply. In some places the situation is already serious. Greatly increased use of water for human consumption has lessened the supply needed to guard against fire, an ever-present menace in every dry season.

WATER MEETING IS HELD AT CROOKSTON

All members of the village council were at Crookston last evening and attended a meeting of city and village officials of all towns along the Red Lake river to discuss means of securing a more adequate supply of water in the river. One official from each municipality was named as a committee to draw up plans to bring about temporary relief. A larger project which calls for straightening and dredging the river channel from the Red Lakes to near Highlanding, is to be worked on later. The objective sought now is exactly the same as was worked for by a conservation committee about fifteen years ago. At that time the project was bitterly opposed because some feared the power companies would gain thereby.

BACK FROM MONTANA

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Ulrick and son, John, returned Saturday from a motor trip to Polson, Mont., where they were called by illness of their daughter, Mrs. Harvey Lawin. They were at Polson twelve days, and left after their daughter had showed some improvement. On return trip, they visited with relatives at Elgin, N. D., and were accompanied here by a nephew, Ervin Seibel, who will spend part of the summer at the Ulrick home.

DEFEAT RED LAKE HERE LAST SUNDAY

The St. Hilaire ball team which vies with Thief River Falls as one of the undefeated teams in the Northern Minnesota League for this season, gained its seventh straight victory last Sunday when it defeated Red Lake Falls in a somewhat one-sided contest here by a score of 13 to 2. St. Hilaire opened the slugfest in its share of the first frame by running in four scores. Hallamack on the mound for St. Hilaire, held the visitors scoreless until the seventh inning. While the visitors played a very good brand of ball, altho the score does not indicate it, they did not seem to get the "breaks." As is always the case when these two teams meet, the contest was free from wrangling and a spirit of good sportsmanship prevailed.

DROWNS AT WHITE EARTH

Bennie Anderson, well known young resident of Halstad, was drowned last Sunday while swimming in White Earth Lake southeast of Mahnomen. Mr. Anderson visited in St. Hilaire frequently, and was very well known to the young people of the village.

CORN HAS TASSELS, EARS ON JULY FIRST

New Richland.—The corn growing championship has been awarded with little fear of competition to Ed Casper, New Richland farmer, who had a four acre field of flint corn that broke all records for that part of the country. On July 1 this corn was fully tasseled with well formed ears, and Casper stated that scoffers could come out and have a roasting ear to prove it. The field was planted on April 27 and had nearly a two week's start over other fields in the same community. To beat this on July 1, you must have had your corn in the crib.

Tales About Town

Happenings of the Week, Told in Brief. News Concerning People You Know

Mrs. W. J. Janda returned home this week after a visit in the southern part of the state.

Mr. and Mrs. Mike Highland and daughter, Carmen, motored Monday to Halstad for a short visit with relatives.

Mrs. Gunstyn Bergland and daughter, Gloria, of Thief River, visited Friday at the home of Mrs. M. Volden.

James and Raymond La-Monte of Grafton, N. D., are visiting at the home of their grandfather, Nels Pearson.

Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Johnson and son, Mr. and Mrs. Arvid Dahlstrom and daughter were guests last Sunday at the Loyd Johnson home.

Mr. and Mrs. Gust Peterson were down last evening from Warren for a brief visit at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Olsen.

A good shower of rain fell over this village and east of town Monday evening. Only a few drops fell west of here where need for moisture is more urgent than any other section.

Mrs. S. M. Bestul and son of Washington, D. C., and the Misses Bernice and Ella Ensberg of Minneapolis motored here Friday and visited until Saturday at the home of their sister, Mrs. S. M. Olness.

Work is progressing rapidly on the new overhead bridge on T. H. No. 32 over the Great Northern tracks at Red Lake Falls. The new bridge, located at the south end of that city, will be a beautiful structure when completed.

Mr. and Mrs. Sterling Olness and little son left Saturday for a visit with relatives at Carlyle, Minn., before returning to their home at Westby, Wisc., after having spent a few days here at the home of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. S. M. Olness.

CARRYING—CARTRIDGE IN POCKET NOT HEALTHY

Hancock.—Carrying a revolver cartridge around in an apron pocket while working near a stove is not a very good way to prolong one's life, it was found by a young lady at Clontarf, near Hancock. The daughter of Charlie Chevalier was one of the young women engaged in cooking for a crew of some 40 men harvesting. While so engaged, there was a sudden explosion and the girl felt a stinging sensation in her left arm. An examination disclosed that a piece of shell, apparently from a 22 rible cartridge, had struck her arm just above the elbow, and the doctor called removed a small particle of the shell. Just where it came from is a question, but the likely explanation is that a day or so before, the girl had picked up a 22 cartridge from the floor and put it into her apron pocket. In working near the stove it is probable that the shell in some way fell on the hot stove and the heat exploded it. At any rate, the shell had disappeared from her apron pocket.

Mr. and Mrs. M. Highland and Mrs. N. Dahl visited Sunday at the Kleppe home at Clearbrook.

Mrs. Palmer Hanson and children of Thief River Falls visited Sunday at the home of her sister, Mrs. M. Volden.

Dr. Horn, the Ulen dentist, was here Monday this week. Owing to the intense heat, he made only a one-day stay this trip.

Mr. and Mrs. Richard Larson and son, Raymond, attended a family re-union of Mrs. Larson's people last week-end at Kennedy.

Co. Commissioner Paul Roy was at Thief River both Monday and Tuesday to preside at the semi-annual session of the county board.

Mrs. Arvid Dahlstrom and daughter, Marilyn, returned Sunday after visiting a few weeks at the home of her sister at Washington, D. C.

ICE CREAM SOCIAL

The M. E. Community Ladies' Aid will give an ice cream social at the W. D. Ewing place in St. Hilaire Friday evening, July 17. A cordial invitation is extended to everyone to come.

SCHOOL PROCEEDINGS

Board of Education of School Dist. 102, held its postponed regular meeting at the school house Thursday evening, June 18th, 1936 at 8 P. M.

All members present.

Mrs. Eleanor Hanson presided.

Minutes of the last regular meeting approved as read.

NEW SCHOOL BUSSES

Elmer Johnson and Clarence Hallstrom, who were awarded contracts recently for furnishing bus service to the local school for the coming year, were down at Virginia and Hibbing last week and brot home two busses. One is an International and the other is a Ford. Both have late type steel bodies, and have a capacity of 25 or more pupils.

GARNES IS COMING FOR GAME SUNDAY

Baseball fans will be given another opportunity to witness a good ball game on local grounds when the Garnes team comes next Sunday to play their return game with St. Hilaire. Garnes has a good bunch of "stickers" as well as a lot of loyal supporters, and they are coming next Sunday prepared to put up a battle. While St. Hilaire won from Garnes there a few weeks ago, it is anticipated this game will be much closer.

The following Sunday, July 26, St. Hilaire plays Thief River in that city, and on August 2, Thief River will play its return game here. Much interest is being shown in these two games as they will likely decide the championship for the league this season.

THIEF RIVER BEATS OKLEE

The Thief River Falls ball team won from Oklee in a rather one-sided game played last evening at Thief River. A number of fans from here witnessed the game which resulted in a score of 16 for Thief River to 4 for Oklee.

BIRDS BUILD NEST IN CLOTHES OF SCARECROW

Hibbing.—Scarecrows have become a menace to Hibbing residents and are attracting birds instead of driving them away. A certain Hibbing family which takes great pride in a particularly abundant crop of strawberries in their back yard made the painful discovery recently that the birds were eating the tiny berries as rapidly as they appeared on the plants. Somewhat apalled at the prospect of losing all their berries they erected a scarecrow consisting of a rake, a discarded raincoat, figured dress and hat which pesented a most gotesque appeaance. Strange as it may seem, it was discovered a few days later that a tiny wren was busily building her nest in the collar of the raincoat worn by "Monsieur Scarecrow," just to be handy to her supply of feed.

Much needed additional room in the bleachers on the county fair grounds is being provided at the present time in the process of rebuilding the stands, with which the grandstand will have a seating capacity of 2,500 persons, according to Secretary Robert J. Lund. The passageway between the two stands has been eliminated, and at the fair this year entrance to the bleachers will be had thru the east end and thru an opening in the center of the structure, while the grandstand entrance will be on the west end.

PEAT FIRE BREAKS OUT IN RIVER FALLS

Fanned by a strong wind, a peat fire which had smouldered for some weeks on parts of Sections 3 and 10 of River Falls, broke out last week and swept over some hay lands in that vicinity besides burning over brush lands and destroying much timber. Residents near the peat swale, which runs partially in sections 3-10-11 and 14 or River Falls, were compelled to call for help to check the ground fires sweeping toward their buildings. A tractor and blade were put in use to throw up breaks to prevent spread of the fire to hay lands and grain fields on adjoining lands. While the fire is being held in check at this time, there is the ever-present possibility that a high wind may come up at any time to spread the flames and cause much damage.

RIVER IS VERY LOW

The water stage in the Red Lake river is the lowest at the present time that it has been since this section was first settled. Where millions of feet of logs floated years ago, there is no difficulty now in crossing on the rocks without getting wet.

ENTRIES COMING IN RAPIDLY FOR FAIR CONTESTS

Numerous entries were received this week in the contests which will be a novel feature of the county fair July 28 to 31, Secretary Robert J. Lund announced today.

The prize contest for amateur entertainers is arousing much interest, with each of the performers to be given an opportunity to show his merits preceding the evening shows in front of the grandstand.

Among entries received up to yesterday by W. E. Dahlquist, chairman in charge, are Ruby and Ruth Angell of Smiley who will present a duet with ukelele accompaniment; Earl Kelly, 9, and Harold Kelly, 7, in a violin duet; Jewell Helen Warner, tap dancing; and Leroy Rupprecht, yodeling and guitar.

Entries in the prize bicycle race, all aged from twelve to 15 years, include Paul Senstad, Orrin Peterson, Lurel Anderson, Neil Mullen Roman Paulson, John Foster and Warren Wilson. The races will be run off under the supervision of W. G. Claffy, who will also be in charge of the horseshoe pitching contest to determine the county champion. A number of tossers have already entered the lists.

Secretary Lund announced that a pig race is another prospective addition to the fair program, all depending on whether the necessary number of entries are forthcoming.

The Dictator's Job

Dictators have the hardest job in the world, which is to keep on dictating. Sooner or later they are caught in a vicious circle, because people—over a long period—can no more be stopped from thinking than they can be stopped from breathing. A dictatorship tightens and tightens and then either (a) loosens up in order to survive, or (b) breaks down in counter-revolution or counter - dictatorship. In each case the people, to some degree, are thrown back on their capacity for self-government — John Gunther in Cosmopolitan.

Two Platforms

Washington.—As the full meaning of the platforms of the two major party conventions sinks in, certain very definite conclusions cannot be avoided. In each instance, the two old political organizations have moved into virgin territory, entirely new fields.

In the case of the Republicans, their Cleveland convention completely reorganized their party leadership and placed the responsibility in the hands of younger men, casting onto the ash heap along with the old guard leaders, many of the old time conservative ideas.

In the case of the Democrats, their Philadelphia convention virtually created a new party. They went further toward the radical side than they have ever gone before. In no spirit of criticism, it must be said that the Philadelphia convention really gave birth to a New Deal party, as such. The one thing they kept was the Democratic label.

The theme song of the Republican platform was molded out of the fabric that is part and parcel of the younger generation as distinguished from the attitude given birth and promoted and protected by the Penroses, the Lodges, the Smoots and others of that texture. This is to say that the Republican convention, for the first time in many years, has moved its campaign pronouncements out onto something approximating a moral plan, or at least the evidence is they have attempted to do so.

The Democrats, having had ten days between the Republican convention and their own in which to study the Republican document and improve upon it, went considerably beyond their opponents in the language they used. They have made an appeal to the voters of the nation that surely will attract many thousands of voters to the support of Mr. Roosevelt.

On the other hand, the Philadelphia convention proceeded to cast aside many traditions, many principles, which old line Democrats, who love the Jeffersonian theory, regard as their political bible, and they may antagonize that segment of the old party by so doing.

To state the proposition in another way, many observers and political analysts hold that while the Democratic platform contains fewer contradictions than does the Republican pronouncement and that, on the whole, it is a much better written platform, they have leaned so far to the radical side that they are leaving conservative Democrats and old guard Republicans only one place to go—to the Republican candidate. This develops because, in the first instance, the old guard Republicans obviously cannot embrace a Democratic platform which they regard as too liberal and they have no choice but the Republicans. The conservative Democrats will have the choice to make. They can go to the New Deal party or they can remain as old line Democrats and swallow their pride of party affiliation long enough to support the Republican, Governor Landon.

Under Orders

One may look back over the doings at Philadelphia and recognize that the meeting was thoroughly controlled from Washington. That was natural because the party in power obviously has all of the important federal offices filled with its own men. The convention included among its delegates about 64 per cent of federal office holder-delegates.

That explains better than any way I know how the 104-year-old two-thirds rule was so easily abrogated. That rule has been a sore spot in conventions for years. It has many times been the direct cause of bitter convention battles and has bred scores of bitter personal animosities. It was none the less interesting, however, to see the Philadelphia delegates toss out principles of the Democratic party with such utter abandon.

I am convinced that the Democrats have not seen the end of the two-thirds rule yet. There is every indication that it will arise again when the next quadrennial meeting is held. There are plenty of Democrats who believe that the requirement of a vote of two-thirds of all delegates shall be recorded for the man selected as the party's Presidential nominee is a protective measure. But when the convention voted out the two-thirds rule, it took the Democratic party out of the hands of the South.

It seems to me that the Southerners cannot be blamed for desiring to maintain that two-thirds rule. This is their position: through all of the recent elections, the Democratic nominee has begun his campaign with the assurance that 11, 12 or 13 states in the South would give him their electoral vote. He could concentrate, therefore, on the North and the West. The old line southerners have held that since they always supplied from 100 to 140 electoral votes upon which the Democratic nominee could build, they ought to have something to say about his nomination, about the type of man selected. The two-thirds rule gave them a veto power and they have used it many times.

Now, unless the old line Democrats again gain control of the party, the South will no longer be able to sit as the umpire in deciding the type of character of the man who will bear their party label in campaigns.

The question may arise in many minds as to how the rule came to be discarded so easily. Earlier in this report to you, I mentioned that 64 per cent of the delegates to Philadelphia were federal office holders or party leaders selected by the Roosevelt patronage dispensers. The presence of those office holders and party leaders who have been bound to the Roosevelt administration in one way or another constitutes the answer. There were enough of them in the southern delegations to constitute a balance of power on close votes in state delegation caucuses. Hence we witnessed a good many southern states voting to abrogate the two-thirds rule over protests of some of their own numbers.

Quote Jefferson

There is another circumstance about the Philadelphia convention that I believe warrants mention. It may have gone unnoticed generally but just 160 years after Thomas Jefferson drafted the Declaration of Independence, the Philadelphia convention of the Democratic party copied from the immortal Declaration the famous phrase: "We hold these truths to be self-evident."

It was a bold move on the part of the New Dealers to lift that Jeffersonian expression and to place it among the many new theories and new ideals which they advance under the banner of what was the Jeffersonian party. Some observers point out that this action may invite comparison between the political ideals of Thomas Jefferson and Franklin D. Roosevelt because surely there is much more in the Declaration of Independence than the simple expression that certain truths are self-evident.

Talk About Peace

In these days when the world, as well as the American nation, is sorely troubled and disturbed, those Americans who are convinced that isolation may ruin our country, can find little satisfaction either in the Democratic or Republican platforms. This may not seem important until one looks back over the last two decades. Examination of what has happened in that time is sufficient to demonstrate the significance of this isolationist trend by both major political parties.

The Republican plank on foreign affairs has little to say and what it says is chiefly negative. The plank drafted by the Roosevelt administration and adopted by the Philadelphia convention is as nebulous as the milky way. Each platform talks about peace but it is decidedly doubtful that either platform has offered a genuine way to obtain or maintain peace.

It was only natural that the Republicans should restate their opposition to the League of Nations. It was likewise only natural that the Democratic plank on foreign affairs should be full of glittering generalities because it is yet to be remembered that the late Woodrow Wilson has countless followers in the New Deal party who hold the conviction that the League of Nations, with American support, would solve most world problems. It is obvious, therefore, that the Democrats could not commit the party either to League adherence or non-adherence.

Except for the party split over the old Wilsonian policies whose ideals stood as a ghost in the background in the Philadelphia convention, one might have expected more definite declarations from the Philadelphia conclave. For example, the Roosevelt administration has sponsored reciprocal trade agreements. It has broadened American foreign policy in many other ways but some leader in the group that drafted the 1936 platform was smart enough to realize that a declaration on internationalism that was too strong would have brought about a vicious outburst at Philadelphia. In consequence, almost nothing of a tangible character was forthcoming.

Therefore, in summing up, I think it must be concluded that both platforms have been drawn to appeal to Americans as isolationists. Likewise, it occurs to me that the interpretation of their promises and plans and foreign policies by the two contending candidates will be the more interesting as the campaigns proceed.

Conscript the Men

A clergyman in a Midwest town, just before service, was asked to marry a couple. He explained that here wasn't time for the ceremony but said he would perform the ceremony if the couple would be seated and wait till the end of the service, to which they agreed.

At the proper moment the clergyman said: "Will those who wish to be united in the holy bond of matrimony please come forward?"

Whereupon 13 women and one man proceeded to the altar.

for Greater Safety!

THE MASTERPIECE OF TIRE CONSTRUCTION

THERE is a reason why Louis Meyer won the 500-mile Indianapolis race this year—and why he is the only man ever to win this gruelling race three times. He always used Firestone Gum-Dipped Tires, and never experienced tire trouble of any kind.

Louis Meyer knows tire construction. He also knows that to drive for 500 consecutive miles over this hot brick track, negotiating the dangerous curves 800 times at the record-breaking average speed of 109 miles an hour, requires tires of super strength and greatest blowout protection, as a blowout on any one of the dangerous curves would likely mean instant death. By the Firestone patented Gum-Dipping process every cord in the tires on Louis Meyer's car was soaked and coated with liquid rubber, thereby preventing internal friction and heat. This is the secret of the extra strength and reserve safety built into Firestone Tires.

You of course will not drive 109 miles per hour, but at today's higher speeds you do need tires that will give you greatest blowout protection and will stop your car up to 25% quicker. Take no chances! Let your Firestone Auto Supply and Service Store or Firestone Dealer equip your car with Firestone Gum-Dipped Tires, the safest tires built. It costs so little to protect lives worth so much!

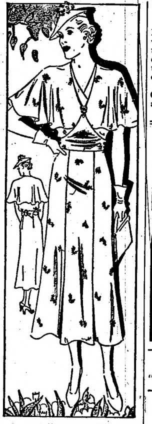
Matron's Dress with Vestee



Pattern No. 1907-B

This dress designed with soft capelet sleeves and a contrasting vestee is one of those perennial styles. It is always a pleasure to show by popular request. They're so universally becoming to larger and more mature women, and so adaptable to conventional occasions.

The model shown is a clever street frock which takes into consideration the fitting problem encountered by many women whose tastes incline toward conservative rather than complicated dressmaking. The lines are studied to give, slenderness without sacrificing a trim and neat appearance, exemplified in the beautiful pointed up bodice, especially graceful and smart. Sheer cotton, prints and chiffons are delightful for town or country.

Barbara Bell Pattern No. 1907-B is available for sizes: 34, 6, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46, 48 and 50. Size 36 requires 4¾ yards of 39 inch material. Send 15 cents in coins.

Send for the Summer Pattern Book containing 100 Barbara Bell well-planned, easy-to-make patterns. Exclusive fashions for children, young women, and matrons. Send 15 cents for your copy.

MINNESOTA NEWS

Ada—Plans have been drawn for a new $40,000 hospital to be erected here.

Jackson—Contract for installation of a new Diesel generating unit for the municipal power plant was let by the city council here on a bid of $38,406.

Minneapolis—A plea to the state executive council for an increase in state relief aid up to $2,000,000 was drafted by the Minneapolis estimate board's finance committee.

Minneapolis—City taxpayers have contributed only $3,044,691 in cash for relief expenditures, totaling $22,567,161 for the past five years the Minneapolis Civic and Commerce association pointed out.

St. Paul—Butter prices made the second marked advance because of the heat wave and lack of rain which is seriously affecting feed crops and pastures. November butter futures jumped $240 a car.

Excelsior—Complete ruin of Minnesota's raspberry crop was predicted by Fred Haralson, superintendent of the state breeding farm at Excelsior, if heat continues. Vegetable and truck gardens also face ruin.

Minneapolis—Drought has caused a 50 per cent drop in the production of milk, the Twin Cities Milk Producers Association reported. The supply still is adequate to meet demands, however, it was reported.

Duluth—Facing the prospect of the largest trout planting season in the Arrowhead country's history, the state fish hatchery at French river began placing millions of southern Minnesota fingerings in streams in this vicinity.

Excelsior—Approval of the $500,000 Big Crow river diversion project designed to improve Lake Minnetonka and restore Minnehaha Falls, was urged by Attorney General Harry H. Peterson in a telegram to Harold L. Ickes, PWA administrator.

Duluth—Deer in the Itasca park area can be saved from starvation this winter if the state conservation commission sets aside a new game refuge in the Paul Bunyan state forest, 16 miles east of Itasca state park, according to game authorities.

St. Paul—Prizes totaling $18,923 were allotted to the cattle division of the Minnesota State fair for this year's exposition. The fair will open September 5 and continue to September 12. A total of $87,101 in prizes will be on the 1936 premium list.

Cambridge—During the fiscal year ended July 1, WPA paid $34,060.91 for labor and material on the 10 projects that have been in operation in Isanti county. There are at present 64 persons on the WPA pay roll as compared with 78 persons employed in January.

St. Cloud—Factual information about St. Cloud, both historical and economic, is contained in a new 64-page brochure published by the St. Cloud Chamber of Commerce on the basis of information supplied by a WPA writers' project. The book is the first of several to be issued about various Minnesota cities.

St. Cloud—After twice narrowly evading capture—first in a chase by a sheriff and later when they abandoned a stolen automobile and continued their flight in another—two St. Cloud reformatory convicts are still at liberty. The escaped prisoners are Floyd Schake, 20, Anoka, and Walter Michalek, 18, of Minneapolis. Both were serving terms for automobile theft.

St. Peter—Lawrence Devol, leader of a band of criminally insane convicts who escaped June 7 from the Minnesota State insane asylum at St. Peter, and a former member of the Karpis-Barker gang, was shot to death in Enid, Okla. He was brought down by police bullets in a shooting affray in which an Enid policeman was slain and two other officers were wounded, one of them critically.

Minneapolis—Rates ranging from $7.80 to $15.90 an acre have been set for the soil-conserving payments for Minnesota counties under the 1936 agricultural conservation program, according to Frank J. Brown, in charge of information for the program in Minnesota. This marked the launching in Minnesota of the federal farm aid program which replaces the AAA crop adjustment plan held unconstitutional.

Minneapolis—If the Mill City goes a bit screwy during the week beginning Friday, July 17, it will be because those mad Marx brothers, Hollywood movie comedians, are cavorting on the stage of the Minnesota theater. Together with a company of 45 singers, dancers, and Hollywood beauties, the famous brothers are presenting a stage musical comedy, "A Day At The Races", testing public reaction to it before returning to California to make it into a motion picture. Only four other cities in the country will have the opportunity of seeing this production.

Minneapolis — President Roosevelt plans to make a personal survey in mid-August of the northwest drouth areas to check up on operation of plans to distribute federal relief among 170,000 farm families. In revealing his intention to tour the northwest, including a possible speech at the diamond jubilee celebration of the Dakotas, the President said 50,000 farmers would go to work at once on WPA projects and that before the relief projects are completed, 204,000 will be receiving federal aid.

Cherry Pie Made From Home Canned Cherries Cannot Be Beat

It's Time to Preserve Your Quota of the Delectable Fruit.

By Zella Hale Weyant

If you are lucky enough to have a few cherry trees of your own, or if not as you shop in the market or drive in the country we know you have watched the arrival of the cherries. Something about their bright red color and tart flavor appeals to all of us. They seem to be the "spring tonic" for which we have been waiting.

Cherries belong in the acid group of foods and are very easily canned. They may be canned with or without pits. However, most homemakers prefer to pit them because they lend themselves to a greater variety of ways in which they may be served. And now for a small amount a cherry pitting machine may be purchased. The cherries should be stemmed and washed before pitting so that none of the good juices of the cherries are lost during the pitting process.

Because of their acid content the color and flavor of the canned cherries will be better if they are processed in the hot water bath, and in order to carry the canning procedure through without delay, it is always best to assemble the canning equipment before the work on the fruit is begun. See that all the necessary pans, knives, spoons, to be used in cleaning and preparing the cherries are clean and ready to be used. Have the water bath canner on the stove and enough water in it to cover the jars at least one inch over the top. The water in the canner should be near the boiling point before the jars are placed into it for processing.

Also collect and inspect the jars and caps that are needed for the canning. Be sure the jars are free from nicks, cracks and sharp edges that would prevent a seal. Remember to have a sufficient amount of jars and caps on hand to complete the canning. The two-piece "self-sealing" caps will require a new lid and the screw top caps a new rubber ring. And again we present the simple rules for correct use of each type of jar cap: When using the two-piece "self-sealing" cap, place lid on jar with sealing composition next to the glass and screw the band firmly tight. If using the wire-clamp glass lid jar, place glass lid and rubber ring on jar and put the upper bail in position across the glass lid. If using the zinc top cap, place rubber ring on jar and screw the cap down, then turn back quarter inch. On the jars using the rubber rings, the seal is completed as soon as the jars are removed from the canner. The self-sealing can requires no further adjusting at the end of the processing period, but is simply removed from the canner and set right side up to cool.

The home canning of such fruits as cherries is so easily done that even a novice may be assured of success if proper canning procedure is followed along with these tested recipes:

Cherries (Cold Pack)

Wash, stem, pit if desired. Pack into clean jars to within half inch of the top. Fill to within one and a half inches of the top with a medium sirup (made of two parts water to one part sugar) or if desired a heavier sirup may be used. Process in water bath for 20 minutes.

Cherry Preserves

10 pounds cherries 8 pounds sugar

Wash and pit the cherries. Add the sugar. Boil until the liquid is of the desired consistency. Pour into sterilized jars and seal.

Cherry Conserve

3 cups cherries
2 cups seedless raisins
3 cups water
Sugar

Remove the pits from cherries and cut raisins in pieces. Add water and boil 30 minutes. To each cup pulp add one cup sugar. Cook until thick. Pour into sterilized jars and seal.

CAPTAIN FRANK HAWKS, HOLDER OF MORE AVIATION RECORDS THAN ANY LIVING PILOT, AND HIS YOUNG FRIENDS, JERRY AND JANET, CHARTER MEMBERS OF THE AIR HAWKS CLUB, ARE WINGING THEIR WAY OVER THE BURNING SANDS OF THE GREAT SAHARA DESERT.
THERE YOU ARE. A REAL CAMEL CARAVAN!
BUT THOSE MEN! THEY LOOK BAD TO ME!
YEAH.. AND THEY SEEM KIND OF STARTLED TO SEE US!
CAPTAIN FRANK! I HEARD A MOAN FROM ONE OF THOSE HAMPERS!
GREAT HEAVENS! THESE MUST BE SLAVE-TRADERS! AND THE SLAVES ARE HIDDEN IN THOSE HAMPERS. IT'S A LIVING DEATH FOR THOSE POOR DEVILS!
O-OH-H!
SH-H! WE MUST GET OUR WATER, WANDER AROUND SO THEY WON'T SUSPECT US.. THEN FLY TO THE NEAREST POST OF THE FRENCH FOREIGN LEGION. —CAREFUL NOW!
WHAT'LL WE EVER DO?
BUT—THEIR CAUTION IS WASTED! ALREADY THEY ARE SUSPECTED AND THE SLAVE-TRADERS HATCH A DEVILISH PLOT
HA-A—WE CAN'T TOUCH 'EM HERE: THE LEGION'D COME LOOKING FOR 'EM AND SPOIL OUR GAME. WE GOTTA FIX THAT PLANE SO THEY CRASH ACCIDENTAL-LIKE! LISTEN—I GOT IT—
ME, TOO. BUT WHAT'S THAT FUNNY RATTLING NOISE? SAY—IT'S STOPPED!
WHEW! I'M GLAD WE'RE SAFE!
OUR LANDING GEAR'S GONE!
THE SLAVE-TRADERS HAD LOOSENED THE BOLTS OF THE LANDING GEAR, KNOWING THAT THE PLANE'S VIBRATION WOULD SOON SHAKE IT OFF. THEN— A FATAL, ACCIDENTAL CRACK-UP WHEN HAWKS TRIED TO LAND
WE'RE IN A TOUGH SPOT, YOUNGSTERS. ABOUT ONE CHANCE IN 100. I'LL HAVE TO "SKATE" HER IN!
HOORAY! YOU SURE CAN MAKE A PLANE DO TRICKS, CAPTAIN FRANK!
CAPT. HAWKS KNOWS THAT THE SLIGHTEST SLIP MEANS A TRAGIC CRACK-UP. BUT WITH IRON NERVE AND MATCHLESS SKILL, HE SLIDES THE PLANE SAFELY ALONG THE DESERT SANDS IN FRONT OF THE FOREIGN LEGION OUTPOST.
THE FRENCH SOLDIERS'LL GET THOSE SLAVE-TRADERS WON'T THEY, CAPT. FRANK?
YOU BET, JANET! NOW—GET AFTER YOUR POST'S BRAN FLAKES. YOU KNOW I WANT YOU AIR HAWKS TO EAT LOTS OF THEM. THEY'RE SO GOOD FOR YOU!
YOU DON'T HAVE TO URGE US. 'CAUSE THERE'S NOTHING WE LIKE BETTER. THEY'RE SLICK!

179 PENNINGTON COUNTY FARMERS HAVE U. S. LOANS

Federal Farm Loan Act Has Been in Existence Twenty Years

Observing this week the 20-year anniversary of the passing of the farm loan act of 1916, which marked the beginning of cooperative credit for farmers in the United States, President Roy A. Nelson of the Federal Land Bank of St. Paul, said that there are 179 farmers in Pennington county who have federal land bank or commissioner's loans.

In the whole state of Minnesota there were only 869 land bank loans outstanding at the end of 1917, the first calendar year of operation.

"In these 20 years one of the most outstanding services the land bank has rendered to farmers of the Northwest is the reduction in interest rates," Mr. Nelson said. "Starting with 6 per cent loans, the bank has been able to progressively reduce interest to the point where the borrower of today is keeping in his pocket one dollar out of every three that he would have had to pay under conditions that used to prevail."

Under the 4 per cent rate at which all new loans are made, the land bank borrower pays off both principal and interest with installments that together amount to only 5.4 per cent, and in 34 years the loan is wiped out.

"The system that was inaugurated 20 years ago," Nelson said, "has to its credit 4 main features; it has reduced interest, given the farmer a long period to pay off his mortgage, provided him with a share in conducting the institution from which he obtains his credit, and it has established definitely the principle of making loans on the basis of what the farm can earn. By so doing it is providing helpful instead of burdensome credit, for it is of no real value to a person to obtain a loan larger than his income can repay."

The land bank system of 1916 was expanded into the Farm Credit Administration in May, 1933 and now provides short-term production loans and credit for farmers' cooperative business enterprises in addition to the long-term farm mortgage credit of the beginning.

STARTS NUDIST COLONY IN STORE SHOW WINDOW

Park Rapids.—It may have just been the familiar smell of sawdust, and it certainly was partly due to an over indulgence in spirituous liquors that caused a resident of Pensford to choose the show window of a Park Rapids butcher shop in which to take off his clothes and go to sleep. Imagine the surprise of Patrolman Jack Smith early on Sunday morning to see lying in the window, clad in nothing but Nature's endowment, a slumbering man. Smith was in a frenzy to get the man's clothes on before the early churchgoers started past, and finally succeeded in taking the still sleepy individual to the place provided for those in his condition. Police had the option of charging him with drunkenness and disorderly conduct, or breaking and entering, but finally chose the former charge and he was fined $27.50 Monday morning, leaving for home an infinitely sadder and soberer man.

Appear With WLS Barn Dance at Fair July 28

Tom Owens, nationally known caller from Radio Station WLS, Chicago, is bringing one of danceland's most popular bands to the Pennington county fair Tuesday evening, July 28, when the WLS barn dance entertainers make a one-night appearance in Thief River Falls.

Featured in the band are Curtis Bieritz, wizard of the piano accordion; Harold Gooswick and Hiram Winder, singers; and Al Erickson, the Swedish hill-billy, who tickles the ivories in convincing fashion.

The Tom Owens entertainers, in addition to providing the background for the entire WLS road show, put over several specialities that will send fair patrons on their way home with a song in their hearts.

To Check on Payments to Aged Persons Here

In an effort to check the mounting cost of old-age assistance payments in Pennington county, the county board at its July session this week engaged John Lynsky of Walker to serve as investigator of payments to present and future beneficiaries. Mr. Lynsky, who has been doing similar work in Cass county, is expected to assume his duties here Monday. The county's share of old-age assistance payments now aggregates approximately $1,500 a month, a steady rise having taken place since the system was inaugurated last spring.

Largely because of the addition of these payments to county expenditures, the board found it necessary to raise the county budget for the coming year from $101,000 this year to $114,562.50 in 1937. The increase would have been still greater had not the board taken $7,000 from the road and bridge fund and made other minor reductions in an attempt to hold the increase in the total budget to a reasonable figure. A detailed statement of the budget figures had not been completed by County Auditor A. M. Senstad in time to be included in this issue.

Other business transacted by the board included action on a number of applications for tax abatements, and the appropriation of the sum of $400 to the county fair.

Heat and Insects Held Menace to Sweet Clover Seed Crop in Northwest

During the past week it has been brought to the attention of the county agent's office that many fields of sweet clover are not setting seed properly. The extreme heat and dry weather may have done damage. Another factor may be a very small insect that destroys the flowers before fertilization takes place. There is no way of controlling this insect. County R. M. Douglass suggests that every farmer watch his sweet clover fields closely in regard to the setting of the seed. Because of the drouth conditions hay prices will no doubt be somewhat higher than they were last year. If a farmer feels that his seed crop will be very small because of a low seed set perhaps it will be better for him to cut his sweet clover for hay.

Orange Classed as Berry

In the strictest sense the orange is not a fruit. The botanist classes it as a berry because the seed is contained within.

R. LARSON, HOLMES ELECTED TUESDAY

The annual meeting of the local school district was held Tuesday evening at the school building. Report of last year's activities was read and approved. It was decided to make a smaller levy for school purposes for the coming year than last year which means there will be a reduction in taxes to be paid in 1937. Richard Larson was re-elected, and Harold Holmes was elected to succeed Hans F. Hanson as members of the board.

BACK FROM WESTERN TRIP

Mr. and Mrs. Verner Nelson and daughter of Warren, Mr. and Mrs. Milton Schantzen of Minneapolis, and Mike Fricker of this village returned Tuesday afternoon after a three weeks' vacation trip to Wyoming and Colorado. They visited with Mr. and Mrs. William Peterson at Laramie, Wyo., and with Mr. and Mrs. Nels A. Nelson and family at Golden, Colo. They spent most of the time camping out and enjoying fishing in the mountain streams in both states. Enroute home they went through the Black Hills of South Dakota, a region nationally known for its grand scenery.

SUNDAY SCHOOL PICNIC JULY 26

The Norwegian Lutheran Sunday school will hold its annual picnic on Sunday, July 26, at the St. Hilaire tourist park beginning with open-air services at 11 o'clock with Prof. Jordahl of Fertile as the speaker. Picnic dinner will be at noon, and the Sunday School will give a short program in the afternoon. All members, and anyone else interested, are cordially invited to come and spend a pleasant afternoon. In case of rain, the gathering will be held at the church parlors.

HARVESTING STARTED

Harvesting of small grain is well under way in this vicinity, and will be general the coming week. Altho the yield will not be heavy, the grain appears to be of good quality, especially wheat. From present indications, flax will be the poorest crop of all.

A modern bungalow is nearing completion on the Gust Johnson farm northwest of here to replace the house destroyed by fire a few months ago.

BOOSTER TRIP FRIDAY

A group of Pennington County Fair boosters from Thief River Falls will make a trip Friday evening this week to Plummer, Oklee, Brooks, Terrebonne, Red Lake Falls and St. Hilaire. Short programs will be given at each stop, and advertising matter distributed. The tour is scheduled to stop here at 10:05 Friday evening and will remain for a period of fifteen minutes.

PENNINGTON FAIR TO OPEN TUESDAY

Uncle Ezra and his WLS Barn Dance troupe will open the Pennington County Fair entertainment program at Thief River Falls Tuesday night, July 28. On Wednesday, Thursday and Friday nights the program will feature "Around the Town", a Barnes & Carruthers revue. The afternoon program will consist of horse racing and vaudeville and circus acts. Rebuilding of the old grand stand has greatly increased the seating capacity and it is estimated that 2,500 spectators can now be accomodated. The Pennington County Fair has enjoyed a steady growth in recent years and is now the fourth largest in the state. Adult admissions are only 25c and children under twelve are admitted free.

BAND CONCERT SATURDAY

The St. Hilaire school band will give another of its popular concerts next Saturday evening at the grounds north of the Larson Bros. store. Everyone in the community is cordially invited to come and hear the band.

H. GULLICKSON KILLED

Harold Gullikson, brother of Ludvig Gullikson, former section foreman here, died Wednesday forenoon of last week from injuries sustained in an auto accident early that morning. He was returning to the home of his parents at Middle River after visiting with friends at Badger, when the accident occured. Mr. Gullikson joined the U. S. Navy some years ago, and was home on furlough when he met death.

"Taft" as he was commonly called among his friends, was well known to many people here.

Seven persons, including Arthur Vik of St. Hilaire, had hearings today before Judge Brattland at Thief River in connection with applications for citizenship. Mr. Vik's application was granted.

CONSERVATION GROUP MEETS AT R. L. FALLS

The annual meeting of the Northwestern Minnesota Association of Conservation Clubs will be held next Monday evening at 8 o'clock at Red Lake Falls. The principal address will be given by Mr. Manweiler of the United States forestry service, and a representative of the Minnesota game and fish department also is expected to be present.

WOULD REORGANIZE SCHOOLS SYSTEM

After making a comprehensive survey in 14 selected counties during the past year in cooperation with the state department of education, the state planning board has recommended that a drastic reduction in the number of school districts and a complete reorganization of the entire Minnesota educational system to effect economies and reduce operating expenses. The board recommended merger of school districts so as to eliminate small and inefficiently operated units, more efficient use of physical facilities, and improved administrative and teaching staffs. To the end that equal educational opportunities be made available to all Minnesota children, the board announced remedial legislation would be sought at the next session of the legislature in January of 1937. The proposed plan for re-organization of the state school system is along the same line as is now used in Wisconsin.

SOIL CONSERVING BASES ANNOUNCED SOON FOR COUNTY

The bases on farms signed up under the soil conservation program are expected to be sent to the producers in Pennington county in the near future, county Agent R. M. Douglass announced today.

When the producers are notified of the bases, they should check to see if they are in line for their maximum payment this year. The base figure will be given on the notification of the base for the farm and in order to obtain the maximum payment, a 15% reduction from this base is necessary. It will be necessary to adjust all of these bases by the committeemen so that some of them may be smaller than the 1935 acres. In that case, if the maximum payment is desired it will be necessary to have a stand of legumes on this land representing the 15% reduction.

Very soon a series of meetings will be held in the county explaining these new provisions and to go over the new method of payment which has been made more liberal because of the drouth. Anyone intending to apply for a grant should be sure to attend these meetings to get the information first hand.

GARNES LOSES TILT HERE LAST SUNDAY

Continuing its winning streak the St. Hilaire ball team got its eighth straight victory in the Northern Minnesota League schedule by defeating Garnes here last Sunday by a score of 10 to 6. The visitors scored in the opening frame, and the locals crossed the pan in their part of the second inning. From that point on, the game was very interesting, the teams being tied at three different times. Altho the local boys played a good game, they were not up to their usual form, and a number of errors were chalked up against them, as well as several for their opponents. Next Sunday the local team will meet Thief River Falls in that city. The latter also are undefeated so far in this season's schedule of games, so a better than usual contest can be looked for.

DETAILED FIGURES ON COUNTY BUDGET GIVEN BY SENSTAD

Detailed figures on the Pennington county tax levy for 1936, aggregating $114,562.50, were announced this week by County Auditor A. M. Senstad following action taken by the commissioners.

The levy is $13,562.50 higher than the $101,000 total for 1935, but only approximately $3,000 higher than disbursements for the past fiscal year. The provision in the budget adopted last week for a levy of $24,000 for old-age assistance includes approximately $6,000 to make up an overdraft in the fund for the current year. It is anticipated that expenditures from this fund will aggregate about $1,500 a month during the coming year.

Following is the levy for the various funds in 1936 and the corresponding expenditures for 1935:

	1936	1935
Co. Revenue	$35,000.00	$36,509.12
Poor fund	9,062.50	9,287.71
Old Age	24,000.00	7,360.00
Sanatorium	6,000.00	4,896.25
Road & Bridge	40,500.00	44,903.52
Bonds & Int.	---------	8,485.50
	$114,562.50	$111,442.10

County Has Received Total of $38,655 in AAA Benefit Payments

Pennington County has received $38,655.14 in rental and benefit payments in the three years since the creation of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, covering the period May 12, 1933 through May 31, 1936, according to information received by Anna Dickie Olesen, State Director of the National Emergency Council.

Rental and benefit payments in Pennington County for the wheat program totaled $27,272.61; corn-hog $11,382.53.

Rental and benefit payments in Minnesota amounted to $35,824,698.13 for the three year period. $3,007,594.13 of this amount was paid during the first five months of 1936.

Use Modern Transports in Conquest of Sahara

Expedition Makes Surveys for Passenger Lines.

Washington, D. C.—"The world's biggest, fiercest, most death-dealing! Come and look at it! In a cage of bus lines, air lines, rail lines! Admission, one round-trip ticket!" Thus may the French advertise a new exhibit in their many-ringed circus of French West Africa. And the new catch has been that bitterest enemy of human life, the wild, the untamable, the unconquerable: the Sahara desert.

"A French expedition has completed a new north-south link in the surveys for lines to carry passengers regularly across desert wastes which had been virgin solitudes until the machine age arrived with its superhuman relentless energy," says the National Geographic society.

"The new route starts at Tindouf, an oasis on the high Dra Plateau of western Algeria, and plunges through about 800 miles of the Sahara's primeval desolation to Walata, French Sudan. It skirts the eastern edge of Mauritania. Both settlements are on east-west trade routes, but travel across the blistering vastness between them has previously been classified as an expensive way to commit suicide.

Jumping-off Place.

"Tindouf, the northern terminus, is a jumping-off place for the upper left-hand corner of the Sahara, which practically blots out life across the top half of Africa, except for a coastal border and a sprinkling of interior bases. Already, on several routes, white busses with windows curtained against the blinding glare of the sun and sand haul passengers along ancient caravan trails to desert hotels of sunbaked mud, furnished with white iron beds and chairs on carpeted floors.

"Signposts point the way through geographical ovens where temperatures average somewhere around 120 degrees by daylight and tumble at sunset toward the freezing point. Raincoats can safely be omitted from baggage strapped atop the busses.

"Thus mechanical progress subdues the desert which was formerly one of the greatest barriers in the world to human travel, pitted with doom, littered with tragedies. Its dangers were braved only for the fabulous profits from traffic in desert gum-arabic, salt, dates, ostrich feathers and kola nuts of the Sudan, or that basic commodity of Africa's 'black ivory' days—slaves.

"The new Tindouf-Walata route crosses territory which was shunned before, threatened as it is with the two greatest dangers of desert travel: nature in a state of utter desolation and human nature in the very rawest. Tindouf is a palm-shaded oasis on a rocky waste of smooth sandstone, sloping down from the Atlas mountains. The sandstone, only occasionally broken with a stretch of rough gravel, is remarkably 'good going' for motors. Surrounding areas are steppes, semi-desert stretches supporting such vegetation as clumps of plantain 50 or 60 yards apart, but hardly enough for hospitality.

Lift Sand Skyward.

"Soon enough the route crosses the Iguidi desert, where sand dunes creep stealthily forward on the strength of swirling winds, gradually obliterating waterholes, and miniature whirlwinds lift sand skyward to form 'waltzing jinns.' The eastern edge of Mauritania must be crossed, in spite of the imperfectly subdued Moors, an Arab tribe that is proud of being a bit more cultivated than other Arabs—more literary, more pious, quicker to aid the faithful, quicker to despoil the unbeliever, quicker to evade the French military patrol cars from Tindouf. Then comes El Juf, about 375 miles of shallow depression in a bowl of red sandstone cliffs, one of the least penetrated parts of the Sahara. Apparently quite flat, its arid surface is barely broken with small dunes and scattered clumps of half-dead gray shrubs, the whole desolate solitude shimmering in a fierce dry heat.

"Walata, the southern terminus, is the first habitable spot encountered in the journey longer than that from New York to Chicago. And 'habitable' in Walata means less than it would imply outside the desert. For this is a population center only for the Tuaregs, a sturdy Berber tribe in which generations of contest with their greatest adversary—the Sahara—have produced a breed that is keen and quick, with the endurance of steel. A desert sandstorm is simply their substitute for a bath. These 'People of the Veil' have developed a technique of building complicated mud cities of houses several stories high with inclosed stairways, and roofed-over streets lined with cafes and shops. And they have also developed a technique of living in them. Here the women enjoy an unusual freedom, preserving traces of a matriarchal society. The men, frantically veiled to the eyes, are deadly fighters, although their weapons are crude shields of antelope hide, pointless swords and arm daggers."

"FLOATING COURTS" FOR ALASKA TRIALS

Judges Cover Districts on Coast Guard Cutters.

Washington.—The difficulties of administering justice in Alaska and how they are met with "floating courts" were described by Lieut. Commander Alfred Richmond of the coast guard, on his recent return to Washington from Alaska.

It may be a year or so before a federal judge can reach many of the tiny villages in his district, Commander Richmond said, but most of the cases are minor and the delay "doesn't matter."

Informed by deputy marshals throughout his district of the docket in the various settlements, the judge forwards to the treasury a request for a coast guard cutter to transport him from place to place.

"He may come into a little town where there have been a few crimes since his last visit, go to the postoffice and open court," Commander Richmond explained.

"And, of course, when I say 'postoffice,' one mustn't get an idea that they are anything like the ones in this country. They just push a few boxes and mail bags aside and begin.

"Naturally, every one in the town turns out. It's one of the most exciting events they have.

"If there is no postoffice or other public building, the court is held on board the cutter."

Many of the cases involve sea otter fishing, which is a serious law violation. Most of the sea otters were killed by the Russians before United States colonization of Alaska, and it now is unlawful to take them at any time.

The usual plea, when that charge is made, is that the otter was not caught at all, but was found dead on the beach, the defendant merely happening along and recovering it.

Poets and People

Love can carry you back through the centuries and make you close to, make you know the men and women who have loved, as you have loved. Love makes the greatest woman who ever lived, Elizabeth Barrett Browning, your sister and mine, and she is our familiar friend because she has sung all the things we haven't words to say. Keats' love is something we know and feel, and that makes him belong to us in a way no other poet has.

We have the miracle of the radio in this cosmopolitan world of today. But there has always been a radio of love that tunes your heart to another heart, so that you can reach across time and space and wipe out loneliness. The Story of a Texas Trail-Blazer

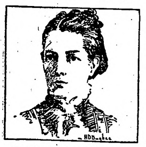
BY ELMO SCOTT WATSON

ON MARCH 2, 1836, the Republic of Texas came into existence in the little town of Washington-on-the-Brazos. Three days later, in a farm home on the prairies of Madison county, Illinois, was born a little boy who was destined to become one of the truly great citizens of Texas even though, unlike some of her traditional heroes, he is but little known outside the borders of the Lone Star state. But few of those heroes had a more interesting career than did Charles Goodnight.

"He rode bareback from Illinois to Texas when he was nine years old. He was hunting with the Caddo Indians beyond the frontier at thirteen, launching into the cattle business at twenty, guiding Texas Rangers at twenty-four, blazing cattle trails two thousand miles in length at thirty, establishing a ranch three hundred miles beyond the frontier at forty, and at forty-five dominating nearly twenty million acres of range country in the interests of order. At sixty he was recognized as possibly the greatest scientific breeder of range cattle in the West, and at ninety he was an active international authority on the economics of the range industry.

"He always rode beyond the borderlands, upon ranges of unspoiled grass. He knew the West of Jim Bridger, Kit Carson, Dick Wootton, St. Vrain and Lucien Maxwell. He ranged a country as vast as Bridger ranged. He rode with the boldness of Frémont, guided by the craft of Carson. The vast and changing country over which he moved, the fertility of a mind that quickly grasped the significance of climate and topography, the inexhaustible energy of his mind and body, and the long period of time through which he constantly applied himself to the Western World, operated to produce in this man an ample nature surpassing many of the more famous characters of frontier history. . . . Now, a hundred years after his birth, his massive frame looms strong among the horsemen of the storied West."

So writes J. Evetts Haley in the book "Charles Goodnight—Cowman and Plainsman," published recently by the Houghton Mifflin company, and this book by a native of the range country of west Texas who is a member of the department of history at the University of Texas, not only is one of the most important Western biographies of recent years but it is an inspiring account of an American frontiersman who was unique among his kind. In contrast to so many men of the border breed whose chief claim to distinction seems to have been their spectacular career of destruction, Goodnight was a constructive force in the country in which he pioneered. True, he had occasion now and then to kill but the men whom he disposed of—rustlers mostly—were the kind of citizens which the community could spare easily enough. On the whole, what he did almost always served the best interests of the region where he lived and at the same time it advanced his own interests. But that was a secondary consideration with him.

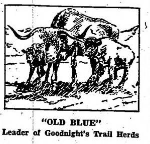


MARY DYER GOODNIGHT

Again in contrast to so many other men of the frontier, who were noted for only one thing, his was an extraordinarily versatile and many-sided personality. Again quoting his biographer:

He was filled with vigorous zest for life. His Observations upon nature ranged, with remarkable freshness, from the prairie dogs of the Palo Duro Plains to the buffalo of the Northwest, from the grasses of the Brazos Valley to the conifers of the Greenhorns. He saw seven-horned sheep grazing with the Navajo flocks along the Pecos, Nature's own photograph of a giant cinnamon bear on the mineral bluffs of the Picketwire, great forests miniatured in the agate of the Rockies and buffaloes and horses racing upside down through the mirages of the Staked Plains. He found time to turn back from the lead of two thousand Texas longhorns to see dove's nests passed over by thousands of hoofs, and left with eggs untouched. He allowed a Texas cow that escaped from his herd on the Pecos and back-trailed through four hundred miles of desert and wilderness to die of old age upon the Keechi range she loved. He cursed the fool who cut down a lone chittam tree at the head of Dry Creek, on the JA ranch, a fine, useful landmark in a country devoid of timber. He carried one of the little Sonoran deer fifty miles across his saddle in front of him, to add to his studies of wild life in the Panhandle.

It was these studies which gave him what fame he had, insufficient though it was, outside the borders of his state. For to anyone at all familiar with the history of the West, the name of Goodnight is inseparably linked with the name of those great shaggy creatures which once roamed the plains by the millions—the buffalo. His interest in these animals began more than 60 years ago, at a time when they were threatened with extinction. He roped a little bull calf, which he named "Old Sikes," and carried him home to his ranch for his devoted wife, Mary Dyer Goodnight, to "bring up." Later he rounded up some more buffalo calves and started the herd of bison on the Palo Duro range whose fame became widespread in this country.



"OLD BLUE"

Leader of Goodnight's Trail Herds

Mr. Haley says that Goodnight, whom he calls the "Burbank of the Open Ranges," first tried the experiment of crossing the buffalo with Galloway cattle, and shows that he, rather than the renowned "Buffalo" Jones, deserves credit for that feat. He is also credited with being the inventor of that essential piece of equipment (certainly essential to hard-working and hungry cowpunchers) of the open range—the chuckwagon. But more important than either of these achievements is the remarkable experiments on the JA ranch which brought him recognition as the greatest scientific breeder of range cattle in the world.

All pictures from Haley's "Charles Goodnight—Cowman and Plainsman," courtesy, Houghton Mifflin Company.

Even if Goodnight had not achieved renown as a cowman, his career as a trail-blazer would have been enough to give him enduring fame. In reality, that career started in 1845—the year Texas became a state—when his mother and stepfather, his older brother and two sisters, left Illinois and started for Texas in two covered wagons.

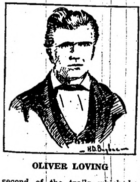
In Texas the boy thrived amid the hardships of pioneer life—helping his elder brother support the family by working for neighboring ranchers, hunting and fishing for food, bringing up a captured wild colt on a bottle and thus getting his first mount. By the time he was nineteen he decided that he knew Texas pretty well and was about ready to move farther west to a newer country — California. With a young companion, and an ox team and a few horses, they started on the long trek west. But by the time they had gone a few hundred miles into West Texas they decided that the state was large enough for them. So Goodnight went back to Palo Pinto county where he ranched and supported his widowed mother. During the Civil war he served with the Texas Rangers, fighting mostly Indians, Mexicans and cattle thieves.

After the war, there was no cattle market. The plains swarmed with herds, and cattle could be bought on credit. Goodnight saw the necessity of finding a western market. So did some others, but the young plainsman, then thirty, differed from the rest in that he determined to find it. There was already one up at Abilene, Kas., where many of the cattlemen took their herds to sell, but Goodnight saw a greater opportunity up in New Mexico, Colorado and Wyoming.

The drawback in the scheme was that between the Panhandle and this promising territory lay a great expanse of desert and territory inhabited by Comanche Indians ready to pounce upon invaders and drive off the cattle. Without heavy protection, no herd could get through. So when Goodnight laid his plan before some of his neighbors, they saw only the danger connected with the venture and declined to have anything to do with it.

But young Goodnight found a partner. He was Oliver Loving, one of the most experienced cowmen in Texas at that time. The story of how these two men blazed the Goodnight-Loving Trail across West Texas and up into New Mexico to Fort Sumner, how Oliver Loving lost his life in the venture and how Goodnight brought the body of his partner back to his native Texas is one of the epics of the West. "Though Goodnight was then thirty-one years of age, until his death, nearly sixty-three years later, he never spoke of Loving except in utmost tenderness," says his biographer, "and his vibrant voice mellowed with reverence as he would slowly say, 'my old partner's and raise his eyes to the picture that hung on the ranch-house wall."

Later the Goodnight-Loving trail was extended into Colorado and Wyoming and 300,000 cattle passed over it in six years. The second of the trails which he blazed, known as the new Goodnight trail, ran from Fort Sumner in New Mexico to Granada, Colo., and several years later he laid off his third—from the JA ranch to Dodge City, Kan. It was 250 miles in length and known as the Palo Duro-Dodge City trail.



OLIVER LOVING

Almost as romantic as the story of his trail-blazing is the story of his association with the Irishman, John George Adair, in the development of the famous JA ranch, the first in the Texas Panhandle. During his eleven years on this ranch he handled more than 300,000 cattle, with a total loss during the time of only 1,000 head, and the property paid an annual profit of 75 per cent on the capital invested.

He died in 1929 at the age of ninety-three, still active, vigorous and dynamic in both brain and body. "His bow-legged, gray-headed JA cowboys lowered his massive casket into the grave, and with tears streaming down their leathery, wind-carved faces, shoveled in the dirt that covered him up. And there in the graveyard at Goodnight, Texas, came to rest at last this dominant, driving, restless plainsman. More appropriately, he should lie at the edge of the Palo Duro canyon, which, splashed with the enduring colors of ages, verdant with grass that will never be plowed, carves out of the staked plains an everlasting memorial to the pioneering spirit of Charles Goodnight."

Ship Subsidy

Washington.—One of the pieces of legislation enacted by the late seventy-fourth congress was the ship subsidy bill. Residents of farming communities and smaller cities and towns in the interior probably paid no attention to it whatsoever. Nor was there any outstanding reason apparent why they should give thought to a rather complex and yet far-reaching piece of legislation. But it is important even though the circumstances under which it will be effective may not so appear to the agricultural sections of the country.

The new law provides an undisguised subsidy as the basis of encouragement for development of a new American merchant marine. It is the first time that such a policy has been carried out by the American nation and it is, therefore, yet a matter to be tried out before anyone can say definitely that the results will be satisfactory. Those who sponsored the legislation have long contended it was both sound and sensible and their argument prevailed in congress.

Advocates of the measure say that it will provide at least a start for the construction of new and faster and more efficient American owned ships. They contend further that the policy upon which the nation has now embarked as regards shipping will cost less in the end than other disguised and concealed subsidies that have been employed.

It may be necessary to recall that the United States long has paid what amounts to a subsidy to ocean going ships in the form of excessive rates for the transportation of ocean mail. There are 43 such mail routes and the ships operating on these routes, consequently, benefited to the extent of the number of pounds of mail they carried because the payments they received were on a pound basis. This contribution from the federal government enabled many of those shipping companies to survive.

But it is only natural that one should ask why a subsidy is advisable or necessary at all. The answer is plain. American owned ships, ships flying the American flag, are required by law to meet numerous conditions that are not required by any other nation of the ships registered with their admiralties.

• • •

Some Difficulties

With these conditions, among many others, it becomes easily understandable what difficulties confront American flag ships in competition with world shipping.

Above and beyond the factors just mentioned, it is a matter of record as well that ship construction in the United States costs more perhaps than any place else in the world. Here again American standards are influential. They bring about higher wages and shorter hours for American labor in American shipyards. Thus, a new ship starting out begins its service with a handicap of greater cost upon which a return must be had if those who invest their money in ships are to receive a profit thereon.

Then, there is a further distinct and important reason. I refer to national defense. It has long been the conviction of military and naval men that American freight and passenger ships should be so designed, developed and constructed, that they might be converted to satisfactory use as auxiliary craft in time of war. In this connection it will be recalled that tremendous sums were expended by our government in building ships for use in the World war. There was such vast waste of money at that time that it seems incredible anyone should ever make the same mistake again. But to avoid that mistake advance preparations are necessary and that is a point strongly stressed by those who favored the ship subsidy legislation.

Link With the Farm

Now to link the importance of the ship subsidy bill with agriculture: American products must have access to foreign markets and this access must be under fair and reasonable competition conditions. Such reasonable and fair competitive conditions cannot be obtained if American built ships, constructed at greater costs because of the higher standards of wages and living of American labor, and operated on a basis of greater cost for the same reasons do not have some protection from the government whose flag they fly. They cannot, for example, meet the freight rates offered by the Japanese whose labor basis is distressing and whose general construction costs are amazingly low. Nor can they compete with ships constructed with government money and subsidized by special privileges accorded by their governments.

So, it is made to appear, at least from this line of reasoning, that American firms are left to the mercies of foreign shipping companies in their efforts to expand our export trade—that is, they are left to these mercies unless this government takes a definite stand by which American flag ships are accorded some advantages.

I suspect there are many features of the ship subsidy bill which was fathered by Senator Copeland, New York Democrat, that will prove unsatisfactory. Indeed, I am sure some of them will be found to be wholly unworkable. But the point is, after all, that a start has been made toward honesty of policy in dealing with merchant marine problems. I think no one can refute the statement that as between concealed or disguised subsidies and forthright payments that are known as subsidies, the forthright and honest method is decidedly better.

Since the United States normally produces a surplus of agricultural products, it becomes highly important to agriculture that the foreign markets are accessible and that the costs of transportation do not entirely eat up the value of the commodity exported unless the wheat from the plains states and the cotton from the South and the corn from the Mississippi valley can be moved at reasonable cost. It can be moved at reasonable cost only if American shipping is protected. That is not alone my opinion. It is the opinion of many experts in the field.

One might properly inquire why the foreign boats should not be used to handle American commodities if the freight rate is lower. There are two very valid reasons why this should not be obtained. One is that constant rate reduction by foreign shipping companies would sooner or later, probably sooner, destroy the American merchant marine. With this end achieved, the foreign shipping companies would do as they have attempted to do on a number of occasions—jack up the rates to suit themselves. The other reason why American goods should be shipped in American bottoms is that a mercantile marine is as necessary an adjunct to our national economy and our national welfare as are the lines of land transportation. This may seem to me a broad statement but I believe, nevertheless, it is a truthful one because all fields of industry as well as agriculture would suffer if we were left at the mercy of foreign shipping companies. Further, the commodities that we import would pay whatever rates the foreign shipping companies demanded in order to reach our shores and we would pay the bill.

It seems, therefore, that while this legislation probably is far from perfection, probably has entirely too much governmental finger in the shipping pie, presents a start that eventually will be helpful. I have heard no answer to this statement. It is going to cost about so much for transportation on the ocean and if we can maintain an American industry upon that cost plus the aid of a subsidy of the type now initiated, we have laid out a sound unit in our national commercial structure. It goes without saying, therefore, that if it is helpful to one part of the country it is going to be helpful to all others because we are so interrelated.

Pests and Drouth

Political students have been engaged lately in stirring arguments over what possibly may be a new influence in the campaigns of 1936. I refer to the disastrous conditions in some of the plains of the Middle West resulting from lack of rain. I refer, also, to the presence of pests in sections of the plains states.

It has been interesting, not to say humorous, to listen to the arguments being advanced, arguments based purely on political phases that may or may not result from those conditions. There is no agreement among the Democrats and no agreement among the Republicans as to the effect of the natural circumstances developing in the middle west. Some Democrats contend the drouth will react to President Roosevelt's advantage. Some Republicans fear that the Democratic contention is true. Some Democrats are afraid that the loss of crops and the generally bad condition in which this leaves thousands of farmers will place them in a state of mind where they will be determined to vote against somebody and of course the only person against whom they can vote is Mr. Roosevelt inasmuch as he happens to be the man in power at the moment.

BILLY MINK AND LITTLE JOE OTTER DECIDE TO GO VISITING

AFTER visiting the Smiling Pool and warning Little Joe Otter and Jerry Muskrat to watch out for traps, Bobby Coon decided that the Laughing Brook was altogether too dangerous a place for him, so he turned back into the Green Forest and firmly resolved to keep away from the Laughing Brook. Billy Mink and Little Joe Otter talked things over.

"I found three traps," said Billy Mink. "There may be some I have not found. Anyway, it is certain that when that trapper finds that I know about those traps he will set some more. I don't believe he is smart enough to hide a trap so that we cannot find it. But, you know, accidents will happen. He knows that you and I make our homes along the Laughing Brook and he will simply make life miserable for us by continuing to set traps. Do you know what I believe I'll do?"

"I Believe I'll Go Away for a Visit."

"What?" said little Joe Otter.

"I believe I'll go away for a visit," replied Billy Mink. "I've been feeling rather restless for some time anyway, and there isn't any better time of year to go visiting than right now, before the snow and ice come. There's a certain brook some distance from here that for a long time I've been thinking of visiting. I believe I'll start tonight, and I'll stay long enough for this trapper to get tired of setting traps and catching nothing."

"That's a good idea," said Little Joe Otter. "I believe I'll go visiting myself. I always did like to travel. There is no sense in taking foolish risks, and that is just what we would be doing by staying here. I think I'll go down to the Big River and stay a while. The fishing here isn't as good as it might be, anyway. I wonder if Jerry Muskrat will go visiting, too. Let's tell him what we are going to do and see if he wants to go along with one of us."

"He can't go with me," declared Billy Mink in a most decided tone. "He travels too slow. I don't believe he would want to go with me anyway, because, between you and me, I suspect Jerry is a little afraid of me."

Little Joe Otter grinned. "I guess he has reason to be," said he. "I've been told that the Mink family has a liking for muskrat meat. I hardly think he'll want to go along with me either because he is such a home-loving body. But anyway, we'll tell him what we're going to do and then he can do as he pleases."

So Billy Mink and Little Joe Otter told Jerry how they were going to fool the trapper by going visiting. They urged him to do the same thing.

LUNCHEON DISHES

FOR a delicious luncheon dish which will appeal to most tastes the following will be enjoyed:

Stuffed Peppers With Mushrooms

Wipe the mushrooms carefully and break into pieces. Use the field mushrooms that may be had for the gathering. Cook in a tablespoonful or two of butter, add one-half cupful of cream, three tablespoonfuls of soft bread crumbs, salt, pepper, and the beaten yolk of an egg. Fill the peppers that have been prepared by removing the veins and parboiling for five minutes, then drain and fill. Place in a baking dish or in gem pans with a little water in each. Cover with buttered crumbs and bake until the crumbs are well browned.

Luncheon Potatoes

Chop rather fine enough cold boiled potatoes to make a quart. Melt four tablespoonfuls of butter or sweet fat in a saucepan and add the potatoes. Mix well, add two tablespoonfuls of flour mixed with a cupful of milk. Stir well, cover and cook slowly for ten minutes. Add two hard-cooked eggs chopped and season well.

Ginger Ale Salad

Soften one-fourth of a package of gelatin in one-fourth of a cupful of water, dissolve over hot water; add a grating of lemon rind and one and three-quarters cupfuls of ginger ale. Turn into molds and set away to chill. Serve very cold on heart leaves of lettuce with a mayonnaise dressing to which three or more tablespoonfuls of cocktail sauce have been added.

For a lemonade that is always ready to serve take a cupful each of lemon juice, two cupfuls of sugar, boil together for five minutes, then bottle. Serve a tablespoonful or two of the sirup over cracked ice, fill the glass with water.

WOMEN COMING

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

ONE of these days haff sun, haff haze,
No line dividin' sky and water,
And hot as sin, though I've been in
A lot of places it was hotter.
Thing by the door says eighty-four,
I wouldn't call that fearful weather,
Yet I don't know a day I've so
Felt sort of melted altogether.

If Maw don't mind, I guess I'll find
Out on the porch a corner cozy.
I don't know why it is, for I
Slept well last night, I feel so dozy.
There's things to do, a chore or two,
And yet tomorrow may be cooler,
We maybe might have rain tonight,
Today it's hot, and ain't no fooler.

What's that, they be? Gosh, I can't see
Why people go a-gallivantin'
And all dressed up, a day a pup
Like that one there jest lays a-pantin'.
All right, I'll run. Say, git my gun.
And find my hat. Well, come on, Rover.
A fellah jest must have his rest;
Come on—there's women comin' over.

INFANT TOLL HIGH IN U. S. DEATH RATE

Mortality Greatest in First Five Years of Life.

Washington. — For the modern, the first five years are the hardest, and of these, the first year is 12 times as fatal as any of the next four. A recent thoroughgoing study by the Census bureau of deaths and their cause in 1934 disclosed that the five-year period which most nearly approaches the first period in fatalities is that between the ages of seventy and seventy-five.

This might bring the improper conclusion that if a person gets through the first five years it is likely that he will live to seventy. The dividing line, however, lies somewhere just under sixty. There are slightly more deaths under sixty than beyond that age.

Of the 1,157,440 deaths in 1934 that were analyzed by the bureau, 585,696 were under sixty; 571,744 were after sixty. The study, for comparative purposes, covered those 34 states which have been reporting their vital statistics regularly to the bureau since 1920.

Some of the Causes.

Among the causes, the diseases of early infancy—congenital debility, premature birth and injury at birth—accounted for almost half the deaths of those under one year. Pneumonia, diarrhea, entritis and congenital malformations covered another third. Whooping cough and influenza also claimed heavy fatalities among babies.

A close, general analysis, covering not only child but adult deaths, disclosed that about one out of four dies of heart or some circulatory disease; one out of nine dies of cancer; one out of 10 from diseases of the nervous system; one of 10 from infectious or parasitic diseases, with about the same ratio for accidents and for digestive disorders.

Most of the fatal illnesses of man lie between the skin and the bones. Only one of every 813 die of bone ailments, one of 685 from skin diseases. One out of every 370 dies of chronic poisoning and intoxication. And just one out of every 166 lives long enough to die of old age. Curiously enough, one death was attributed to senility between the ages of forty-five and fifty. The period claiming the largest number of such deaths, however, was between eighty and eighty-five.

Cancer Rate High.

Some of the diseases that ranked highest in fatalities were: Tuberculosis, 57,897; cancers and other tumors, 123,211; diabetes, 24,826; cerebral hemorrhage, 81,996; endocarditis, 53,240; myocarditis, 124,592; heart diseases, 42,348; bronchopneumonia, 34,254; lobar pneumonia, 44,791; violent and accidental deaths, 108,140; digestive diseases, 106,171.

Generally, the study showed that the modern was troubled most with his heart and circulatory system, next with cancers and tumors, has a nervous system that shatters, falls prey to dozens of infectious and parasite-carried diseases and is subject to a broad category of accidents. Beyond these, he has a stomach and digestive tract that may take him away. But smallpox, the scourge of a century ago, has almost vanished from the bodies of Americans. There were only nine deaths from smallpox in the area covered.

Some of the rarer diseases showed themselves, however. Two died of the plague. Scurvy took 28. Beriberi claimed four. And, perhaps indicative of the depression, only two died of gout.

Taylor's Election Cost Club $65 Livery Bill

Toledo.—An account book of the Whig committee, recently brought to light, reveals to what efforts Toledo's "Rough and Ready club" went in its determination to elect Zachary Taylor President in 1848.

So frequently did members rent horses and buggies for campaign trips, that their victory cost the club $65. The account book reveals that this sum was quickly subscribed, however, in the first two years of the Taylor-Fillmore administration. The account book belongs to Frank Segur of Toledo, whose grandfather, Dan Segur, was secretary of the Whig committee here.

Italians Are Rated as Most Talkative

London.—Italy is the most talkative nation in Europe and Germany is a poor second, according to the ratings of a European radio survey.

While Holland is the least garrulous nation on the air with only 12 per cent of its broadcasting time devoted to talks, the two countries ruled by dictators allot more time to talking than any other form of radio entertainment.

The stations of Italy devote 45 per cent of all available programs to talking, and hose of Germany devote 27 per cent. After Germany the country with the most to say is Norway with 25 per cent "talk time."

A window full of 13-cent neckties . . . With ready tied bows at nine cents . . . I'd pay a lot more to be able to get that same effect with evening ties . . . No matter how hard I work, they always come out lop-sided . . . A big lobster waving a languid claw at a pretty girl peering into a restaurant window . . . The old roue! . . . Bootblacks battling over a choice position in front of an Eighth avenue vacant storeroom . . . Forty-third street blocked with big busses bound here and there . . . Taxicab drivers engaged in horn practice . . . As if they could blow them out of the way . . . A bearded old sandwich man, clad in a choice assortment of rags, advertising a beauty shop.

• • •

Wall street: A messenger boy with a handful of yellow envelopes, whistling and smoking a cigaret at the same time as he strolls along leisurely . . . A young man with a black grip chained to his wrist . . . and a policeman on the other end of the chain . . . The scars in the side of the Morgan building . . . The last mementoes of the great Wall street explosion . . . Guards stopping and questioning those who would crash the gates of the Stock Exchange . . . A top-hatted broker with a red carnation in his buttonhole . . . The dignified spire of Trinity . . . George Washington atop a pedestal in front of the old sub-treasury . . . A street preacher imploring passers-by to turn to God . . . Great temples of Mammon housing thousands of workers . . . and the dingy piers of the East river.

• • •

Meditations: Wonder what became of those tokens the Interborough Transit company had made when it anticipated an increase in subway fares to seven cents? . . . Why the engineers who designed the Forty-second street station of the municipal subway, allowed only one small entrance and exit on either side of Eighth avenue? . . . Why New York taxicab drivers won't open or close doors for their passengers? . . Why some box office men regard themselves as superior to those who pay their salaries by buying seats? . . . Why New Yorkers will risk death by crossing streets against traffic and then spend ten minutes looking at men drilling asphalt? . . . Why bank tellers don't go cuckoo counting money all day?

• • •

Sidewalk cafes adding a Paris touch to the old town . . . and giving patrons soot and grit along with food and drink . . . A commuter struggling through Forty-second street traffic with a big coil of garden hose over his shoulder . . . Bryant Park torn up again . . . That seems to be its natural state . . . Once it was a reservoir . . . A young man "clocking" pedestrians as they pass an empty storeroom . . . Making a count for someone contemplating opening a business there . . . Helen Hayes, who in a little more than a month, will cease being Queen Victoria . . . For the summer only, however.

• • •

Tourists staring at downtown skyscrapers . . . Their clothes proclaim that they came from Europe . . . Americans probably look just as funny to them . . . The glistening fireboats moored at Pier A . . . They look as if they were straining at their moorings in their eagerness to go into action . . . The sun shining on the red buildings of Ellis island . . Don't hear so much about that gateway nowadays . . . Idlers leaning against the sea wall railings at the Battery . . . Coast guard cutters resting at piers . . . and the funny little ferry that runs over to Governors island.

Maybe I'm wrong, but it seems to me that New York changes its character with the change of seasons. In winter, it's cold, hard, artificial. In summer, it's hot, tired and inclined to be curt. In autumn, it's rebellious, those who have been away to the shore or mountains resenting return to steel and concrete and those who have been forced to stay here through the heated term, resenting months of imprisonment in apartments and tenements. In spring, it's like a lot of prisoners released without parole or probation and inclined to be a bit boisterous over their luck. Right now, it seems to be an overgrown village, friendly and with leisure to gape at excavations, line up alongside Riverside drive and stare at the Hudson and block pedestrian traffic whenever there is a window demonstration.

Taking No Chances

Farmer Thomas gave a new hand a plateful of mushrooms for his supper.

"Isn't anyone else having mushrooms for supper?" asked the hand, noticing that he was the only one eating them.

"We like them for breakfast best," said the farmer.

Next morning Thomas went to his new hand's room and asked him how he felt.

"Fine," said the hand.

Returning to the kitchen, and putting his head round the door, he shouted to his wife: "It's all right, Jane, they're not toadstools!"

Seeing Is Believing

By GRANT M. SASSAMAN

© McClure Newspaper Syndicate. WNU Service.

IT GAVE Al Belker a start to read in the afternoon papers that Tony Girbo had been shot to death in his room down on Peach street at nine o'clock that morning. But it didn't worry him when two detectives came to his apartment and told him to put on his hat.

Belker had been arrested no less than fifty times during his ten years of crime, and he had never yet served time. Alibis were what counted. He always had an alibi, whether he needed it or not. "Alibi Al" they called him.

"You guys got nothin' on me," he told the dicks as they started walking him down the street to headquarters. "I didn't bump Girbo, but I ain't sorry he's dead. I dunno who did it. I was ten miles away, changin' a tire on my car, at nine o'clock—out on York road."

"Oh, yeah?" rasped Anders, the taller of the detectives. "You were seen going into Girbo's rooming house at eight-thirty. At nine a guy across the hall hears a shot and the noise of some one lamming it down the stairs. Girbo lives long enough to name you as the killer. How d'you like that?"

Belker stopped and glared at Anders. "Yer lyin'!" he snarled. Then suddenly an ice-cold lance of fear touched his heart. Girbo was shot from behind, according to the papers. Plugged in the back. Maybe he believed—

Abruptly Belker's panic left him, and he cursed himself for that brief moment of fright. What did it matter what Girbo said? What the cops thought? "You pokes are all wet!" he jeered. "A half dozen old gents an' ladies sat on the porch out on York road while I changed my tire."

Anders' voice was filled with mockery. "What kind of—"

"I dunno what kind of joint it was. I didn't pay no attention. I was too busy knockin' off a guy ten miles away!"

"Don't wisecrack with me, punk!" hissed Anders. "I'll run your teeth through the back of your head! I've been laying for you ever since your mob held up the Corn Trust and put a bullet through Officer McDade's heart!"

"It wasn't me, nor any of my mo—friends! We had alibis, Flatfoot. We had—"

"Shut up!" snarled Anders.

At Second and Overton streets they stopped while Stevens, the short detective, bought a package of cigarettes from old Dornick, who had a stand at the corner. The old man's glance went past the tip of Belker's left ear, but it brought the sweat out upon his heavy face. Inwardly he cursed the dicks for bringing him past the corner he always avoided.

Old Dornick, two years before, had been a guard at the Corn Trust. The same slug that went through McDade's heart had ricocheted from the wall and ploughed into Dornick's head. Belker had fired that shot!

The grass over McDade's grave was green, but old Dornick still lived; old Dornick with his cigarettes, his newspapers and his—

• • • • •

An hour later a red police car drove slowly along York road. In the front seat beside the driver was Lieutenant Winters. "Alibi Al" Belker sat in the rear, wedged between Anders and Stevens.

The lieutenant was saying over his shoulder: "I don't know what kind of place he's talking about, but it's got to be good—what with Girbo's dying statement and the fact that he was seen in the dead man's—"

"I ain't denyin' I was there," broke in Belker savagely. "A coupla minutes I was there. Then I got in my car and drove away!"

"Okay! Oka-ay!" snapped Anders. He bent forward and peered through the car window. "Is this the place you've been prattling about?" He pointed to a rambling frame house perched on a terrace ahead, on the left side of the road. Waving maples partially obscured the upper part of the building. There was a large porch in front.

"Yeh, that's it!" cried Belker triumphantly. "That's the dump! I was parked right there in full view o' the front porch!"

The police car stopped at the curb. The occupants crawled out. Two old couples on the porch above rocked placidly back and forth in their armchairs.

Anders, his face grim and disappointed, regarded the four silently. An old folks' home! Belker's alibi would stand in any court. These old people had nothing to do but watch the world go by. They'd welcome the diversion of testifying.

A sign, nailed to the coping of the porch roof and half hidden by the trees, caught Anders' eye. He went close to the terrace wall and peered upward.

Suddenly his grim lips pursed into a soundless whistle, and into his blue eyes leaped a gleam of savage jubilance. "You're right, punk," he chortled, spinning about, "Seeing is believing!" He grasped Belker by the arm, dragged him to the wall and pointed. "Read that, punk!"

Belker raised his glance. His mouth dropped open. A groan dribbled from his lips. The sign said:

Hello Everybody

"Credit Man"

By FLOYD GIBBONS
Famous Headline Hunter

THERE'S a lot of talk about the G-Men these days, and a lot of stories are being told about the way they run down vicious criminals. I'd be the last man in the world to say that those G-Men aren't tough babies and live exciting, adventurous lives, but something ought to be said about another little known bunch of sleuths that are always operating throughout the country—the credit men.

Never thought of credit men as being detectives, did you? Neither did I until I got a yarn from Herbert H. Bellringer of Hollis, N. Y.

But come to think about it, what does a credit man do? He investigates people. And what is he looking for? Crooks! People who are trying to swindle the company he works for. If everybody was honest, there wouldn't be much need for credit men. It's his job to separate the wheat from the chaff—to decide who's honest and who isn't.

And when a man skips out owing a lot of bills, then the credit man has to do another bit of sleuthing. He has to trace that guy to his new home, in the same way and using the same methods as a detective looking for the most hardened criminals.

Herb Learns He's Picked a Tough Lemon.

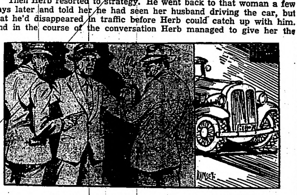
Credit men don't as a rule go after hardened, dangerous criminals. But Herb Bellringer did once. And that's a story he'll never forget as long as he lives. It happened this way: Herb was working for a local finance company that put up the money for people who wanted to buy an automobile on time. And one day Herb picked a lemon.

It seems that a bird had bought an expensive car on credit and Herb hadn't had time to make proper investigation. He okayed the deal, only to find that the references were all wrong and the purchaser was a gangster and an escaped convict whom the police had labeled as very doggone dangerous, and whom they were ordered to shoot on sight.

It wasn't a very pleasant job, but it was up to Herb to get that car back. He went to the address given on the thug's reference papers and talked to a woman who claimed to be his wife. She said she didn't know where her husband was—and that was all the information Herb could get out of her.

Strategy Is Successful in Getting Thug's Trail.

Then Herb resorted to strategy. He went back to that woman a few days later and told her he had seen her husband driving the car, but that he'd disappeared in traffic before Herb could catch up with him. And in the course of the conversation Herb managed to give her the idea that her husband had a very good looking young blonde with him at the time. He also—well—sort of insinuated that if he could get that car back from her husband he—well—he wouldn't be able to gallivant around so much and drive blondes all over the landscape.



Two Guns Were Pointed at Herb's Midriff.

The trick worked. The woman hesitated a while, and then blurted out an address. Herb got another lad from the office to help him, and that evening they watched the house. After about an hour, their vigil was rewarded. The gangster came out, took the car they were looking for from the garage and started to drive away.

In his own car, Herb followed, while his assistant went to look for a policeman. The thug stopped his car a few blocks away at a cigar store and that was just what Herb was waiting for. He pulled his own car up beside it in such a way that the other car couldn't be moved.

Herb's Troubles Arrived All at Once.

There was a man sitting at the wheel, while another had gone into the store. Herb went up to the man at the wheel and said: "Good evening, Mr. ——."

The thug whirled on him. "Who the —— are you?" he asked.

Herb started to tell him. The other man had come out of the cigar store, and the two stood listening. They looked at each other for a moment and then, suddenly, the gangster jumped from the car and grabbed Herb. Before he knew what had happened, he was dragged into an alley. Two guns were pointed at his midriff, while the gangster shouted: "Have you told the cops where I am? If you have, you'll get the works right here!"

Herb says his whole body was quivering and he'd have collapsed if the wall behind him and the guns jabbed into his stomach hadn't held him up. "No," he managed to stutter. "I'm only interested in getting the automobile."

Monologue by Herb Wins the Thugs Over.

No sooner had the words come out of his mouth than his assistant dashed around the corner. "I can't find a ——" he started to say, and then noticed the gangsters. He shut up like a clam, and he was lined up against the wall alongside of Herb.

Then Herb began to talk—and what a sweet job of it he did. His life was hanging on his eloquence, and he went at it with all the stops out. He told those birds that the car was marked—that it would only get them into trouble. He talked for fifteen minutes without a let-up, and in the end, the two thugs pulled aside for a confab. They whispered together for a few seconds. "When they put their guns away," says Herb, "I knew we had won. They told us to stay where we were for at least ten minutes, then they hailed a passing cab and were gone, leaving the car behind."

A short time later, Herb saw a grisly picture in a newspaper. It was a news photo of his gangster friend, stretched out on the pavement, so full of lead you could write with him. The cops had seen him—and shot on sight!

Early Style of Hunting

One favorite custom of hunting during the pioneer days, says the Cleveland Plain Dealer, was for some 600 or 700 men, armed with clubs, to encircle a large section—say about two townships—and at a signal start moving slowly toward the center. As the men were close together, hardly any ground animal could escape through the line to freedom. Those that attempted to get outside of the circle were killed on the spot. Those driven into the center were killed there. Frequently in this manner practically all the ground game in the entire section was wiped out

The Green Frog

Much like the bullfrog in appearance and habits is the green frog, though the head and shoulders of this species are a brighter green, the webs of its feet are smaller and it is possessed of lateral folds of skin on the body which the bullfrog does not have. It is found about most of our small streams, ponds and cold springs, but not so abundantly as is the bullfrog. Its croak, says a writer in the Deroit News, has been aptly described by a well-known authority on frogs as an "explosive, prolonged, low-pitched sound, which may be repeated several times in succession."

STAR DUST

By VIRGINIA VALE

PETE SMITH of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, who's made a name for himself with his short subjects, bought a film made by an amateur on sixteen millimeter film, remade it on thirty-five millimeter, and liked the result so well that he is putting on a nation-wide contest for such subjects.

Theater executives and representatives of film-selling companies all over the country will send the best films submitted to them by amateur movie makers to Mr. Smith, and he'll pick the winners.

⁂

George Arliss is busy in England making "East Meets West," and his brother, Fred H. Andrews, is equally busy at the same studio. He is advising the producers on Oriental matters connected with the picture. It comes easily to him because he used to be curator of the Lahore museum. The veteran English character star continues to be a favorite with American movie goers. His pictures have invariably been interesting and the movie public is looking forward to his version of "East Meets West."

George Arliss

Imagine the feelings of one of our foremost movie stars when, as she motored through a small city recently, she saw one of her latest and best pictures advertised on the marquee of a theater—along with another feature, the Louis-Schmeling fight pictures, and the $550 that was the evening's Bank Night award.

"At least," said she when she'd recovered, "they weren't offering people dishes as an inducement to come in and see my film!"

⁂

Football fans are going to flock to movie theaters when RKO's "The Big Game" is released. Bobby Wilson, All-American quarterback from Southern Methodist university, has just been signed for it, and along with him will appear five more star football players, all members of Stanford university's championship eleven of last fall. They are Monk Moscrip, Bones Hamilton, Keith Topping and Frank Alustiza.

⁂

Ruth Chatterton loves to fly her own plane, and does it very capably. But she's been asked not to go up in her plane while she's working in "Dodsworth"; valuable property can't be risked, you see.

So she went for a whirlwind trip on a motorcycle the other night, and the company had the jitters all over again when word of it came out. First thing she knows, she'll be requested to do all her riding, if any, in a wheel chair.

⁂

If you are among the many who never fail to tune in on Colonel Stoopnagle and Bud, you may have wondered why they omitted Mr. Bopp, one of the most amusing characters on their broadcasts, the first time they substituted for the vacationing Fred Allen.

The Colonel had his tonsils out a few days before the broadcast. And he plays Mr. Bopp, which is very hard on the voice.

You may recall that Merle Oberon was slated for "The Garden of Allah" till Marlene Dietrich came along and got the role. Merle was upset, and decided to sue the producers.

The matter was settled out of court very nicely. Miss Oberon received $10,000 in addition to the $12,000 which she got before she lost the part. And she's to do another picture, "It Happened in Hollywood," which will bring in another $60,000. Not so bad.

Merle Oberon

⁂

Bette Davis has been having her troubles. Her salary and the kind of roles assigned her caused the difficulty, and, after she failed to show up for three weeks to work in "God's Country and the Woman" she was suspended by Warner Brothers.

⁂

ODDS AND ENDS . . . Mary Pickford's plans to produce pictures seem to have suffered a set-back, with the breaking up of the company . . . Lewis Stone's daughter is going to get married . . . And Lewis is going to take a yachting trip when he finishes his current picture . . . Ruth Chatterton and Ginger Rogers will appear in "Mother Cary's Chickens," with Anne Shirley and John Beale . . . Myrna Loy and William Powell will be seen together again in "The Last of Mrs. Cheyney" . . . Claudette Colbert and her husband are taking a motor trip, driving an inexpensive car and wearing old clothes and having a grand time . . . Graham McNamee has a brand new contract with Universal news reel, though his old one hasn't expired yet.

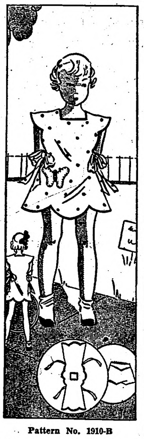
Pinafore for Little Girl



Pattern No. 1910-B

The clever cutting of this useful pinafore is shown in the small diagram beside the little girl. You will see at once that this frock requires no seaming and of course the feature which so greatly intrigues children is the butterfly which forms the pocket.

Notice how simple it is to put on, merely slipped over the head and tied at each side. Mothers find it a great help because it can be used as an apron over a frock, which must be kept clean, or worn instead of a frock. The panties to match are an asset—they have the comfortable French yoke top and stay snug but never bind. This attractive design made in cotton, percale, gingham, calico, or lawn would be effective with contrasting binding and colorful embroidery on the butterfly pocket.

Barbara Bell Pattern No. 1910-B is available for sizes 2, 4, 6, and 8. Size 6 requires 1 1-2 yards of 35 inch material plus 7-8 yard for the panties. Send fifteen cents in coins.

Send for the Summer Pattern Book containing 100 Barbara Bell well-planned, easy-to-make patterns. Exclusive fashions for children, young women, and matrons. Send fifteen cents for your copy.

Money in the World

It is estimated that there is about $110,000,000,000 in money in the world. This is based on the gold reserves of 50 principal nations, which amount to approximately $22,000,000,000. There are variations as to different countries, but on an average the paper and other money is about five times the gold held. The United States at present is an exception, as it has a much higher proportion of gold. Some other countries are below the average.

UNCLE SAM CHECKS HIS BOOKS

End of Fiscal Year Finds Goverment Costs Still Mounting; Balance of Budget Not Yet in Sight; Treasury Reports.

By CARLTON WILLIAMS

THE fiscal year 1936 is now ended, and the United States government's financial operations broke at least three records—records which, if Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau's reckoning holds true, will be broken again in the 1937 fiscal year which comes to a close next June 30.

During the last 12 months the government spent more money than it ever had in any peacetime fiscal year. The total was approximately 8 billion 880 million dollars.

The deficit was also the largest ever compiled by the United States government in times of peace. It was about 4 billion 754 million dollars. It would have been only about 2 billion 700 million had it not been for the passing of the veterans' bonus.

Federal expenditures, emergency and regular, advanced the public debt during the fiscal year to an all-time record high of 34 billion 427 million dollars on June 17. Between then and June 30, it was reduced to 33 billion 779 million, largely through the redemption of soldiers' bonus bonds.

Comptroller General McCarl, Who Recently Resigned After 15 Years

Cites Recoverable Assets.

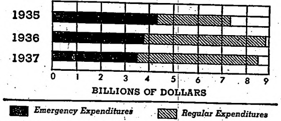
Against this debt, Secretary Morgenthau pointed out, must be held about 8¾ billions, which the government holds in what he calls recoverable assets. Most of them, to be sure, are recoverable, but a certain portion of them, including about 4 billions in loans to farmers, railroads, banks, insurance companies, states and cities, are open to question; it hardly seems possible that any organization could make loans so varied in nature and combining to make so large a total, could expect to collect them all.

Other recoverable assets listed by the secretary are 2 billion 700 million cash and "money in the bank," and 2 billion in the "stabilization" fund. This latter fund, however, it would probably be unwise to touch, because it was established for specific purposes, principally for stabilizing the dollar in foreign exchange markets.

Besides what Mr. Morgenthau apparently considered legitimate subtractions from the public debt are about 4¾ billions in equally legitimate additions to the debt. These are government guaranties and obligations—federally underwritten corporations and the like.

It was apparent as the new fiscal year began that little or no progress in balancing the budget would be made. Although revenues are due to continue increasing, as the country enjoys a continuation of the trend back toward prosperity and as the administration's new revenue producing measures become more effective, expenditures are also due for a rise, some of them expenditures unforeseen by the government a year or two ago.

Taxes and other revenues, according to estimates, will probably surpass those of any other year in history with the exception of 1920. An important phase of the new fiscal year will be the appearance for the first time in the ledger of the new social security program.



Three Years of Federal Spending (Does Not Include the Veterans' Bonus)

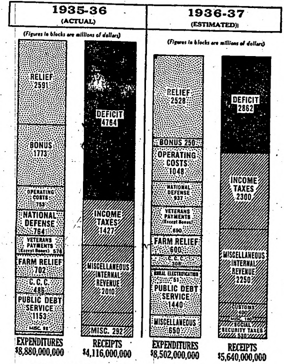
The federal ledger in the new fiscal year will be important historically because of the changing nature of its entries. It will see the institution as permanent expenditures of many of the measures which the administration adopted at first as purely "emergency" in character.

How Spending Has Increased

Before 1934 the largest expenditures in peace time during a single year had been 6 billion 404 million. During the 1934 fiscal year the government found it necessary to lay out 7 billion 244 million dollars; the next year expenditures were up 132 million, but during the 1936 fiscal year they went back to 7 billion 200 million, if the veterans' bonus is excluded, as it fairly may be, to make sure this report is not biased politically in any way. Certainly enough, it will have to be regarded as part of the public debt.

Many expenditures which in 1933 were regarded as "emergency" have now been included in the regular government expenditures, as may be seen in one of the charts shown here. While there has of late been a decline in emergency spending, there has been a corresponding increase in regular expenditures.

Direct relief, work relief and emergency public works expenditures have decreased from 3 billion 59 million in 1935 to 2 billion 569 million in the 1936 fiscal year. Spending for the Civilian Conservation corps is due to decline from 469 million to 308 million in the new fiscal year. Farm relief costs, too, will probably be on the downswing.



Where the Money Goes and Where It Comes From

"Regular" Costs Mount.

In regular operating and administrative costs have the greatest rises been apparent. The present administration, it is estimated, has added some 250,000 federal full-time employees in addition to the relief rolls. Operating and administrative costs were 550 million for the 1935 fiscal year, increased to 735 million in the 1936 year, and for the new one are expected to reach 1 billion 48 million.

Incorporated somewhere in the explanation of this is the fact that the operations of many of the federal departments, especially those dealing with public works, were severely cut during the economy wave which followed the change of administration in 1933, but they are now finding their ways back into the budget.

For instance, when President Roosevelt first came into office he effected immediate and drastic economies in river and harbor and public building work. They were subsequently revived in the emergency programs. Now Mr. Roosevelt has indicated his desire to return them to the permanent budget, with an annual appropriation of about 500 million dollars.

Taxes Keep Going Up.

Generally, the switch of public works programs back to the regular budget, combined with other transitions, is regarded as the beginning of the attempt to make most of the New Deal a permanent phase of the government. The President has asked for the institution of the CCC and the farm control program as permanent measures of his program.

Revenues have never failed to improve since 1932. They were 3 billion 800 million dollars in the 1935 fiscal year, and jumped to 4 billion 116 million in the year just closed. Next year, it is estimated, they will reach 5 billion 540 million. This, if it proves true, will mean the biggest tax bill since 1920, when revenues amounted to 6 billion 695 million.

In the new fiscal year it is estimated that income taxes will provide more revenue than they have at any time since 1930, when rates were low, but incomes (1929) were at their highest. The Revenue Act of 1935 will be a factor in the rise of income taxes in the last half of the fiscal year.

Balance Six Years Off.

During the depression the major part of the tax burden has shifted from income to the excise taxes and the stamp taxes on cigarettes, liquor, gasoline, security issues and transactions, electric energy, automobiles, matches and many other items of indirect taxation. When incomes were high, they used to provide about 70 per cent of the government tax revenue, but today the "hidden" taxes, which are paid by all, regardless of income, provide more than 60 per cent of the government revenue.

These "miscellaneous internal revenue" taxes have for the past several years established records. In the 1936 fiscal year for the first time they passed the 2 billion mark. In the new year they will probably reach 2 billion 250 million.

Even with revenues rising the way they are, they will not, at the present rate, be able to bring about a balanced budget before about six years. In order to pay for expenditures which could not come out of the regular income, and to handle the 2 billion soldiers' bonus, the treasury had to let the national debt skyrocket to 27 billion at the end of the 1934 fiscal year, 28 billion 700 million at the close of the next and now to 33 billion 750 million. Until results of pending bond transactions are known, it cannot be estimated what the debt will be at the close of the new fiscal year.

Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau

One of the interesting developments in the financial operations of the government recently has been the retirement of John Raymond McCarl, comptroller general of the United States and popularly known as the "watchdog of the treasury." He warned against wild and unjustified expenditures, and many times during his 15 years of service was a valuable check on too enthusiastic spending of public funds.

SUMMER RECIPES CALLING FOR USE OF FRESH FRUITS

Now that summer days are at hand, the alert woman is interested in successful recipes calling for the use of fresh fruits. Here are three that have been thoroughly tested:

Fresh Fruit Pies

For rhubarb, plum, grape, strawberry, raspberry, blackberry, blueberry or huckleberry pie:

Combine 3¼ cups prepared fruit, 1½ to 2½ tablespoons quick-cooking tapioca, and 1 to 1¼ cups sugar. Let stand 15 minutes, or while pastry is being made. Use as filling for 9-inch pie.

Fresh Peach and Banana Mold

1 package lime flavored gelatin
1 pint warm water
½ cup fresh peaches, sliced
1 banana, sliced

Dissolve lime flavored gelatin in warm water. Arrange sliced peaches on bottom of mold. Pour on warm gelatin, being careful not to disarrange peaches. Add banana. Chill until firm. Unmold. Garnish with whipped cream, if desired. Serves six.

Ripe Pear Jam

4 cups (2 lbs.) prepared fruit
7½ cups (3¼ lbs.) sugar
1 bottle pectin

Peel, core, and crush completely, or grind, about 3 pounds fully ripe pears. If desired, about 3 teaspoons spice may be added.

Measure sugar and prepared fruit into large kettle, mix well, and bring to a full rolling boil over hottest fire. Stir constantly before and while boiling. Boil hard one minute. Remove from fire and stir in pectin. Then stir and skim by turns for just five minutes to cool slightly, to prevent floating fruit. Pour quickly. Paraffin and cover as above. Makes about 11 glasses (6 fluid oz. each).

CROPS AND SOILS DAY AT NORTHWEST SCHOOL DRAWS 175

The annual Crops and Soils day at the Northwest Experiment Station was held under the auspices of the Red River Valley Crops & Soils association, Monday, July 13. in spite of temperatures over 100 degrees, about 175 farmers and their families attended. At a business meeting of the Crops & Soils association, Melvin Fleskrud of Fosston was elected president to succeed Herman Skyberg, Fisher, who had served three years. Theodore Mellum, Ulen, was re-elected vice-president, and S. M. Sivertson, Crookston, and R. S. Dunham, Northwest Station, were re-elected treasurer and secretary respectively. Directors from each of the thirteen northwestern counties elected for the ensuing year are as follows: Kittson, Lawrence Ward, St. Vincent; Roseau, Lenus Landby, Swift; Pennington, Simon Breiland, Hazel; Marshall, Alfred Hvidsten, Stephen; Red Lake, Maurice Lillo, Oklee; Clearwater, J. Al. Anderson, Gonvick; W. Polk, Herman Skyberg, Fisher; E. Polk, Wm. H. Moll, McIntosh; Norman, Wm. Frederickson, Perley; Becker, Fordyce Larson, Ulen; Clay, Hans Johnson, Rollag; Wilkin, Wm. Fredricks, Foxhome, West Ottertail, Theo. Thompson, Fergus Falls; East Ottortail, W. H. Frey, Perham.

Following an address of welcome by Dr. A. A. Dowell, superintendent of the Northwest School and Station, the men made a tour of the experimental plots and the women were shown the flowers, poultry, and home economics equipment by T. M. McCall. A. M. Pilkey and Retta Bede. On the tour of the plots, horticultural work and potatoes were explained by T. M. McCall. The Agronomy work was presented by R. S. Dunham, Agronomist and E. R. Clark, pure seed specialist. Dr. F. J. Alway, chief of the division of soils and Dr. J. J. Christensen and Prof. M. Moore of the Plant Pathology division, University Farm, assisted in the discussion, and Prof. Wong, a plant pathologist from China was a distinguished visitor.

Among the agronomy plots, greatest interest centered in the comprehensive trials of sweet clover as a soil improvement crop. Prof. Dunham explained that this investigation was begun in 1931 with a preliminary study of the effect of methods of sewing on the yield and root and top development of sweet clover and has been greatly enlarged in its scope since that time. The plots this year show the marked effects of complete and partial fallow in a year of deficient moisture. Wheat, oats, barley and flax following a season of complete fallow are in best condition at this time and where following sweet clover that was plowed under in June last year and fallowed subsequently they look almost as good. These crops following two years of wheat look worst. Corn has not conserved moisture or controlled weeds as well as the complete fallow or the partial fallow following sweet clover plowed under.

PARTNERS 28 YEARS ARE GRANDPARENTS SAME DAY

Wanamingo— For twenty-eight years partners in business, Adolph K. Syverson and Martin O. Syverson of Wanamingo last week became grandfathers on the same day and less than an hour apart. Daughters of each of them gave birth to baby daughters. The first baby to arrive was born to Mrs. Lloyd Johnson, daughter of Adolph, in Minneapolis. The other baby was born to Mrs. Kent Bergum, Martin's daughter, in Rochester 20 minutes later. The two partners locked up shop that day, and Mr. and Mrs. Adolph motored to Minneapolis and Mr. and Mrs. Martin motored to Rochester to greet the new babies and pay a visit to their daughters and sons-in-law. It was the first grandchild for each of the two partners in business, who are also brothers.

WOMAN'S PROJECT IN PENNINGTON CO. ENDS THIS MONTH

This month completes the woman's project work in home management, four monthly meetings having been held under the leadership of Miss Charlotte Kirchner of University Farm.

Suggestions have been given to the 300 women enrolled on arranging work centers to make the kitchen convenient so as to save steps. Plans for kitchen cupboards and cabinets were discussed with reference to the supplies and equipment placed there.

Equipment for the kitchen was the theme of the second lesson. Healthful working heights, posture, and other features such as color schemes were discussed.

Special work was given on available types of cleaning and laundering equipment. Cleaning supplies and methods of cleaning and laundering household materials was studied.

Storage spaces all over the house was the final topic taken up at meetings held at Thief River Falls on July 20th, Goodridge on the 21st and St. Hilaire on the 22. Plans are being made for the continuation of the project next spring.

FINDS POCKETBOOK LOST 12 YEARS AGO

Williams.— Just twelve years ago this month a Grand Forks woman, picking blueberries on Pete Nugent's farm southeast of Williams lost her pocketbook containing a small amount of change in berry patch. Although in the meantime Nugent had cleared up the ground, the pocketbook remained unfound until last week. It was in a fair state of preservation, and the money in it was practically undamabed. Every effort will be made to find the owner, altho in the 12 years which have passed it may be difficult. It will be a surprised woman when the incident is recalled to her by the return of purse and money.

WOMAN FALLS INTO FORGOTTEN CESSPOOL

Alexandria.—A forgotten cess pool was the cause of a near serious accident of Miss Anna Honan of St. Paul, visiting her niece, Mrs. Melville Johnson at Alexandria. About to step into a car in the drive way at the Johnson residence, the ground beneath her caved in and she was plunged into the cess pool, sinking about 20 feet. The Alexandria fire department was called and let down a ladder for her to walk up on with the aid of a rope which they placed around her. Although Miss Honan was able to climb the ladder, she fainted when she was recovered from the cess pool. Only minor injuries were received.

Varied Midway Attractions at County Fair Next Week

In the short period of three years, the Hennies Bros. Shows have risen to the topmost rank among outdoor amusement enterprises, and have done so with truthful advertising, clean and meritorious attractions, and each year changing their entire setup and adding not only new shows, features and rides, but also changing their "stock" midway attractions, such as sideshows, girl shows and illusion shows.

Even this year, not only presenting girl and boy daredevils on the straight walls of their motordrome attraction, but now have midget riders—little folks standing some 28 to 30 inches in height, and weighing around fifty pounds, on speedy specially built motorcycles, racing and riding in the saucer of death, to entertain and thrill the most jaded amusement seeker.

As a feature for the kiddies, a mammoth dog, monkey and pony hippodrome, under the direction and management of the one and only Don Carlos, the world's greatest trainer of domestic animals—presenting his big comedy feature "Monkey Hotel," a show that will please and entertain the grownups as well as the little folks.

Two big girl shows: "Manhattan Gaieties", a musical comedy revue, with a cast and orchestra of some 22 real singers, dancers and comedians along wtih a seven piece stage band, and another show called "Paris", staged and presented like the attraction of the same name on the midway of the Century of Progress, Chicago, during the years 1933 and 1934.

A real circus side show, with its many freaks and oddities, many of which have been cartooned or drawn in Robert L. Ripley's "Believe It or Not" newspaper feature, and a show called "International Odditorium", with its twelve illusions and feats of black magic, that will astound patrons of the fair midway this year.

A real southern minstrel and colored revue, called "Ginger Snaps", produced by Arthur Ray, the colored Chicago impresario of note, featuring the one and only "Christine", co-starred in the colored musical Extravaganza "Shuffle 'Long", of recent years. Some thirty dusky performers, singers and dancers stage a most pleasing and laughable musical skit of some forty minutes duration, under the mammoth canvas top, and the show has been a real box-office attraction for the Hennies Bros. during their spring tour.

Of course there are fun houses and twelve riding devices, for those who go in for this sort of amusement and entertainment.

The show is carrying for the first time a double "Loop-O-Plane", and a brand new ride sensation called the "Rideo", that will be the big winner in the show's "Garden of Rides". Of course the "Skooter" cars will get a big play from the children, to say nothing of the twin Ferris Wheels, our old standby the Merry Go Round, The Whip, the Tilt-A-Whirl, and the Merry Mix-up. This show also carries two kiddie rides—one a miniature Auto Ride, and one of Seaplanes.

In all there will be fourteen or more shows and attractions and twelve new and thrilling rides, for visitors to the Pennington County fair midway to enjoy during the fair which starts next Tuesday, July 28, and ends Friday, July 31.

WOMAN'S BLOOMERS INSUFFICIENT DRESS

Littlefork.—Heat or no heat, no nudists will be tolerated in Littlefork, says Policeman Koester, as he warned one person, clad only in a pair of women's bloomers, that he would have to wear more clothes on the public streets or go to jail. The order was complied with. "It't not that I care," said the policeman, "but I don't think the village council will stand for it." And to make matters worse, several persons have been seen wandering around the streets recently clad in only a night shirt.

REMOVED TO 'U' HOSPITAL

Valarie, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Olsen, who has been ill several months with a heart ailment, was taken Sunday night to the University Hospital at Minneapolis in hopes the treatment available there would benefit her. She was accompanied down by her sister, Mrs. E. O. Burkee, who planned to spend a few days at the hospital until Valarie became accustomed to the routine. Valarie's many friends hope for her speedy recovery.

HARVEST UNDER WAY IN THIS LOCALITY

Harvest is general thruout this section this week, and quite a number of farmers have already finished cutting their grain. The crops are quite spotted, there being some fairly good fields and some poor ones in all parts of the community. Wheat will likely prove the best crop this year, oats and barley being generally light except as to a few fields. It is expected threshing rigs will be ready to take to the fields by next week if the present dry weather continues.

FAREWELL PARTY

Members of the Community M. E. Ladies' Aid and the Women's Club tendered Mrs. R. A. Young a farewell party Monday night at the M. E. Church. A very pleasant evening was spent by the ladies, and a delicious lunch was served. The Young family expect to move in the near future to Red Lake Falls where Mr. Young is employed at the Coast to Coast store.

PICNIC HELD SUNDAY

Excellent attendance and ideal weather conditions marked the annual picnic of the Norwegian Lutheran Sunday School which was held last Sunday at the local tourist park. Prof. Jordahl of Fertile, spoke at the open-air services at 11:00, and picnic dinners were enjoyed during the noon hour. Afternoon a fine musical program was given by the Sunday school members.

Mrs. Christopher Kies left Wednesday evening for her home at Chicago after having spent several weeks here at the home of her mother, Mrs. J. S. Roy.

Mr. and Mrs. Norman Olsen and son of Leonard, were here Tuesday evening for a short visit at the home of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Olsen.

Tales About Town

Happenings of the Week, Told in Brief. News Concerning People You Know

Ed. Christensen is operating a stand at the Pennington County Fair this week.

Considerable repair and alteration work is being done this week on the local Swedish Lutheran parsonage.

Mrs. A. W. Brink and son, Duane, returned Tuesday after having spent several weeks at the Brink ranch at Eight Point, Mont.

Oscar Kolstad, who is employed during the summer seasons at Duluth, came up yesterday to spend a short time with relatives and friends.

Adolph Satterberg received delivery last week of a new Chrysler sedan ordered some weeks ago. The new car is one of the neatest appearing in this locality.

Mr. and Mrs. Phil Jacobson came up last week from the Iron Range country and spent several days at the A. W. Brink, A. V. Jacobson and Gunnard Lindquist homes.

Nels Pearson returned home a few days ago after enjoying a pleasant visit with relatives at Crookston and International Falls. Nels says crop conditions are very good up along the Border.

Sam Pearson, local apiarist, extracted about a ton of honey from his stand of hives this week. Mr. Pearson says the honey flow is very good, and he is looking for good returns this season.

Following his vacation, Mike Fricker started work this week at renovating the school building. Much work such as painting, varnishing and cleaning will be done before opening of school next September 14th.

Vernon Lindquist and Manford Dahle recently landed good positions at checking lands for the Rural Credits Bureau. Manford is being assisted in his work by Hubert Huff. It is expected the employment will continue until the latter part of September.

The Pennington County Fair boosters from Thief River Falls who were scheduled to be here late Friday evening, changed their plans a bit and arrived here about 6:00 P. M., making this stop first on their way to Oklee, Plummer, Brooks, Terrebonne and Red Lake Falls. Short talks were given by members of the party, booster caps were distributed among the children, and the band played a number of good selections.

The village is practically deserted this week since opening of the county fair.

Ardell Olson came up Sunday morning from Fertile and spent the day here with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Ordean Olson.

Miss Lilly M. Johnson, who has attended summer sessions at the University of Washington, is expected home in a few days.

Mrs. Henry Sande is back home after receiving treatments for several days at a Thief River hospital because of an infected hand.

A fine shower of rain fell over this section last Saturday night. There was sufficient rainfall so that improvement in appearance of gardens and lawns could be noted.

Anyone interested in trading an improved forty, or an unimproved eighty in River Falls or Wyandotte for residence property in St. Hilaire call at the Spectator office.

E. O. Burkee of Moorhead, who is appraising lands for the Federal Land Bank in this part of the state, motored in Saturday evening for a short visit with his mother. Mrs. Burkee came up on the bus the following morning.

BAND AT FAIR FRIDAY

The St. Hilaire school band has been engaged to appear at the Pennington County Fair Friday evening this week, at which time they will play in front of the grand stands.

THIEF RIVER TAKES SUNDAY BALL GAME

After playing the entire season without meeting a single defeat, the St. Hilaire ball team took its first drubbing last Sunday when it met the Thief River aggregation in that city and took the short end of a 7 to 0 score. Perfect ball was played by both sides during the first three innings. The fourth proved to be the "Jonah" inning when well placed hits and fumbles allowed Thief River to cross the pan several times. Altho the score was 7 to 0, Thief River really made only three earned runs. The field was quite muddy and slippery which did not tend to help performance of either team.

Excellent outfielding by both teams was one of the features of the game which was witnessed by one of the largest crowds that had attended a ball game at Thief River in later years. Both pitchers did excellent work, and it is consensus of opinion of ball fans that the teams are quite evenly matched altho Thief River has the advantage of having more seasoned players.

Return game with the Thief River Falls team will be played on local ground next Sunday. The local lads are going thru some strenuous practice work every evening and will be in shape to give the visitors a real battle. Should St. Hilaire win next Sunday, the two leading teams will again have the same standing, and the deciding game for the Northern Minnesota League championship may be played on neutral grounds.

FAIR IN PROGRESS AT THIEF RIVER

The Pennington County Fair, the fourth largest fair in this state, opened its gates to the public Tuesday morning for a four day run which terminates Friday night. Altho the exhibits of grains and vegetables are not as good as in some former years because of backward growing season, the livestock and industrial exhibits are the best in years. Thousands of visitors have thronged the grounds thus far this week to see the excellent racing program as well as the numerous free attractions, and Midway amusement places. At the rate people have gone thru the gates from Tuesday until today, it is likely the attendance record of last year will be eclipsed.

ICE CREAM SOCIAL SATURDAY

An ice cream social will be given under auspices of the band at the band ground north of Larson Bros. store next Saturday evening immediately following the usual Saturday night band concert. All turn out and help the band.

Your Creamery

The creamery, organized and built by the people of this community because they saw a need for co-operative marketing of their farm products, can grow and prosper only in the same proportion as it is patronized by the people of the community. Work and boost for the creamery. The more you patronize it, the greater your profits will be.

THE RULE OF THE PRIESTS

FOR all that the Jews were "civilized," their religion was hardly so vital, so simple, as it had been in the days of Micah or Jeremiah. It laid stress on showy externals, on essentially unimportant things—not eating certain foods, bringing regular gifts to the priest, observing certain festivals. And the exile was very largely to blame for this change.

Even before the destruction of the Old Temple, the seeds of a religion of priestliness had taken root in Palestine. But it had been unable to flourish then because the greater prophets had been most strenuously opposed to it, and the people themselves had been only feebly attracted by it. Now, however, that the Jews had seen the great temples and had witnessed the gorgeous ceremonies of priest-ridden peoples like the Babylonians, they eagerly took to imitating that sort of thing. And gone were the rebels, the true prophets, who might have decried the trend.

Year by year the power of the priests grew mightier among the Jews. Wealth rapidly accumulated in their hands, for each season the plain people had to take them the choicest portions of their flocks and harvests. Forgotten was the old democratic ideal of the prophets that all Jews were priests. Now only those who were supposed to come from the tribe of Levi were allowed to minister in the Temple; and furthermore only those of the family of Aaron of the tribe of Levi were considered holy enough actually to perform the sacrifices; and still further, only one directly descended from Solomon's favorite priest, Zadok, could possibly become the High Priest.

The High Priest was virtually the king of the land, and the lesser priests were the princes. They were no better, of course, than lay kings and princes. They were forever conspiring among themselves, cheating and murdering their way from one office to another. But for all their corruption, they did succeed in doing one thing: they kept the Jews alive as a separate people. They walled them in with their little rules and regulations, keeping them rigorously segregated from all the other tribes and peoples. Even the half-Jewish Samaritans were cut off completely and had to start a temple of their own in northern Palestine.

But despite the efforts of the priests, foreign influences did seep into the life of the people. Gradually their language changed from Hebrew to Aramaic, so that after a few generations they could not understand even their own Scriptures. In their synagogues each Sabbath — for those "meeting houses" they had created in the exile had become common now throughout Judea—they had to read their Holy Writings through an Aramaic translation called the Targum. And many of their religious ideas changed, too. Outwardly no sign of this change in thought was evident. None was there to hail it, and so none could rise to decry it.

But then came Alexander, and all was made open.

In the fateful year 333 B. C. Alexander of Macedon became master of the Persian empire, and a year later, on his march toward Egypt, he took possession of Palestine. (The little land was still the one bridge used by the empire builders.) But this Alexander, a mere boy in years, was quite unlike the ordinary world-conqueror. His aim seems to have been not so much the gaining of power as the spreading of culture. He dreamed of scattering throughout the world the seeds of Greek civilization. And so energetically did he try to realize his dream that, though he died at the age of thirty-three, his Greek colonies dotted all of the then-known world.

Alexander's effect on the Jews and their religion was greater than that of any other non-Jew in history. He was generous to them and gave them every liberty; but at the same time he located peaceful settlements of his own people throughout Palestine. The result was a growing familiarity with all things Greek. Jews began to affect the use of Greek words in their conversation, and began to give their children Greek names.

Greece Now Overlord

HELLENISM—the word comes from Hellas, meaning Greece—began to make itself felt in every walk of Jewish life, especially in the many Jewish settlements outside of Palestine. Unfortunately, it was not the Hellenism that flowered in the genius of Socrates, Plato, Sophocles, and Phidias. Rather it was the Hellenism debased and sullied through long handling by Macedonians and other lesser tribes.

But debased as it was, it nevertheless proved attractive. Even the priests in Jerusalem began to take to it. Indeed, they were attracted to it even more than the plain people. The story goes that they actually left the sacrifice unburnt on the altars in the Temple, and hurried off to the arenas to watch the Greek athletes there. Greek manners—and vices—became the great fashion of the day, for the more a Jew aped them the better seemed his chance of growing in power and station.

Of course, this change did not come about overnight, but took three or four generations. After Alexander died, his empire was divided into three kingdoms; and Palestine, being the bridge between two of them, naturally became the scene of constant warfare. First it belonged to the Ptolemies, who ruled over Egypt; but before long the Seleucids, who ruled over Syria and Mesopotamia, tried to annex it. The attempt failed, but it was nevertheless repeated several times, for Syria greatly coveted the "bridge." So for fully a century the little land was torn this way and that. Armies tramped up and down its highways continually, and there was war and confusion without rest. But finally the bloody contest was brought to end when, in the year 198 B. C., the Syrians drove the Egyptian army back to the Nile country and formally annexed Palestine.

Hellenism had been seeping steadily into Palestine during all that troublous century. Indeed, had nothing occurred to stem the tide, it might have so flooded the land that Jewish life and thought would in time have been drowned out completely. But one day there arose in Syria a king named Antiochus Epiphanes, who by his headstrong impatience spoiled everything. It is difficult to understand just what was wrong with this king. He seems to have been learned and markedly clever—but also at moments quite insane. He took great delight in poking fun at the whole matter of religion, and yet at the same time he tried to build a religion around himself. That is why he called himself Theos Epiphanes, which means "The Evident God."

Judea at the time was seething with unrest because the corrupt, Hellenized priests were at last being brought to book by a few of the pious Jews. It looked somewhat like a political uprising to Antiochus, and on his way home from a campaign in Egypt he stopped in the middle of the "bridge" to attend to the trouble. He looted the Temple and then simply ordered Judaism to cease. Just that! Evidently he thought it would be quite easy for him to stamp out this obscure and, as he thought, very odd little religion. His orders were that never more should the Sabbath, or the rite of circumcision, or the difference between "clean" and "unclean" food, be observed. Any person found with a Hebrew book in his possession was immediately to be put to death. Henceforth if there was to be any sacrificing it must be of swine's flesh, and to Antiochus or Zeus as god.

For a while starkest horror swept the land as the army of Antiochus began to put those orders into effect.

There were looting and murder, wailing and shame, as the minions of the Syrian tyrant tried to carry out his orders. And then, like the breaking out of a mad fire, the nation blazed into rebellion.

Tippler Had Coat, but Forgot Pants

Houston, Texas.—"Good gosh, do you see the same thing I do?" sputtered Officer A. H. Schimburg to his partner, H. V. Harrison, as they cruised along a Houston street. He pointed to a slightly inebriated man sitting on the curb dressed in a buff-colored sport coat, striped shorts, fancy plaid sox—minus pants and shoes.

"I left 'em home, I guess," the man replied to the policemen's question.

DEATH RAY GUN IS NEW WAR MACHINE

Kills Animals and Melts Metal at Distance.

San Diego, Calif. — Climaxing months of speculation and waiting, a new machine of war, built to insure world peace, will be exhibited at the California Pacific International exposition, it was announced here.

The new machine, known as the giant death ray gun, has been under construction under the supervision of Prof. Harry May since last October and is the result of more than six years' constant experiment and research.

Professor May admits that the discovery of the death ray was entirely by accident and came when he noticed certain metals in his laboratory became abnormally hot. Checking the reason, he declares he found it possible with an invisible ray to disintegrate metals and other substances from a distance, and with sufficient electrical energy to give enough power over a range of several miles.

The new death ray gun resembles a weird telescope or giant cannon, mounted on an armored gun carriage enclosed with more than 200 square feet of Krupp armor steel. It is 16 feet long, 14 feet high and the projector weighs four and a half tons. Four men dressed in specially insulated suits will man the electric switchboard, which will send 4,500,000 volts of electrical energy into the death-dealing device.

Professor May declares the utmost power of the machine has not been calculated, but in experimental tests it melted sheets of metals, burned balloons, killed small animals, at distances of several hundreds of feet.

While in working order, Professor May declares that certain safety tests are being made prior to showing it to the public.

Glass House Is Wreck When Its Owner Returns

Nyack, N. Y.—Although she had been throwing no stones, Mrs. Evelyn Ward Leigh, who lives in a glass house here and who caused considerable comment when she outfitted her horse with pants, entered the office of a local newspaper today to complain that on returning from Florida she had found her house had been smashed.

"The house is wrecked," she said. "Windows have been broken. The glass in the kitchen roof has been smashed, the front door broken in and every other locked door was opened. In one room they had used tools to gouge the woodwork and rip away the door frames."

Police suspected that some frolicking boys had done the damage.

Cinder Burn Restores Sight to Eye Long Blind

Mount Holly, N. Y.—Twenty-two years ago an accident, while working, deprived Herbert Bowden of the sight of his right eye.

Since then he has visited several specialists and vainly tried various treatments. He has tried to get along with just one eye, but he had to give up his profession of basket weaving.

He was working as a janitor in the Burlington county courthouse building a few weeks ago, cleaning the furnace. A red hot cinder flared into his eye.

He screamed. Doctors were summoned and the eye was treated. When the bandages were removed Bowden almost fainted. He could see with his right eye again.

Robber Steals Wires in Spite of Heavy Voltage

Monterey, Calif.—The police are looking for a man who cut away and stole 300 feet of six-strand copper wire.

They are not so much interested in the stolen wire as in the physical qualities of a man who could handle a live wire carrying 440 volts of electricity without getting hurt.

Refresh the Finer Nature

We are too apt to let the mean things of life overgrow the finer nature within us; therefore it is expedient that at least once a day we read a little poetry, or sing a song; or look at a picture.—Goethe.

Strange Hobby

An Australian, at Sydney, Australia, has a queer habit. He buys up barrow loads of fruit—then takes delight in selling out everything at a penny a dozen. This light-hearted philanthropist says that he has been wanting to do this sort of thing ever since he was a child. He has been the center of attraction. "I don't know why I do it, except that I feel happy," he says. "Sometimes I'm walking along and see a fruit-barrow, and before you can say 'How's your uncle?' I've bought the lot."

A New Memorial to McGuffey

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

THE other day a great crowd of people gathered in the little city of Oxford, Ohio. They were there for a double purpose—to celebrate the one hundredth anniversary of the publication of a book but more particularly to honor the memory of the man who wrote that book by unveiling a statue of him.

The man was William Holmes McGuffey and the book which he published in 1836 was the first of the McGuffey Eclectic Readers. Of him it has been said that "he was the most popular American of the Nineteenth century, the man who had the largest influence in determining the thoughts and ideals of the American people during that period and the man to whose work many great Americans of the present day pay tribute as being the fountain of their inspiration to aspire and to achieve."

That is why many American notables—authors, editors, educators, industrialists, statesmen—were present when the statue, the creation of one of America's leading sculptors, was unveiled at Oxford. But the greater part of the crowd there was made up of "just plain folks," members of the numerous "McGuffey Societies" scattered all over the United States, who still cherish in their hearts the lessons they learned from this "Schoolmaster of a Nation" in his Eclectic Readers.

The memorial at Oxford is the second which has been erected in his honor within the last two years. In 1934 another great throng gathered near Washington, Pa., to dedicate a huge granite boulder on the site of the log cabin where McGuffey was born. The crumbling remains of that cabin were removed to Dearborn, Mich., in 1928, rebuilt and added to the Edison institute collection by Henry Ford, through whose efforts 70 acres of the McGuffey farm were purchased for a permanent memorial. At that time Mr. Ford made one of his few public addresses. It was this laconic statement: "I am glad to join you today in giving honor to Doctor McGuffey. He was a great American. The McGuffey Readers taught industry and morality to America."

Tributes From Notables

But Henry Ford is not alone in paying tribute to the Ohio schoolmaster. In fact, the list of those who have acknowledged their indebtedness to his teachings is a veritable American "Who's Who."

Herbert Quick in writing of his childhood in rural Iowa in his book, "One Man's Life," says: "I had a burning thirst for books. On those farms a boy or girl with my appetite for literature was a frog in a desert. The thirst was satisfied and, more important, was stimulated to aspiration for further satisfaction by an old dog-eared volume of McGuffey's, the standard school readers of my day. My mastery of the first and second readers—just the opening of the marvels of the printed page—was a poignant delight and gave me a sort of ecstasy. Those text-books constitute the most influential volumes ever published in America."

Newton D. Baker, secretary of war under President Wilson, once declared that a certain melancholy poem contained in the Fifth Reader made an impression on him that still remains, and the late Justice John H. Clarke said that the language he used in handing down decisions of the United States Supreme court not infrequently was colored by the readers he had studied 50 years before. Ida M. Tarbell, the late Albert J. Beveridge, and many others credit McGuffey with having had a large share in shaping their minds.

The story of the McGuffeys goes back to August, 1774, when William and Anne (McKittrick) McGuffey emigrated to this country from Scotland. Landing at Philadelphia, they journeyed to the southern border of York county, Pennsylvania, where they settled. This Scotch family had one son, Alexander, who was six years old when they arrived in America.

Alexander grew up to be a scout and Indian fighter, serving in Ohio and western Pennsylvania under Arthur St. Clair and Anthony Wayne. At the end of the campaign of 1794 he married Miss Anna Holmes of Washington county, Pennsylvania, and settled as a farmer in that county. Here, William Holmes McGuffey was born, September 23, 1800.

When the lad was two years old, the McGuffeys removed to Trumbull county, Ohio, where Alexander McGuffey purchased a farm of 165 acres in Cortsville village, Cortsville township, in the Connecticut Western Reserve.

One day Rev. Thomas Hughes, Presbyterian minister, was riding by the lonely McGuffey cabin. He overheard the mother praying that her young son, William, might have the opportunity to secure an education that would fit him for life and for the ministry. Reverend Hughes arranged to have the boy attend school at the "Old Stone academy" which he had opened at Darlington, Pa. The tuition was $3 a year and board 75 cents a week. Here William received his academic training and by the time he was eighteen was ready for a collegiate course.

He went to the nearest college, Washington college, in Pennsylvania, and there came under the influence of Dr. Andrew Wylie, president of the college. He studied Latin, Greek and Hebrew as well as English and was graduated with honors in 1826, receiving the bachelor of arts degree.

A Pioneer Teacher

While attending Washington college he supported himself in part by teaching. He taught a pioneer school in Kentucky, his work being observed by the first president of Miami university that had been founded at Oxford, Ohio, in 1809. This man, Rev. Robert Hamilton Bishop, at once recognized the power and devotion of the young undergraduate student and offered him a position at Miami, to begin in the autumn of 1826.

The minutes of the board of trustees show that he was employed as professor of languages. Miami tradition tells that he rode into Oxford with his little brother Alexander with his personal copies of Levy, Horace, Memorabilia and the Greek and Hebrew texts of the Bible in his saddle bags.

Soon after coming to Oxford he met Harriet Spining, daughter of Judge Isaac Spining of Dayton, who was visiting her uncle in Oxford. They became engaged and were married April 3, 1827.

While at Miami, McGuffey wrote the first and second of the graded set of readers—the first in 1836 and the second in 1837. Both the third and fourth readers were written at Cincinnati in 1838. His brother, Alexander, aided Professor McGuffey in the revision of the readers and collected much of the material for the fifth and sixth readers.

After some time at Miami, Professor McGuffey, whose interest lay in the field of literature and philosophy, was tendered a professorship of mental philosophy. He carried on theological studies privately and on March 29, 1829, he received his ordination into the ministry of the Presbyterian church, with the degree of doctor of divinity.

McGuffey recognized the dearth of reading material in the common schools of the time. He had a keen literary sense and was able to select much that appealed to young minds. It was this selection of lessons from a wide range of authors that caused him to name the readers McGuffey Eclectic Readers.

To read them is to catch a glimpse of the stern reality of life in the America of the Nineteenth century. Humor is absent from every one of them—from McGuffey's New First Eclectic Reader, from which the smallest children learned their ABCs and were fascinated by the quaint woodcuts of birds and animals, to the New Sixth Eclectic Reader, a 456-page volume of solid and forbidding type, described on the fly-leaf as "Exercises of Rhetorical Reading with Introductory Rules and Examples."

Moral Lessons

All of the stories in this volume ended with a moral and some of the poems were set to music for singing. At the end of the book were the Ten Commandments in verse and this exhortation:

"With all thy soul love God above,
And as thyself thy neighbor love."

Back in the eighties every child was told more than once by his parents: "If at first you don't succeed, try, try again!" They got that maxim from a poem in McGuffey's New Fourth Eclectic Reader, as they did the admonition to "Waste not, want not." When they taught their children that it was a sin to abstain from "licking the plate clean" they were repeating the title of a little drama in McGuffey's Fourth Reader. "Lazy Ned," "Meddlesome Matty," "A Mother's Gift, the Bible," "Extract from the 'Sermon on the Mount'" are some of the other well-remembered titles.

FIRST READER TITLE PAGE

The Fifth Reader has the title: "McGuffey's New Fifth Eclectic Reader: Selected and Original Exercises for Schools." Here we find old friends: "Maud Muller," "Shylock, or the Pound of Flesh," "Effects of Gambling," which begins:

"The love of gambling steals, perhaps more often than any other sin, with an imperceptible influence on its victim. Its first pretext is inconsiderable, and falsely termed innocent play, with no more than the gentle excitement necessary to amusement. The plea, once indulged, is but too often 'as the letting out of water.' The interest imperceptibly grows. Pride of superior skill, opportunity, avarice, and all the overwhelming passions of depraved natures, ally themselves with the incipient and growing fondness. Dam and dike are swept away. The victim struggles in vain, and is borne down by the uncontrolled current."

"The Bible, the Best of Classics," "Religion the Only Basis of Society," "The Intemperate Husband," are the titles of other lessons, and many of these articles are honored by the name of the author in the index. That familiar poem, "The Spider and the Fly," is given in this reader. "Directions for Reading" are expounded and rules for proper diction are stressed.

It remains for the Sixth Reader to begin with "Principles of Education," which is considered under six heads: 1. Articulation. 2. Inflection. 3. Accent and Emphasis. 4. Reading verse. 5. The voice. 6. Gesture.

All faults to be remedied are meticulously listed. Indeed, lessons in articulation start with the second reader, and proper emphasis and correct pronunciation are stressed all through the series.

The Sixth Reader also contained such classics as Hamlet's soliloquy and "The Fall of Cardinal Wolsey," from "Henry VIII;" Scott's "Lochinvar" and "Marmion and Douglas"; Gray's Elegy; Macauley on "The Impeachment of Warren Hastings"; Tennyson's "Enoch Arden"; Poe's "The Raven"; Longfellow's "Evangeline," and "A Psalm of Life."

A LEAF FROM THE PRIMER

In 1836 Doctor McGuffey left Oxford to accept the presidency of Cincinnati college. In 1839 he became president of Ohio university at Athens. In 1844 he returned to Cincinnati and served as professor at Woodward college, afterward known as Woodward high school.

In 1845 McGuffey went to the University of Virginia as professor of philosophy. He was popular with his students and he taught, says one writer, "with the simplicity of a child, with the precision of a mathematician, and with the authority of truth." An old friend left the following description of Dr. McGuffey: "A man of medium stature and compact figure. His forehead was broad and full; his eyes clear and expressive. His features were of the strongly marked rugged Scotch type. He was a ready speaker, a popular lecturer on education, and an able preacher."

Dr. McGuffey's conscientiousness was proverbial. When he was nearly seventy-three years old he prepared a 500-page book on philosophy. It was the result of ten years of careful research. But he was so critical that after the book was already in type he decided that it was not worthy of publication and ordered it withheld. He remained at the Virginia institution until his death on May 4, 1873.

But he had lived to see his readers selling into the millions and extending their influence into other lands by being translated into many foreign languages. How great that influence was is impossible to estimate. But there is no doubt that their serious purpose, their kindly spirit and their high moral tone made children of an earlier generation better men and women today. At least, that is the unanimous testimony of the devoted members of the McGuffey Societies—thousands of Americans in all walks of life.

OL' KAINTUCK

Blooded Horses Are Revered in Kentucky.

SOME 46,000 acres of land, much of it magnificent virgin forest, will be included in the Mammoth Cave National park in Kentucky. In the long struggle to establish this national park, Maurice H. Thatcher, for many years United States representative from Kentucky, was a prime mover.

Discovered in 1803, Mammoth Cave was considered the largest national cavern in America until the exploration of the Carlsbad caverns in New Mexico. The underground passages are of remarkable extent, probably undermining the entire area of the proposed park development. Almost every dweller in the neighborhood has a cave of his own, to which he seeks to attract visitors.

Underground rivers in which swim eyeless fish are a weird feature of the caves. Besides these there are vast stalactites and stalagmites, the best of which are seen in the part of the cavern reached through the New Entrance. A "frozen Niagara" of salmon-colored rock and a stalactite which, when illuminated by an electric light placed behind it, shadows the perfectly molded form of a beautiful woman stepping down as if to bathe in the subterranean river, are unique.

There are onyx caves and crystal caves; one might profitably pass weeks going through them all. It was in one of these that Floyd Collins met his death.

Beyond Mammoth Cave to the west winds the beautiful Green river known as one of the deepest fresh water streams in the country.

In this neighborhood was shed the first Kentucky blood of the Civil war, when Granville Allen was shot. Families were torn asunder by the difference of allegiance. Few states knew the horror of Civil war as did Kentucky. To understand what war meant to the border people, one needs only to be reminded that Jefferson Davis was born near Hopkinsville, not far from Bowling Green, and that Abraham Lincoln was born near Hodgenville, a few miles to the north.

Birthplace of Lincoln.

At Hodgenville, a stately memorial shelters the humble log cabin in which Lincoln was born. Simplicity marks the place as it marked the great soul it fostered. Visitors pause for a drink from the Lincoln spring.

Memories of Lincoln linger in the very air between Hodgenville and Bardstown. To Knob creek the Lincoln family moved before young Abraham was two years old, and there they lived until he was eight. His earliest recollections, he wrote, were of Knob creek, and how he was saved from drowning there by the quick aid of a chum. Not much chance of drowning in the creek now; it is little more than a rivulet.

If there is a house in the world worthy to inspire music, it is "My Old Kentucky Home," near Bardstown. While a guest in the house, then owned by his kinsfolk, the Rowan family, Stephen Collins Foster composed that deathless ballad, "My Old Kentucky Home."

He wrote the music, it is said, at a desk in the wide hall, the sun streaming through the door opening toward the slave quarters. That selfsame desk still stands in its wonted place, the most precious of Kentucky's furniture relics.

Even without the Foster tradition, the home would be priceless. It makes no attempt at ostentation, but it is peopled with ghosts of the fine old South.

In Bardstown is St. Joseph's cathedral, in which are displayed several original paintings by great masters. They are believed to have been a gift to the church by Louis Philippe.

Not far from the town is Gethsemane, a retreat of Trappist monks, one of two such monasteries in the United States.

Louisville, the city of George Rogers Clark, comes next on your itinerary, northwestward over an excellent highway. It was there that the doughty soldier ended his days in bitterness over the ingratitude of the nation he had spent his all to aid.

At Louisville, too, are the home and tomb of President Zachary Taylor, "Old Rough and Ready." His daughter Knox was wooed and won by Jefferson Davis, then a young lieutenant in the general's command.

To lovers of horse racing, Louisville is a mecca when the Kentucky Derby is run at Churchill Downs.

Where Baseball Bats Are Made.

At the Louisville Slugger factory, baseball bats for many of the famous players are hand-turned by skilled workmen. The second-growth ash comes to the factory in rough billets. These billets are rounded and laid on racks to season for 17 months before they are made into bats. Because ball players are particular about the weight and balance of their bats, each step in the shaping of the sluggers requires the utmost care. Special orders are prepared by hand workers.

From Louisville it is a pleasant trip to Frankfort, the hill-encircled capital of Kentucky. The old Statehouse, now a museum, is an architectural gem of pure Greek design. Within it is a self-supporting circular stairway, one of the few remaining. The new Statehouse is a splendid structure, with a magnificent rotunda under the vaulted dome.

It is strangely fitting that Daniel Boone is buried in the cemetery overlooking the capital of the state he helped win from the wilderness. From the path around his tomb one looks down to the broad valley of the beautiful Kentucky river.

The heart of the Blue Grass is the home of the thoroughbred. To one who has striven futilely, baffled by crab grass, to encourage a lawn, the sight of those blue-grass pastures brings mixed feelings. One does not feel outraged to see splendid horses browsing on such lawns, but one is hard put to escape taking affront at cows and sheep feeding on the velvety carpets.

Horses in the Blue Grass are monarchs of the earth. On some of the famous farms the huge circular stables house quarter-mile exercise tracks floored with tanbark.

The thoroughbred is nurtured more carefully than a baby-show contender. A few hours after he is born he is fitted with a halter, that he may become used to the equipment. He is permitted out of doors only when conditions are exactly right. If he scratches his silky skin, he is plastered with antiseptic and put in a hospital. He drinks only from his own special bucket and his diet would be the despair of a French chef.

The owner of one farm cut by a highway has a tunnel under the road through which his thoroughbreds may be led without danger from passing automobiles.

There is a thrill in visiting the stable that housed Man-o'-War, Golden Broom, Crusader, and Mars.

Lexington Is Charming.

In itself Lexington has a wealth of charm as well as historic interest. The University of Kentucky is there, its mellow old buildings scattered over a shady campus. In the study room at the College of Engineering, heavy tables, with tops fashioned of thick sections of a venerable sycamore tree that once grew on the campus, are treasured relics covered with carved names of alumni.

Another fine educational institution in Lexington is Transylvania college, the first school for higher education west of the Alleghenies. There Jefferson Davis and Henry Clay were once students. The library of this school contains thousands of volumes so rare that scholars from all over the world come to consult them.

Ashland, restored home of Henry Clay, stands on the outskirts of the city. On the walk behind the house the magnetic orator and statesman used to pace back and forth planning his speeches.

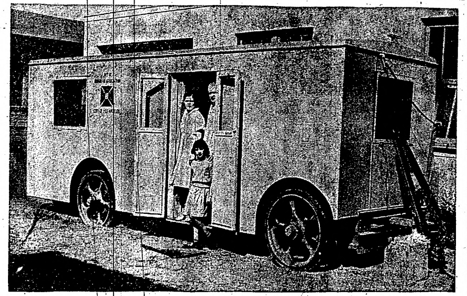
Through the perfect green of the Blue Grass country you may drive to High Bridge, where a railroad bridge 317 feet above the water spans the Kentucky. Crossing the river on a ferry, you approach old Shakertown, once the home of a strange sect who believed in celibacy and the coming of the millennium.

Another place of interest in a swing south of Lexington is the old fort at Harrodsburg, where George Rogers Clark planned his campaigns. The fort has been restored and is open as a museum.

Old Centre college at Danville attracts you because of the heroic victories of the "Praying Colonels" football team.

At Berea college you see the remarkable results of vocational education brought to mountain whites. One cannot escape a feeling of humility at sight of the industry of these students.

Traveling Clinic Brings Health to Children



If little Johnny or Mary, living in a remote section of the 1,094 square miles included in the large Los Angeles school district, has a toothache, infected tonsils, bad eyes, or any minor physical ailment, his parents don't worry. For soon the traveling healthmobile, the only one of its kind in America, will be along with its staff of oculist, dentist, and nurse. The unique healthmobile is a part of the medical service furnished the Los Angeles schools, and which penetrates to every little hamlet and community in the vast empire of the school district. The carload of health constantly travels from school to school, filling teeth, taking out tonsils, testing eyes, and caring for children who would otherwise be neglected.

BEDTIME STORY FOR CHILDREN

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

JERRY MUSKRAT'S TROUBLES BEGIN

JERRY Muskrat watched Billy Mink and Little Joe Otter start on their journeys. Billy was going to a distant brook. Little Joe was going to the Big River. Both intended to stay away until they were sure the trapper, who had just begun to make trouble along the Laughing Brook, would be so discouraged that he would take up his traps.

"I Suppose," He Muttered, "My Troubles Are Just Beginning."

When Jerry had said good-by to Billy Mink and Joe Otter there had been something of wistfulness in his squeaky voice. The fact is, Jerry would have loved to go visiting also. But he knew that it was quite out of the question. In the first place, he is a slow traveler on land, and he felt that on land he would be in even more danger than if he stayed at home, despite those dreadful traps. Then, again, winter would soon come and he must be prepared for it if he would live through it. Billy Mink and Little Joe Otter do not have to prepare for winter, but Jerry does.

So Jerry sat on the top of his house and watched Billy Mink and Little Joe Otter out of sight. Then he sighed. Then sighed again. "I suppose," he muttered, "my troubles are just beginning. These traps Billy Mink told about were set for him, but I know trappers well enough to know that sooner or later there will be some traps set especially for me."

Jerry was quite right. Early the next morning as he was making his breakfast on a lily root he caught sight of some one coming down the Laughing Brook. It wasn't Farmer Brown's Boy. It was a stranger. This stranger kept stopping and examining every old log in the water and every hole along the bank. He stopped at three of Jerry's favorite eating places and studied them. Jerry knew just what that meant.

"That's that dreadful trapper," thought Jerry. "He's trying to find out where I am in the habit of going so that he may set traps there. It's clear to me that from now on I shall have to watch my step every time I move."

After the stranger had left, Jerry swam to the places where the stranger had stopped. At each one of them his nose was tickled with a delicious smell. At one place he smelled a carrot, and Jerry is very fond of carrot. At another place he smelled apple, and if there is any one thing that Jerry Muskrat likes it is apple. He was greatly tempted, was Jerry Muskrat. It seemed to him that he must go ashore and get those good things to eat. But he didn't. He just plunged his head under water so that he could no longer smell those things and then swam over to his house to think things over.

MOTHER'S COOK BOOK

HELPFUL HINTS

SWEETS have always been popular with the ladies, and so a box of candy is often a smoother of the way, in cases mild or serious.

Slice any rich candy bar very thin and spread or lay between ginger snaps.

Moisten chopped figs with orange juice and a bit of lemon juice, heated over water until smooth, add chopped peanuts and use for a sandwich spread.

Fancy cakes and cookies may serve for dessert in an emergency. Small ginger cookies, put together with melted marshmallows or any good candy bar. Vanilla wafers made into sandwiches with melted peanut candy or caramels softened to spread. Crackers with white of egg, chopped marshmallows and nuts baked in a quick oven make delightful little cakes to serve with a cup of tea or chocolate.

A few cans of pineapple on the emergency shelf will be found most desirable for any number of dishes. It is ready in the form of rich slices to be used as they are with meats, or shredded, or in small cans in cubes to be used as garnish for frozen dishes and other desserts.

Crab meat is one of the most versatile of foods, especially good for a midnight snack, a sandwich or in the form of a cocktail. For the latter three tablespoonfuls of catsup, two tablespoonfuls of horseradish, one tablespoonful of worcestershire sauce and salt to taste. Add the crab meat and serve thoroughly chilled.

For simple head lettuce salad dress with lemon juice, a little salt and a handful of rolled, freshly roasted peanuts. Orange and lemon juice with a little seasoning make ideal salad dressings.

"Grandmother" Clocks

"Grandmother" clocks are more entitled to their name than "grandfather" clocks, for their cases, with the exception of the face, are carved to represent a woman's figure. The National museum in Helsinki, Finland, owns an interesting one which wears a short-sleeved blouse and a flared skirt and stands, with arms akimbo, on two human-shaped feet.—Collier's Weekly.

THE NEW WORD

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

TODAY perhaps you heard
A word
You never heard before,
Yet think there is no land
At hand
For mortals to explore,
Behold a continent,
Content
To leave it still unknown,
When you the trail might take
And make
That land, that word, your own.

Oh, never let the word
You heard
Remain a mystery.
Right then take down the book
And look,
Yes, look it up to see.
For, there is more to hold
Than gold,
Another wealth to reach,
A fortune for the mind
To find—
It is a wealth of speech.

TRY THIS TRICK

CATCH THE DICE

Catching the dice is a game that looks easy but proves impossible when people try it, unless they know the secret.

A small cup is held in one hand. The thumb and fingers encircle the cup; between them, they hold a small cube; one of a pair of dice. The second cube is placed upon the first.

The object is to toss each of the dice separately, catching them one by one in the cup; and keeping them there. Thus the fun begins; for after the first cube is bagged, the tossing of the second causes the first to jump out.

The way to do the trick is not to toss the second cube at all. Simply release it. Swoop downward with the cup and catch the last of the dice while it is falling.

LEAVES WEALTH TO ASSIST POOR BOYS

Rich Oil Operator Creates "Mercy Foundation."

Pittsburgh, Pa.—Ever conscious throughout life of his struggles in his rise to financial heights as one of the nation's wealthiest oil operators, Addison H. Gibson, moved in death to insure youths of another generation against similar hardships.

In his will filed for probate here he left more than $2,400,000 of his $2,500,000 estate to the poor for medical care and to needy young men for college education.

Dies in Oklahoma.

The seventy-five-year-old Pittsburgher, who started life as the son of an Armstrong county storekeeper, died recently in Tulsa, Okla. In creating by his will the Addison H. Gibson Foundation, he declared:

"I have throughout life been impressed by the misfortune of persons in dire need of medical and hospital assistance, but unable to obtain the same because of poverty and limited means. Also by the fact that worthy children of parents who are poor or of limited means cannot obtain the higher education which they crave and which, if they could obtain, might greatly increase their happiness and their usefulness."

He ordered $100,000 be held in trust for his sister, Annie A. McChesney, of Oak Park, Ill., and her daughter, Martha G. McChesney. Upon their death the money will be returned to the foundation.

Remembers Associates.

Gibson, whose career began as a lease searcher for the Peoples Natural Gas company 40 years ago, struck it rich when he brought in Mexico's largest oil well at Tampico.

He urged that his money be given only to western Pennsylvanians. In addition, he remembered his associates in the oil industry.

He specified:

"I want them to make loans to worthy young men desiring to obtain a college education. I want loans to be made to such individuals at a low rate of interest, or, if my trustees see fit, without interest. I realize such individuals will not be able to give security for their loans.

"It is my belief that a great majority of the boys so given assistance will repay their loans."

Excavators at Scupi Uncover Theater Ruins

Belgrade.—Excavations, carried out under the supervision of Dr. Nickola Vulitch, of the Belgrade university on the site of the Roman-Byzantine city of Scupi, just outside modern Skoplye, in the south of Yugoslavia, have reached an important stage.

Ancient Scupi was destroyed by an earthquake in 516 A. D. A large theater has been discovered of which all important parts, such as the stage, halls and corridors, were traced. The stage was about 150 feet long, and the entire theater measured 300 to 900 feet, offering seats for about 3,000 spectators.

The outer walls have been excavated as well as part of the columns which served to support the "velarium," the canvas which protected the costlier seats from rain and sun.

It is expected that further excavations will throw light on the disputed problem of the use of the stage in Roman and Greek theaters.

As Scupi was the seat of a bishop from the Third to the Sixth centuries A. D., Doctor Vulitch hopes to discover and excavate also important ecclesiastical buildings of the early Byzantine period.

"Alcoholic Baldness" Held Prohibition "Hangover"

Chicago.—"Alcoholic baldness" is becoming alarmingly prevalent in the United States, a "hangover" from prohibition days, according to Paul A. Thomas, hair and scalp specialist.

"The majority of cases," Thomas says, "are just beginning to show up, since it takes seven or eight years to reach the baldness stage. During prohibition constant drinking of bootleg gin and compounded liquor containing raw or impure alcohol frequently caused a scalp condition known as "hooch hair."

"The shattered nervous system and over-stimulated blood circulation dissipated and weakened the scalp, stopped its normal function and caused it to develop irritations. The hair became dry and brittle. Baldness now is the result in most of these cases. Scalp specialists report that this type is becoming more and more common, and that the response to treatment is slower than for many other scalp ailments."

No Courthouse, No Sale

Monterey, Calif.—Monterey county residents whose property has been foreclosed are jubilant. The law provides that the sale of all such property must be made from the "steps of the courthouse." Monterey county is building a new courthouse and it will probably be six months before there will be any "courthouse steps" for foreclosure sales.

Lights of New York

by L. L. STEVENSON

Prowling around New York—and feeling restless every time he hears a liner whistle—your correspondent encountered Ray Henderson who devotes the greater part of his time to writing about Katherine Cornell. Knowing that at this season, his employer spends many hours reading manuscripts, naturally the question asked concerned the outlook for young dramatists. The answer was a bit surprising. On an average, only once in 200 manuscripts received at the Cornell offices from unknown dramatists is there an original idea. Still, an editor once stated that in five years, during which time he'd read thousands of unsolicited manuscripts, he had found only three worth buying and of the three, one turned out to have been plagiarized. Oh yes, another thing. Mr. Henderson mentioned that during the last few weeks, the Cornell play department had received a preponderance of antiwar manuscripts.

Proceeding along Broadway, your correspondent stopped for a word or two with Phil Baker. The conversation concerned complications caused by copyrights in music which, as everyone knows, has been responsible for the revival of many songs of the past because if the new ones were put on the air, there would be lawsuits. The Baker comment was that the way things are now, if Gabriel wanted to blow his trumpet, nine chances out of ten, the tune would be restricted and Judgment day would have to be postponed! Which brought to mind the charge made by Phil Duey that song writers have banded together in a campaign against public utilities with electric companies as their chief target. As proof, he cited, "Lights Out," "After Dark," "Early to Bed," "Sleep," "A Perfect Day" and "At Dawning.'

In one of those vacant lots on Eighth avenue, your correspondent encountered two youngsters playing a game they called "night club." Their equipment was an old table on which stood a number of assorted bottles, all empty. Asked where they got the idea, one little girl spoke up and said they'd heard their parents discussing such places and had followed the details so far as they were able. "And if we could only get that goat over there to stand still near our table, we'd get the right smell, too," added the other little girl solemnly. Incidentally, a number of the night clubs have added telephones to the table equipment.

One of the habits of inhabitants of this town to which your correspondent is unable to become accustomed is that of going to a store and buying dirt or rather "earth" as it is termed by those who sell it. New Yorkers spend regular money for a little black soil for window boxes or flower pots and spend much more to make those penthouse gardens. At current retail prices, shoe scrapings of boyhood days would have sold for enough to have bought a new cane fish pole. Even the residue from face washings, under maternal supervision, would have brought considerable. Instead of buying dirt, we had to work hard to get rid of it. But this is New York.

At lunch recently with a few friends, Frank Buck explained how East Indian fakirs are able to handle even the most poisonous snakes without endangering their lives or their health. Before giving a demonstration of his control over reptiles, the fakir irritates his snakes to such an extent that they are so fighting mad they will bite anything that gets in their way. The fakir allows them to vent their ire on some harmless object, such as an orange, until their venom sacks have been emptied. Then for the next few hours, he handles them without risk. It may be all as the "Bring-'Em-Back-Alive" Buck says, but I wouldn't want to try it. Some old snake would be just mean enough to hold back a few drops for my benefit.

The truly rural again is being shown New Yorkers by means of that "traveling farm" which made such a hit last year. There are cows and chickens and a red barn with a milkmaid, which by no means are commonplace in a city where kids know the country only through pictures. Each month this year there will be a 10-day vacation for the exhibit so that the animals may rest, continual stares tiring them no end.

Newly Hatched Gulls Taught to Fear Man

Ottawa.—A sea-gull captured three or four days after hatching can never be tamed because its mother or other grown birds have taught it fear, Dr. John Tait of McGill university, Montreal, told the biological section of the Royal Society of Canada. A gull taken just after hatching, he said, may grow up without fear of man.

His Change

A planter in Alabama hadn't seen one of his former workers for a year, until he saw him in Montgomery one Saturday. "Well, Well!" the planter exclaimed. "What are you doing now, Uncle Mose?"

"Ah's done gone to preachin'," the venerable negro replied.

"What! You preaching?"

"Yes, suh!"

"Well, well! Do you use notes?"

"Naw, suh! At the fust Ah used dem; but now Ah has to have cash!"

Competition

An enterprising young florist, in order to increase his trade, displayed this sign in his window:

"We give a packet of flower seed with every plant."

His competitor across the street promptly sought to meet the competition by placing in his window the following announcement:

"We give the earth with every plant."

THE boy arose and reluctantly left his companion at Mrs. Peuston's imperious bidding. The deserted girl's eyes were so appealing that the waiter was at her side almost before she had dragged her wistful stare from the boy's departing back.

"Did he say something he should not have, honey?" the waiter demanded fiercely.

"No, no, Daddie," the girl denied hastily. "He's a perfect darling. . . ."

The waiter sighed with relief.

"Then what's the matter, Daisy?"

"He said he'd have to be gone a few minutes. And I think I'd better leave before he gets back."

"I think you'd better, Daisy. You shouldn't have come anyway. Mrs. Peuston's charity dinners aren't any place for a working girl. . . . Are you sure he didn't say anything he shouldn't have?"

"Honestly he didn't." She smiled up at him bravely. "Do you know who he is?"

"Some friend of Mrs. Pueston, I suppose." He looked down at her with tender sharpness. "These folks are too blue-blooded for us, honey. Don't break your heart with foolish dreams. . . . You shouldn't have come in the first place."

"But I had to, Daddy. Mr. Ginling gave me the ticket and let me have this store dress, just because he wanted me to see what was being worn this season. I couldn't fail him when he's been so nice to me always, could I? I won't break my heart with foolish dreams, though. . . . You'll tell him something, won't you, so he won't think I—"

"I'll give him some excuse, honey. . . . You'd better run along," he said hastily.

"As soon as I get a closer look at Mrs. Vanter's gown," she promised. "She'll dance by in a moment. . . . I mustn't forget I'm managing Mr. Ginling's evening dress department."

The dancing crowd surged past. She touched the waiter's hand in an invisible gesture of affection, and was gone. He busied himself about the midget table until the boy returned.

The waiter eyed the boy appraisingly. Nice, clean looking youngster, he decided. Seemed sort of fresh and wholesome.

"The young lady asked me to tell you," he said, "she met her father and she had to leave."

The boy was still fresh and wholesome, but the happiness was erased from his face in an instant. "Did—did she leave any other message? Any—any word about where I could reach her, or anything?" he inquired hopefully.

"No, sir."

The boy leaned forward, staring with unseeing eyes at the white cloth for a moment.

"Which way did she go?" he demanded then, jumping to his feet.

"Toward the entrance. . . . She's been gone several minutes."

"Oh." The boy sat down again, slowly as if he were suddenly old. "Do—do you happen to know—never mind. And thanks for giving me her message."

"Was there anything else, sir?"

"No, thanks. Yes!" The boy wriggled uncomfortably. He asked hesitantly, "Do you—does the young lady come here often, do you know?"

"I've never seen her here before," the waiter answered truthfully.

The young man pulled out a card, thrust it into the waiter's unresponsive hand. "If you ever see her, will you ask her for pity's sake to let me have her address?"

The waiter was staring, unbelieving, at the bit of pasteboard. Above the name, two lines wavered before his eyes. "Ginling Department Store," and "Advertising Department."

"You can reach me there any time except tomorrow morning," the boy said. He explained unhappily, "I have to spend tomorrow morning with the manager of the women evening gown department, planning fashion ads. That's why Mr. Ginling sent me here tonight to look over the dresses they were wearing."

Use for Paint Grows.

Oil from soy beans is used at an increasing rate in manufacturing paints. It no doubt would be used more extensively if farmers in the Middle West could grow their own crops that would yield seeds with more rapid drying oils, says a writer in the Chicago Tribune. The amount of iodine contained in oil is directly related to the drying properties of the paint made from the oil. The higher the iodine content the faster paint dries. Paint experts say that oil from perilla seeds has a higher iodine content than oils fro mother oil bearing seeds such as soy beans, flax, and hemp. Perilla seed oil cannot be used alone in making paint because it dries too fast, so it is mixed with soy bean oil. The perilla oil now used in this country is imported.

Bloody Civil War Rages in Spain

L. Companys

CIVIL war, desperate and bloody, broke out in Spain, and though the government in Madrid declared it was in control of the situation, such news as got through the censorship indicated that the struggle was by no means ended. On one side were the Fascists and royalists led by Gen. Francisco Franco; on the other were the loyal troops and the workers, Communists and Socialists. The rebels started the game in Spanish Morocco and the Canaries and were soon in control there. Then Franco, who is only forty-three years old but a dynamic character, crossed over to Algeciras, followed by the Foreign Legion and a lot of Moors, Moroccans and black African troops. After a sharp batttle at La Linea, close to Gibraltar, these contingents began a march northward toward Seville and Cadiz. There was severe fighting in San Sebastian, where the American embassy is located in summer, and in other border towns. Malaga was reported to be in flames.

Commanders of the rebels asserted their aim was to "save the republic," to keep order and to destroy the Marxists. In Barcelona their attack was directed especially against Luis Companys, president of the Catalonian parliament, who was said to be besieged in his offices.

Jose Maria Gil Robles, leader of the Catholic C. E. D. A. (Confederation of Autonomous Right Parties) fled to Biarritz, France. An aviator who escaped the rebels in Morocco declared Gil Robles had instigated the revolt.

Premier Santiago Casares Quiroga resigned in favor of Diego Martinez-Barrio, speaker of parliament, but the latter held the office only a few hours. Then Jose Giral, former minister of marine, formed a cabinet with General Pozas, who has the support of both the powerful Civil Guard and Republican elements of the army, as minister of war.

The rebels sent word to the government that unless it capitulated they would bomb Madrid from planes.

Olympic Torch Started to Berlin Games

IN OLYMPIA, Greece, scene of the first Olympic games, a torch was lighted by the rays of the sun and a Greek runner seized it and started it on a 12-day relay to the sports field in Berlin where the Olympic flame is to be lighted on August 1. Five thousand distinguished persons were selected to carry the torch, these including King Boris of Bulgaria, King Peter of Jugoslavia, and a long list of princes, statesmen and sportsmen. On the last leg it was to be borne by S. Loues of Greece, winner of the marathon in the games of 1896. A hundred thousand Hitler youths will accompany Loues in a triumphal parade to the stadium.

Five thousand torches to carry the flame were donated by the Krupp works, so each of the bearers will retain one as a souvenir.

Hot and Dry Spell Broken by Rains and Cool Winds

Dr. Tugwell

RELIEF for the drouth-stricken regions in the Middle West came with rains in many sections and cooling winds that sent the temperature down toward normal. However, it was too late to save the crops in many states, and prices of foodstuffs continued to advance. The farmers began to receive aid from the government in the form of cash, and no one could deny that they needed this help.

Loss of life throughout the United States from the unprecedented heat wave exceeded 3,850, an all-time high.

Agronomists in Minnesota, Nebraska, Iowa, Illinois and Ohio expressed apprehension over the outlook for the corn crop unless general rains should develop rapidly.

Arriving at Bismarck, N. D., to help co-ordinate drouth relief enterprises, Rexford G. Tugwell, resettlement administrator, was informed that approximately 60,000 farm families in the state were among the needy. A conference of state and federal officials in Bismarck developed a three-fold plan for the relief of dwellers in the desolated areas of the Dakotas, western Minnesota, eastern Montana and Wyoming. These included:

Immediate advancement of money to needy families, repayable out of WPA earnings; granting of funds to farmers desiring to keep small livestock herds for the purchase of feed and subsistence to be repaid by work on WPA projects; loans and grants to owners of large scale cattle enterprises to cover the cost of shipping animals to other states for feeding.

Nazi Decrees in Danzig Crush Opposition

UNLESS the protests of Poland are effective, all opposition to Nazi power in the Free City of Danzig is due to be crushed. Dr. Arthur Karl Greiser, president of the Danzig senate, which is controlled by Nazis, has issued administrative decrees ordering:

1. Dissolution of any organization whose members, with knowledge of its executive board, spreads news "endangering the state interest."

2. Prohibition of review by the courts of police measures of a political nature, including those aimed at the right of assembly, the press, and free speech.

3. Prohibition of Jewish ritual slaughtering for food purposes.

4. Imposition of three month protective custody on persons declared to be "endangering the public peace."

Thus the city's constitution is virtually set aside, and the Poles especially, having extensive economic interests there, are indignant.

Doings of Towsendites in Their Convention

Dr. Townsend

AN ALLIANCE between Dr. Francis E. Townsend, Father Charles E. Coughlin and Rev. Gerald L. K. Smith in the interests of a third party was announced at the Townsendite convention in Cleveland, attended by 12,000 followers of the California doctor who advocates pensions of $200 per month for every person over sixty.

In an address before the convention, Father Coughlin bitterly denounced the present administration and President Roosevelt and called upon the delegates to follow Dr. Townsend in endorsing the candidacy of William Lemke for the presidency on the Union ticket.

Lemke himself appeared before the convention before it adjourned and made a speech in which he pledged himself to "stand four-square behind the old age pension movement" and denounced the present administration as "national lunacy." The delegates applauded the first statement, but otherwise were rather apathetic toward the Union party leader. Doctor Townsend made no plea for him but merely urged his followers to concentrate on the election of senators and congressmen.

Nanking Troops Take Control of Canton

REVOLT of the Cantonese against the Nanking government has collapsed and latest reports say government troops have entered Canton and taken over maintenance of peace and order. There was no opposition and the city was quiet.

Chen Chi-tang, the Canton war lord, deserted his followers and fled to Hongkong on a gunboat. There was a scramble to find Chen's alleged silver hoard, said to amount to many million dollars, but much of it is believed to be deposited in foreign banks.

The Nanking government gains possession of Kwantung province's fleet of more than 300 fighting planes, and also of extensive armaments. These latter include quantities of heavy artillery, field artillery and machine guns, nearly half a million rifles, numbers of anti-aircraft guns, tanks, the southwest's navy, two arsenals and one airplane factory.

Turkey Given Right to Rearm the Dardanelles

EIGHT signatories to the Lausanne post-war treaty have granted to Turkey the right to remilitarize the Dardanelles, and they, with Turkey, have signed a convention covering the matter. Only Japan made slight reservations because it is no longer a member of the League of Nations.

The convention grants complete liberty to merchant marine passage through the straits in peacetime and wartime, even with Turkey at war, provided the commercial vessels do not assist the fighting powers.

The Russian navy is granted complete freedom in peacetime to leave and enter the Black sea through the straits, but nations outside will be subjected to limitations on passage of fighting ships through the channel.

During wartime belligerents will be prohibited from using the straits unless acting for the league

Communist Campaign to Open on August 5

NATIONAL campaign headquarters of the Communist party have been opened in New York city and it is announced that Earl Browder, candidate for President, will start his speechmaking in Denver on August 5. From there he goes to Salt Lake City, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland, Ore., Seattle, Butte, Bismarck and Minneapolis. All his speeches will be broadcast.

James W. Ford, colored, the Communist party's candidate for vice president, will open his tour August 5 with an appearance in Scranton, Pa.

Attempt to Kill King Edward of England

King Edward

THE attempted assassination of King Edward VIII of England in London brought great alarm to the English speaking world. The attempt was made near Hyde Park and the monarch's life was saved by a woman bystander who grappled with the would-be assassin and wrested a pistol from him.

The king was returning to Buckingham palace from Hyde Park, where on horseback he had presented new colors to six battalions of the Grenadier, Coldstream and Scots guards.

In Paris, the celebration of France's national holiday, Bastille day, saw the Champs Elysees a scene of rioting with rightists and leftists in combat with each other and the police. The disorders began when leftists were returning from their own parade in the eastern section of the city.

Lewis and Others Are Summoned for Trial

IMMEDIATE splitting of the American Federation of Labor into two rival groups was averted by the action of the Federation's executive council in voting to bring to trial on August 3, the union leaders led by John L. Lewis on charges of "dual unionism." It had been reported earlier that the council had voted to suspend the 12 unions grouped as the Committee for Industrial Unionization.

The council's action was looked upon as a peace move in the crisis that threatens open warfare in the labor movement. It was precipitated by the drive to organize 500,000 workers in the steel industry into one big industrial union by John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers and his followers.

The charges against the Lewis group include "competition as a rival organization with the A. F. of L."; fomenting an insurrection within the Federation; violation of contracts they have entered into with the Federation when granted their charters.

L. P. Ayers Predicts Big Business Improvement

PREDICTING 1936 will be the best business year since 1930 and "possibly since 1929," Colonel Leonard P. Ayers, economist of Cleveland, declared that statistics on all important business had shown substantial and "healthy increases" since the first of this year. Strikes, drouth and other difficulties have not affected increases in employment, markets and security exchanges, the economist said.

"More steel has been produced in the first half of 1936 than in all 1932," he pointed out. "A major factor in the increased steadiness of business has been well sustained employment among the factory workers making durable goods. Workers in the durable goods factories suffer most from lay-offs and shut-downs, but such has not been the case in the first half of this year and of last year."

Henry Ford Has Vision Concerning Foods

Henry Ford

HENRY FORD, approaching his seventy-third birthday envisioned the eventual decline of farm animals as a source of the world's food and predicted that grains and other crops will largely be substituted for them.

"We can, I believe, get a more plentiful supply of food cheaper and better," he said, "by processing the products of the soil instead of asking cows and chickens to do it for us. In the future farm animals of all kinds will decline in numbers. We won't need them."

Army to Get Many New Fast Fighting Planes

PERFECTED plans of the War department for procurement of airplanes provide for the acquisition of 60 new fast fighting planes every month during the rest of this year. This has been made possible by the smooth functioning of a new purchasing plan started by Harry H. Woodring, assistant secretary of war.

Before the end of the year, 500 new planes will be ready for action, officials said. Plans have been made for the purchase of more than 600 planes of various types in 1937.

RENEW FIGHT AGAINST DROUGHT

Government Seeks Methods of Alleviating Drought Ravages in Future Years Through Water Conservation.

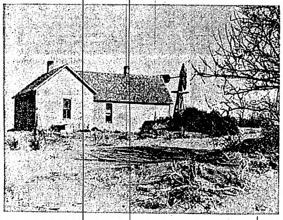
By WILLIAM C. UTLEY

WHILE a blazing sun beats relentlessly on the parched fields of the Northwest and South, man grapples anew with the monster, Drought, in an effort to minimize its destructive effects, and to devise ways of mitigating future ravages. No one can predict a drought, and no one can prevent one, but much can be done to lessen their effects. The drought period through which the country has been passing since 1930 has caused the adoption of methods which will enable us to make better use of the available water in even the driest years.

To meet the immediate emergency government agencies have devised a three-fold program which consists of supplying 55,000 WPA jobs in the Dust Bowl and 20,000 in the South; of making Resettlement administration loans to at least 50,000 persons, and of purchasing a million head of cattle with a five-million dollar fund in the hands of the Department of Agriculture. In the whole country 336 counties had been listed up to July 15 where the crops are considered a total loss, and where efforts will be devoted to saving livestock and alleviating human distress. The Department of Agriculture is buying up some of the stock and the railroads are offering reduced freight rates to ship the animals to fresh pasture, to be returned later when conditions have improved.

Is Desolate Picture.

The drought area presents a sad picture today. The major portion of the spring wheat area has been burned to a crisp. Dakota and Montana farms present an aspect of desolation that veteran farmers say is without precedent. This condition even extends into Minnesota. Fields that were green with grain and where lush pastures grew a year ago, appear today as only a blackened expanse. The range country is burned so dry that it cannot support either sheep or cattle.



Once a comfortable farm home now surrounded by a Sahara-like expanse of shifting sand and dust.

Millions of grasshoppers are everywhere. Even the small spots that have escaped the ravages of the drought have been desolated by this plague. When they complete their work in one field they fly to another. It is not uncommon, according to travelers, to see some automobile stopped so that the battered bodies of thousands of these pests may be scraped from the radiator and windshield.

Hundreds of farmers whose lives have been spent on these farms are today loading their few possessions in autos, trucks and wagons and starting out for some other section of the country, where they will attempt to start life over again. Today, their work of years is completely gone and they have become discouraged with the struggle to obtain a living for their families in the stricken area.

Offer Local Relief.

To help these unfortunate folk, the Resettlement administration has declared a one-year moratorium on rural rehabilitation loans on between 25,000 and 80,000 farms in the drought-stricken counties throughout the nation. At the same time the Works Progress administration has started a program to provide jobs, digging wells, building farm to market roads, and terracing land. About $18,000,000 will be available for crop loans and feed, and the RA will spend $1,700,000 monthly on $20 doles to suffering farmers.

It is estimated that between 3,000,000 and 5,000,000 farm dwellers have been seriously affected by the drought. A total of 204,000 families has been listed as dependent on relief. Crop losses are estimated as high as $300,000,000.

In the opinion of many, including President Roosevelt, unless something is done to check the drop in the water table, the now fertile regions of Nebraska, Iowa and Kansas will be drawn into the great Dust Bowl. The consequences of this can hardly be imagined. Our entire national economy would be displaced.

Long Range Program.

Experts say that this can be stopped by a long-range program of permanent works. In accordance with their findings the government has announced a permanent anti-drought program divided under the following heads:

1. Soil Conservation. This is executed largely by the Soil Conservation service of the Department of Agriculture. Grass is planted to prevent erosion and to encourage the proper type of furrowing.

2. Shelter Belt Development. The Forestry service is in charge of this. It is designed to be 100 miles wide and 1,000 miles long. Half-mile tracts, each a few feet thick, have already been planted along the front. More than two million dollars for a project estimated to cost seventy-five millions have been spent, and congress has refused to make further funds available.

3. Reclamation. Irrigation and dam projects are being carried on by the Department of the Interior in the western states. Under the Taylor act to preserve grass the department is also improving range operations.

4. Resettlement. The Resettlement administration is buying up 1,282,522 acres, returning them to pasture and resettling families at an average cost of $4,500 each.

Drought Swings East.

In contrasting the 1936 drought with that of 1934, one of the conspicuous differences is that the dry center has swung further east and southeast, while the extreme Southwest, hard hit two years ago, is in relatively good condition. This spring, as the drought area began to take form, it stretched in a broad band from a little west of the center of Montana to Kentucky, Tennessee and South Carolina. As the season advanced the arid belt spread northward and northeastward, even reaching into the New England states. Heavy rains during the first part of July brought some relief to Tennessee, Kentucky and some parts of Virginia, although not enough to permanently relieve the situation.

By the beginning of July two great islands of extreme drought had developed. One lay like a great blot through the middle South from the Mississippi to and beyond the Appalachians, while the other crossing the Canadian boundary, ranged from Minnesota to western Montana and south through Wyoming and Nebraska. In these areas crops this year are less than 35 per cent of normal. Between these two sections crops ranged from 35 to 65 per cent of normal.

Just how this crop damage will compare with 1934 cannot fully be determined as yet, but the following table shows that in at least eleven of the affected states the drought is more severe:

State.	Percentage of Normal Rainfall. 1936.	1934.
North Dakota	32	59
South Dakota	49	62
Montana	53	78
Minnesota	60	69
Missouri	37	49
Arkansas	40	68
Kentucky	26	76
Tennessee	23	96
Ohio	44	57
Indiana	46	61
Illinois	43	49

These figures by themselves, however, give only a partial picture of conditions. Much depends upon when the rain falls and how much of it is retained in the ground, pools, ponds and other reservoirs.

Evaporation Heavy.

Agricultural experts point out that during a few weeks of the early growing season, vegetation may thrive on the accumulation of soil water which extends to about the depth of the growing plant roots but after this period from seven to eight inches of favorably distributed precipitation is the minimum requirement for the production of average yields unless temperatures are abnormal.

The latter play an important part, for the higher the temperature and the hotter the winds, the greater will be evaporation. The excessive high temperatures and hot winds of this summer have added immeasurably to the seriousness of the situation. For example a small pond may lose more water through evaporation than livestock actually drink. If it dries up and the farmer is forced to water his stock out of wells he reduces the ground-water supply, the level sinks, and presently the water situation becomes acute. Multiply this by hundreds of thousands of such instances and it is easy to understand the stories of want and suffering that have come out of the West during the summer.

The solution of this problem in the future is simple, according to government experts. Water is a natural resource, they contend, replaceable but not inexhaustible. The only way to be sure of having it in dry times is to save it in wet times. Upon this is based the government's four-fold permanent program.

The first move is to slow down and lessen the loss of snow-water and rain-water, either by methods of cultivation which retain the water in the ground, or by impounding water in dams. The latter may range from huge engineering enterprises like Norris or Boulder dam to the simple dam which may be constructed by a farmer.

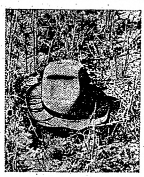
Whether the object is to prevent floods, reduce erosion, or prepare against drought, ground water storage methods are the same. Trees are planted on the steeper and less fertile slopes, medium slopes are covered with cover crops such as alfalfa or with sod, and land with marked slopes is plowed at right angles to the slopes, sometimes with strips of sod at intervals between the furrows.

Methods Prove Effective.

There is little question but that these methods are effective, and that if they were sufficiently widespread they would tend to equalize the flow of streams, would feed ponds and springs further into the summer, and would maintain the level of water in wells. These practices have been demonstrated by the Soil Conservation service; in the work of the CCC; in the conservation operations of TVA; and by other federal and state agencies.

When water does not have time to run off it saturates the ground, which becomes a monster reservoir. If plants have their roots well down by the time the drought begins they are better prepared to withstand a long siege of dry weather.

To co-ordinate with this program of ground water conservation is the plan for storage of water behind immense dams. The great dams now completed or in construction on the Tennessee, in the upper Missouri system, on the Columbia and on the Colorado will furnish a larger flow of water during dry seasons. Boulder dam can hold two years' normal flow of the Colorado river as a margin of safety for the irrigated lands downstream. By holding back the water of the Clinch river, a tributary of the Tennessee, the Norris dam reduced the flood crest of the main river at Chattanooga by three feet last March. When the river shrank to unprecedentedly low levels under the blast of the drought in June, the gates were opened, and engineers announced that they had enough water to maintain navigable depths in the lower Tennessee even through an extreme drought period.



A typical field with crop less than hat-high.

Just what part each system should play in the conservation of water is a point of controversy among engineers. A number of engineers contend that more emphasis should be placed on smaller dams to control the water run-off at the source. A conference on this phase of the work is to be held in Washington in September, immediately following the World Power conference.

Despite tremendous crop losses in the dry regions, the Agriculture department has assured the country that there is enough food on hand to feed the nation for the next 12 months, although supplies of many staple commodities are below normal. Prices of many foodstuffs will be higher because of the drought.

A Village Blacksmith

There are few village smithy shops today under the chestnut trees. One reason is that there aren't any more chestnut trees. Another is that the motor car is rapidly driving horses and vehicles drawn by horses out of business.

I used to think that in fifty years or more practically all the village smithies would disappear.

But lately I have learned better.

Here in a little coast town in Maine is a village blacksmith who has more work than he can do, though he has probably not shod a horse or repaired an agricultural implement in twenty years or more.

* * *

For a time after the "devil wagons" began crowding horses and horse drawn vehicles off the road, he had little to do.

Then one day he saw some ornamental grill work that had been sent to his town to be used as an adornment on a new building.

He examined it carefully, then went home and thought a little.

"There is no reason in the world why I cannot do that kind of work," he said to himself. "I will do it, by Gosh."

* * *

Today the children still "love to see his flaming forge and hear the bellows blow."

Over the anvil on which he used to fashion horse shoes he makes beautiful things of steel and iron.

Visitors seeing him at work have come in to inquire if his handiwork was on sale.

He assured them that it certainly was, and that more of the same kind of work would be in evidence as soon as there was a demand for it.

He is known today all over the state, and in many other states, whose residents have bought his work.

And if he had the advertising gift that some people have he would have a wide reputation.

But not, I am sorry to say, a great business.

For his work is artistry, and cannot be done in quantity over a single anvil.

* * *

It cannot be said of him that he is another Benvenuto Cellini. He works in iron, not in silver and gold.

But he is a master craftsman, which he never might have become had he not been forced by changing conditions to become something besides the village blacksmith.

I saw him at work the other morning on a pair of beautiful andirons.

I asked him what they cost.

"A lot of time," he said.

"Yes, but how much money?"

"Oh, not so much. But the fellow I'm making them for isn't rich so I wouldn't like to charge him too much."

And there was proof that he really had the soul of an artist.

BEE ENTERS CAR, BOY JUMPS OUT!

Grand Rapids.—A bumble bee entering the car of S. C. McAllister as he was returning to Grand Rapids from Blue Water lake resulted in an unusual accident. As the bee came into the car, some of the occupants became alarmed and screamed, frightening Richard, eight year old son of the McAllisters; who opened the door and jumped from the automobile, which was traveling at a rapid rate of speed. He was unconscious when reached by his parents, and was taken immediately to the Itasca hospital for treatment. He suffered a deep cut on the right side of his head and a slight concussion besides being badly bruised and scratched.

SPECIAL FEATURES WILL MARK STATE FAIR SEPT. 5 TO 12

Two special features for the opening Saturday and Sunday of the Minnesota State Fair, September 5 to 12, were approved this week by the board of managers of the exposition.

Approval was given for a repetition of last year's popular "Key Day" on the opening Saturday and arrangements were completed for the staging of the second annual state-wide band tournament in front of the grandstand Sunday afternoon.

Key Day gives patrons a plan for seeing the entire Fair, on the opening Saturday only, by means of a special combination ticket offered at a greatly reduced price. Key Day tickets valued at $1.20 will be sold for 50 cents. They will include an admission to the grounds, admission for an automobile or the Indian Village, admission to the grandstand for the afternoon championship auto races and two admissions for riding devices in the Royal American Shows on the Midway. Key Day tickets will be on sale prior to the Fair and at the outside gates until 3 p. m. the opening Saturday.

Plans have been completed for the second annual band tournament which is being sponsored to foster living music. Awards for the winners will total $2,000. Judging will take place in front of the grandstand on Sunday afternoon, September 6, and bands will be scored on a basis of music, uniforms and marching ability. In addition to the cash award the championship band will be presented with a trophy with individual medals for each member.

First entry in this year's tournament is the Little Falls City band, which won the championship in 1936. The public will be admitted to the grandstand for the event without charge.

ICKES ENDORSES RED LAKE RIVER WATER PROJECT

A $10,000,000 water conservation program in the valley of the Red river of the North, submitted to President Roosevelt by the planning boards of Minnesota and North and South Dakota, was made public Thursday by Secretary of the Interior Harold L. Ickes in Washington.

The proposal called for construction of small dams, restoration of lake levels, improvement of channels, flood control, reduction of stream pollution and improvement of farm and city water supplies.

Ickes described the program as the "first proposal of a practical nature for the execution of a water resource plan as a major corrective for serious drouth conditions." It was worked out by a tri-state committee in co-operation with technicians of the national resources committee, of which Ickes is chairman.

Ickes said the states "had indicated a willingness" to help pay for the work and were setting up an organization to operate and maintain "existing and contemplated works under a unified plan of water management."

The tri-state committee recommended starting immediately on a group of projects including channel improvement and control works on Red Lake river, $437,200.

GARDEN HOSE PERFORMS A "HOUDINI" IN YARD

St. Cloud.—A garden hose that went for a little trip all by itself in the back yard of the Roy Gerlach home in St. Cloud caused quite a little commotion. Mrs. Gerlach left the hose running near the base of a plum tree and paid no more attention to it until she noticed that the nozzle had disappeared from sight beneath the ground and a large length of hose had disappeared with it. She tugged and strained, but her efforts, as well as those of her husband and a large group of neighbors, was in vain. An uncanny force seemed to be pulling it down. They finally gave up and cut the hose off near the ground, losing the nozzle and a goodly length of hose. Whether or not some youngster came along and started the hose is not known, but once down the hose kept right on going of its own accord.

TURKEY EGG THROWN AWAY HATCHES IN SUN

Moose Lake. — Anyone who doubts the heat of the past few weeks should interview Holvor Ellevseth, farmer near Moose Lake, where it was so warm that a turkey egg he had thrown away hatched out in the sun. In cleaning up around the barn Ellevseth tossed what apparently was a well-worn turkey egg onto the manure pile, and much to his surprise, it hatched a perfect baby turkey. He took the youngster into the house, where it was tended with the greatest of care. Ellevseth was reported as saying: "I expect to get around $4 for that bird about next Thanksgiving time."

Representative Marius Waldal of Plummer, was in the village this afternoon for a brief visit with friends.

EDITORS SEEKING FIRE STORY FIND TWO MORE

Staples.—The newspaper staff of the Staples World has at times been accused of making news, when times were dull, but it had no intention of having a fire story back-fire on them recently. "Doc" Sims and Ralph Bachman drove out to the Pete Card's farm to gain first hand information on a fire. While Bachman was interviewing Mrs. Card, "Doc's" car caught fire under the hood. It was quickly extinguished with a pail of water, but Doc had hardly turned the car around and started back to Staples when it blazed again. Both newspapermen broke all records in getting out of the car. Several pails of sand smothered the blaze and the car was towed back to the city. But the editors who had started out to report one fire found they had two more on the list.

TO DEDICATE 1st CO-OP RURAL ELECTRIC LINE

Dedication of Minnesota's first co-operative rural electric line will be made at Litchfield, Meeker county, on Aug. 7, with Morris L. Cooke, national REA administrator, and E. A. O'Neal, president of the American Farm Bureau, taking part in the ceremonies. The Meeker county co-operative, organized by the Meeker County Farm Bureau, was the first in Minnesota to receive REA approval and a loan from Washington. Many other county setups, organized through the activities of County Farm Bureaus, are near the final stage of organization, says J. S. Jones, secretary of the Minnesota Farm Bureau Federation.

Says . . .

Considering how fine this railroad transportation is nowadays, you can't travel any cheaper. Fares lowest in history—substantial savings on round trip tickets. So why not take the train? It's safer. It's more dependable.

•

You can't beat the improved travel comfort in coaches and sleeping cars. It's a good thing movies don't have such restful seats — most folks would sure fall asleep.

•

Ever hear about the new Free pick-up-and-delivery of less than carload freight? It's a great convenience to shippers and receivers alike. Western railroads pick up at the door, ship by fast freight, and deliver to door at no extra charge.

•

Railroad trains are running on faster schedules these days. Seems like the iron horse wants to show these new streamlined diesels that he can step out, too. Both passenger and freight schedules have been speeded up.

•

What's more, the railroads believe in "safety first." Last year not one passenger was killed in a train accident on western railroads.

•

Talk to your local railroad agent. He's full of information about traveling and shipping.

•

We are proud of railroad achievements, appreciate the public's good will and increased patronage, and pledge continued progress.

HALL PLANS ARE DISCUSSED HERE

About sixty citizens attended the mass meeting held Wednesday evening at the local hall to hear district WPA officials explain the method whereby St. Hilaire can secure a new community hall building under the present WPA program. Mr. Korwick, district supervisor from Detroit Lakes, accompanied by assistants from his office as well as the district engineer, Mr. Webb of Crookston were present to answer questions concerning the proposed project. These gentlemen gave a good explanation of what steps would be necessary to start such a project, and what conditions must be met by the village in order to secure government participation. Whatever may be further done rests entirely with the people of the village.

OWATONNA GIRL TO TEACH PRIMARY

At a special meeting of the school board held Tuesday evening, the board elected Miss Henretta Bonhoff of Owatonna, Minn., as primary teacher for the coming school term to succeed Miss Dorothy Gunstad who resigned to accept a position in the school at Middle River. At the same meeting, the board purchased five typewriters for use in the commercial department the coming year.

Friends here have received word that Miss Edith Dahl, who is now staying at the home of her brother at Boise, Idaho, is convalescing after having undergone an operation recently.

TURKISH REPRESENTATIVE INSPECTS PAVING WORK

Detroit Lakes.—Seeking to learn the most modern methods of road construction, a representative of the Turkish government—Mr. Zeki by name—inspected the paving operations on highway No. 59 at Callaway near Detroit Lakes last week. A student of engineering at the University of Minnesota, the visitor explained that the Turkish government has $40,000,000 to spend on road improvements and is anxious that the money be spent to the best advantage. Zeki remarked that while attending school in this country he was considered as being in the service of Turkey. After four or five years in the United States he will go back to his native land with seniority rights in government employment proportionate to the number of years he has spent in college here.

PAY FINAL DIVIDEND

Following sale of remaining assets some weeks ago of the defunct Merchants State Bank, depositors this week received checks in payment of a final dividend of 4.73 per cent. Six dividends have been paid to depositors totaling 49.73 per cent. The final payment amounts in all to between four and five thousands of dollars which will be welcome to the depositors at this time.

FARM BUREAU TO PICNIC IN SMILEY

The annual Farm Bureau and 4-H Club picnic will be held next Sunday, Aug. 9, at the Smiley Club grounds northeast of here. A good program has been arranged. Mr. Frank White, President of the Minnesota Farm Bureau will be the speaker and will have a message of interest to all farmers. Other features on the program will be band music by the St. Hilaire 4-H Club Band, selections by a vocal trio, races, kittenball and horseshoe pitching. Everyone interested in Bureau activities is cordially invited to bring a lunch and come to the meeting. Free coffee will be served.

CARNIVAL COMPANY IS COMING MONDAY

Ray's Amusement Company, a traveling carnival troupe, featuring shows, rides and various kinds of concessions, has arranged to show in St. Hilaire three days starting next Monday, August 10th. The show will operate each of the three evenings. The advance agent for the show states every part of the carnival is clean and wholesome, and invites everyone in the community to see it.

The Luther League of the Norwegian Lutheran church will meet at the Gigstad home in St. Hilaire on Friday evening, August 7 at 8:30. Mr. Chester Myrom of Thief River Falls will speak. A good program assured.

Mesdames H. Winter, C. Pearson, K. Kolstad, J. Gunstad and S. Rosette entertain, and lunch is ten cents. Members should all try to be present as expenditure of funds is to be voted upon. Mrs. Ed. Vik, Pres.

Regular practice of the band will be held Friday evening at 8:00 at the school house. It is important that all members be present.

Used Cars for Sale

This week we have special values to offer in used cars. Among those on hand are a 1933 Chevrolet sport coupe; 2 1929 Ford coaches; a 1929 Whippet sedan, and a 1925 Model T Ford coupe. Also light and heavy trailers.

Tales About Town

Happenings of the Week, Told in Brief. News Concerning People You Know

Meeting of the local Red Cross was held Tuesday at the E. D. Jensen home.

Miss Gladys Maland of Thief River spent Wednesday here at the home of her sister, Mrs. M. H. Jackson.

Mr. and Mrs. E. D. Jensen and son, Garmo, accompanied by Evelyn Gigstad motored Sunday to Argyle and spent the day at the Skatrud home.

Marlyn Hauge came last week from Bagley to visit at the M. H. Jackson and Otto Johnson homes and with other relatives in this community.

Mr. and Mrs. Mauritz Brink and daughter of Gladstone, Mich., arrived here recently for a visit with relatives here and with friends at Thief River Falls.

Miss Valarie Olsen, who is a patient at University Hospital at Minneapolis, is showing some improvement which will be pleasing news to her many friends.

Mr. and Mrs. L. F. Olson motored Tuesday to Grand Forks for a brief visit at the Boltman home. Mr. Olson returned that day, but Mrs. Olson remained to spend a few days.

Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Roy of Huron, S. O., came Monday to spend a few days at the home of his mother, Mrs. J. S. Roy, and with other relatives in the community.

Harold and Marris Calsness came Monday from Duluth for a visit at the home of their grandmother, Mrs. Mary Sherva and with other relatives at Hazel. They expect to be here about two weeks.

Mr. and Mrs. E. N. Reiersgord and son, Tommy, motored up Saturday evening from their home at Fosston to hear the band concert and spend the evening with friends. They also were here Sunday afternoon to see the ball game and returned home that evening.

Many threshing machines have gone into the fields this week and threshing is now general all thru the community. Reports from different machines indicate wheat will yield the best of all crops. Barley and oats are generally light altho there are some very good fields of both.

Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Porter, formerly of this village, and who have resided for several years past at Las Vegas, Nev., made a trip back to Minnesota last week. Thep spent a few days at Bemidji but were unable to arrange their schedule to come up here. Mr. Porter sent greetings thru the Spectator to all old friends in this locality.

Meeting of the local Home Management Project was held Tuesday.

A large crowd attended the ice cream social given Saturday night by the band following the band concert.

H. W. Peterson and son, Martin, were here Monday evening from Warren on a combined business and pleasure trip.

Buddy Hauge left Saturday morning for his home at Bagley after having spent a month here with his uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. Otto Johnson.

Bill Bothman is reported to have suffered painful burns as the result of an explosion of some gas he was handling at his place northeast of here.

After spending a few days with relatives and friends here and at Warren, Oscar Kolstad left Sunday for Duluth where he has employment on the docks.

Mesdames R. Landman, G. Lindquist and S. Rosette will entertain the Norwegian Lutheran Ladies' Aid at the church parlors at the usual hours on Friday, August 14th.

Anton Peterson returned Saturday to his home in Wyandotte after receiving medical treatment for several weeks at Rochester. He is feeling much improved, and will be about as usual in a short time.

Mr. and Mrs. Ray Young and family moved last week to Red Lake Falls to make their future home. During their years of residence in St. Hilaire, Mr. and Mrs. Young have made many friends who regret to see them leave, but all join in wishing them happiness and success in their new home.

Mr. and Mrs. C. T. Swanson, Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Swanson, Mr. and Mrs. Enoch Swanson, Mr. and Mrs. George Swanson, Mrs. Richard Swanson and children, all of this community, and Mr. and Mrs. F. C. Boltman and daughter of Grand Forks were dinner guests last Sunday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Lester F. Olson.

The band is making plans for a trip to the State Fair next year so it is necessary to start putting away funds for that purpose to make the trip possible. We have the band, we have the bus, and we have the ambition to raise the fund. The band will play at the Farm Bureau Picnic in Smiley next Sunday.

BUY NEW EQUIPMENT

Sponsored by the local Parent-Teachers Association which set aside funds for that purpose, some new playground equipment will be installed at the local school ground this summer to be in readiness for opening of school Sept. 14. Aside from a slide put in a few years ago, there has been little or no play equipment at the school, and this new installation will fill a long-felt need.

LARGE CROWDS AT PENNINGTON FAIR

The Pennington County Fair closed Friday evening after a very successful four day run. Good attendance and ideal weather conditions prevailed all four days of the fair. The acts in front of the grand stand this season were the best in years and many very complimentary comments have been heard concerning them. While attendance may have been a little less than a year ago, the number of paid admissions were near the record mark.

FIVE STATE FAIR TRIPS AWARDED HERE LAST WEEK

Five free trips to the Minnesota state fair in September were awarded to 4-H club members who exhibited poultry and livestock at the Pennington county fair last week, County Agent R. M. Douglass announced today.

Those awarded trips included Donald Johnson of Hazel, River Falls club, poultry; Glenn Haugen of Hazel, River Falls club, purebred beef heifer; Raymond Oen of Thief River Falls, Rocksbury club, purebred Holstein heifer in the dairy class; Myrtle Femrite of Goodridge, Highlanding club, grade Holstein heifer in the dairy class; and Elmer Nelson of Goodridge, Mavie club, purebred ewe lamb.

A total of 258 entries were made in the 4-H department at the fair, Mr. Douglass said.

Venomous Snakes

Poisonous snakes are fully venomous practically from the time they leave the egg.

LOCALS PLAY AT PLUMMER SUNDAY

Due to a change in schedule earlier in the season whereby Plummer played here instead of there, the local ball team will go to Plummer next Sunday afternoon for their return game with that team. Altho Plummer dropped its first league schedule game to St. Hilaire, and also lost a non-schedule game on July Fourth, both games were lost by small scores. Since that time, the Plummer team had been greatly strengthened so the contest next Sunday should be a worthwhile one for ball fans. A large aggregation of rooters plan to go with the team from here Sunday.

LARGE CROWD SEES ST. HILAIRE LOSE

Before the largest crowd that had witnessed a ball game on local ground in years, Thief River Falls annexed its second victory over the local team here last Sunday afternoon by a score of 6 to 4. First part of the game was highly interesting as brilliant playing was done by both teams. Hallamack on the mound for St. Hilaire, pitched superb ball, and the locals should easily have taken the game but for a number of unfortunate errors on the part of his team mates. Thief River Falls now heads the league with a two win margin. Should they lose two games in the remainder of their schedule, and St. Hilaire win its remaining games, there is a possibility the two teams will meet again in a play-off game at the end of the season.

Miss Lilly Johnson returned home Sunday after having attended summer sessions at the University of Washington. She also visited with friends in the coast cities before coming home.

To Lure Farm Vote

Washington.—There seems to be little doubt any longer that President Roosevelt is getting ready to spring a new surprise among his many surprises and that he will employ it to wean away as much of the farm vote from Governor Landon of Kansas as is possible. The President usually has a card up his sleeve, one that he can pull out with a flourish and one that, on the surface at least, carries very convincing prospects in the particular line he has chosen.

In this instance, it seems rather well established that you may expect the President to come forward shortly with a brand new proposition for greater co-operative effort between the farmers and the city consumers. He is likely to present this new proposition—some of his critics have been unkind enough to describe it as a new rabbit from the hat—in a dressing that will be quite alluring. It is not clear yet just when the new plan will be offered by the President and his New Deal associates, but the guess can be made that it will come in time to permit a full exposition of the program by the New Dealers in advance of election. By the same token, it is apparent that the President's 1936 promises for the farmers will be disclosed late enough so that the Republicans will have little time to pick it to pieces.

The tip-off on the fact that Mr. Roosevelt is developing another farm program comes in Mr. Secretary Wallace's latest book "Whose Constitution." Of course, the secretary's observations may not be charged directly to the President. Nevertheless, it is the opinion of many of us who have watched the New Deal wheels go around that the secretary of agriculture usually leads the procession in offering new suggestions for New Deal activities.

Secretary Wallace is a candid man and his frankness continuously has been of an engaging sort. For the reason that he is of this type, I think it can be said usually that his views reflect what is going on beneath the surface. That is, his views ordinarily serve as a trial balloon, whether the secretary realizes it or not, and if they are watched closely, an accurate forecast of what is coming may be made.

It might have been that the secretary's book would have escaped attention as a vehicle carrying a message from the inner circle of New Dealers except for one line that was tucked away in the Democratic platform, or the platform adopted by the Philadelphia convention.

The sentence in the platform with which the secretary's book may properly be connected reads: "We will act to secure to the consumer fair value, honest sales and a decreasing spread between the price he pays and the price the producer receives."

Some observers here have linked that proposition with a thought that Mr. Roosevelt proposes to organize not only co-operatives among the farmers but to link those co-operatives with similar co-operatives among the consumers. The conviction held by these individuals is that Mr. Roosevelt, astute politician that he is, is seeking to kill two birds with one stone. In other words, they contend that his plan will be thrown out as an inducement for the farmers to support his policies and re-elect him and that when he deals with the voters in great industrial areas he will point out to them the possibility of cheaper food in this manner.

It is to be remembered in connection with the reported new farm program that Mr. Roosevelt has sent a commission to Europe to study the co-operative idea. There has been no fanfare, no blare of trumpets about the departure of these men, each being an avowed New Dealer and each one being thoroughly dependable. That is, they are men who can be depended upon to present the facts they gather in true New Deal light. They have been in Europe now about a month. It is expected they will remain at least one month longer. If, then, they take a month to write that we can expect another New Deal farm program, based upon the co-operative idea, to emerge from the White House around October 1. It is just 30 days from that date to the election.

Campaign Issues

We now have had acceptance speeches by both Mr. Roosevelt and Governor Landon, his opponent. To the extent that the keynote speeches of the national conventions indicate the trend of mind of the party workers and to the extent that the acceptance speeches tell in a way the deeply rooted views of the candidates, the issues of the campaign are drawn.

Of course, it has frequently been the case that the issues of July are not the issues that decide the election in November. There are those students of politics who are saying this year that the questions discussed by President Roosevelt and Governor Landon in their acceptance speeches are going to have very little to do with the decision of the voters three months hence.

I can report only on a consensus among political authorities on this point. That consensus seems to be that Mr. Landon is going to stick to discussion of the major problems as he sees them and that Mr. Roosevelt's strategy will be governed entirely by whatever changes take place in campaign conditions.

In other words, these writers in Washington who have gone through many a harried political battle, seem to feel that Mr. Roosevelt's campaign strategy is going to be exactly like the policies he has followed in his present administration. By that I mean, to quote the President's own words, that "If one thing fails, we will try something else."

There is the conviction among these same writers that Governor Landon will resort to no oratorical flourishes nor will he employ any of the tactics that Mr. Roosevelt has so often used in his fireside radio chats. Further, it is quite evident, I believe, that Governor Landon will make the burden of his plea to the American people an appeal to restore what he considers to be the American form of government. It was quite obvious from his acceptance speech, as it has been evident in some of his pre-campaign pronouncements, that he favors the common sense idea in government management and that he will permit nothing to swerve him from that course.

But it should be said, it seems to me, that if Governor Landon is able to maintain that plane throughout his campaign, he will be deserving of great commendation. There are many observers here who believe he has undertaken a task of the most difficult kind. The governor has built up or others have built up around him an atmosphere of simplicity. It has reached a high pitch. The question is—can he keep the campaign attuned to that pitch from now until November? If he does, he will surprise a great many observers.

* * *

Farley Irked

Lately, I have heard through underground channels that Democratic Chairman Farley is getting a little irked at the methods employed by the youthful John Hamilton, who is chairman of the Republicans. "Big Jim" has taken a leave of absence as postmaster general, you will remember, in order to devote his time to re-electing President Roosevelt. He is now in a position to battle and, judging by his record, he can be expected to carry on a vigorous fight. That makes it all the more surprising to know that "Big Jim" has grown a little bit peevish as a result of the nudging and the razing that the red-headed Republican chairman has been handing him.

Six weeks elapsed between the nomination of Governor Landon and the date of his formal notification. During this time, Mr. Hamilton alone had to carry the Republican ball. He made numerous speeches and minced no words in any of them. He struck out straight from the shoulder at Mr. Farley.

During that time, Mr. Hamilton really had no one firing back at him. It was exactly the same condition as obtained before the Republicans had selected a candidate and Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Farley had no one to fight back at them. The test for Mr. Hamilton, therefore, will come when Mr. Farley gets into action and the Democratic campaign is fully under way. He is young in national politics and some of the success of the Republican campaign is going to depend upon how Mr. Hamilton conducts himself, when Mr. Farley starts jibing and knocking down the Republican chairman's ears in the heat of battle.

There is another phase of the campaign that is going to be interesting to watch. For three years, Mr. Roosevelt has had open channels on the radio, has had the utmost freedom in picking his spots for delivering new pronouncements or his appeals for patience by the people. But that time has passed insofar as the President is concerned. He is now confronted with competition. What I am trying to say is that everywhere and every time the President speaks, he will speak with the knowledge that a fighting opposition is ready to leap on every word and every proposal that he makes. This is an entirely different circumstance than any Mr. Roosevelt has faced since he entered the White House March 4, 1933.

MINNESOTA NEWS

Lengby—Frank Pelzel, mayor of Fosston and a member of the county safety committee saved the life of Miss Nelson at Spring Lake. Fully clothed, he dived into the lake after the girl sank, and brought her to the shore.

Minneapolis—A total of 15,610 modernization credit loans totaling $6,435,259 have been reported in Minnesota by lending institutions under the FHA since the program started Aug. 1 1934, Fred Schilplin, state FHA director, reported.

Minneapolis—Net earnings of General Mills, Inc., for the year ending May 31, 1936, totaled $3,602,193, or $3.40 per share on the outstanding comomn stock, after provision for perferred stock dividends, the eighth annual report of the milling company disclosed.

Fairmont—Farmer Mark Peck, living six miles east of here, had read and heard a lot about the so-called great 1936 drouth. Until now he had taken some stock in the reports. But when he harvested and threshed his 22-acre oats field, he got a shock. Peck's oats yielded 72½ bushels to the acre, he reported.

Litchfield—Pheasants will be plentiful in central western counties of the state this fall Frank Blair, state superintendent of game propagation, reported. Increase in the number, now said to be the greatest in history, is due to improved winter feeding methods, Blair said. Hatching has been satisfactory, despite hot weather, he added.

Duluth—A back-to-nature short course in Itasca park will be held by the University of Minnesota, Aug. 3 to Sept. 5. Living specimens of fish and animals will be studied in their natural habitat. Courses are offered in botany, entomology, economic zoology, forestry and plant pathology. Alexander A. Granovsky, associate professor, will be in charge.

St. Paul—There is no doubt of the right of individuals to file by petition for the short term for the United States senate Attorney General Harry H. Peterson informed Secretary of State Mike Holm. Holm asked for a ruling to settle any doubt about it. The only candidate on the ballot is Guy V. Howard of Minneapolis, but others are expected. Time limit for filing is October 2.

Duluth—Julius Schmahl, state treasurer, is seriously ill, confined to a summer cottage near Lutson, Minn., on the north shore of Lake Superior. With Mrs. Schmahl, he has been vacationing at the Grand View resort since July 17, he was stricken ill and his condition is termed serious. He is suffering from a severe cold and there is danger of pneumonia setting in, it was reported.

Minneapolis—The campaign to place the seven eligible Gophers on the All-Star team which plays the Detroit Lions in Chicago Sept. 1, was a success with all seven nominated. Three members of the Gopher squad will be in the starting lineup. They are Dick Smith, Vern Oech and Sheldon Beise. Everyone should work twice as hard now to place Bernie Bierman as coach of the All-Stars.

Minneapolis—Two thousand Minnesota men will be thrown out of work soon, United States Senator Elmer A. Benson charged as protests came from all parts of the state following refusal of funds by Washington officials for WPA projects. All projects, numbering about a hundred, were refused federal funds when Secretary Ickes announced a shortage of sk" labor in the state. State officials say it isn't so.

St. Paul—Renewal of the fight to prevent sales tax legislation in Minnesota was undertaken here by representatives of merchant associations of the state. Stressing that such a tax would work hardship on merchant and consumer alike, that its principle is false in that it taxes that least able to pay and that it has been found faulty of operation elsewhere, the representatives formed the Consumers and Merchants Anti-Sales Tax league.

Minneapolis—Season tickets for the football games at the University will be raised from $9.90 to $11.50 this year on account of federal taxes. Single tickets will also be higher. Michigan, Purdue and Iowa tickets will jump from $2.20 to $2.50 and Nebraska and Texas tickets from $2.20 to $2.25. There will be $1.10 seats at the later two games. Minnesota still charges less for tickets than other conference schools.

St. Paul—As scattered showers brought slight relief to some sections of western South Dakota, the federal government designated 16 additional Minnesota counties as in need of drouth relief. Counties named, bringing to 25 the total number adjudged by Washington officials as facing an emergency are: Anoka, Becker, Clay, Isanti, Kanabec, Kittson, Lyon, Marshall, Mille Lacs, Morrison, Norman, Otter Tail, Sherburne, Stearns, Todd and Wadena.

St. Paul—Leavenworth prison gates clanged shut behind Alvin Karpis and Charles Fitzgerald. Old Creepy Karpis, 27-year-old co-leader of one of the most desperate bands of criminals this country has ever known, and Old Chuck, his elderly henchman, found the end of their violence-studed trail behind prison bars. They were manacled together as when they left St. Paul's Ramsey county jail. Federal operatives, taking no cances on a liberation attempt, guarded stratetic points as their train pulled into the Leavenworth station.

Eyes Around the World

The films of travel, which carry the vision around the world and back again have vastly broadened the horizons of millions of people, and in that respect have proved to be of high value.

The opportunities of most people for seeing the world are very limited.

The average person in small towns and country places has a very dim idea of the length and breadth of the world, or of the people who live in places remote from him.

Today almost every boy and girl can tell you of the Taj Mahal, or of the Desert of Sahara, or the peaks of the Andes, or of life in remote cities like London, Paris and Constantinople.

* * *

Mr. Shakespeare informs us that "home-keeping youth have ever homely wits."

But "homely wits" hardly exist when practically all the people of all the civilized countries of the world can, by paying a small price for a seat in a cinema theater look "'round the world and back again."

The camera man has completely replaced the men who used to go forth and view the world and bring home pictures of it to be thrown on a still screen.

From your seat in a theater you can view the Eskimo catching a seal which will provide him with his supper and an overcoat, with a good clear glance at the peaks of the Alps or the Andes, or at "Elephants a pilin' teak" in Burmah.

* * *

Minds feed on what the eyes see.

Wherever there is anything worth seeing the camera goes.

Loving their work, and eager to bring home pictures of all the known world, these daredevils of the films are never daunted by obstacles, or by dangers.

To me it has always been astonishing that every school room in every city and village and town has not long ago been provided with cameras and screens to aid the children in their work.

Not only would they vastly broaden the view of many sections of the world, but they could, I should think, be tremendously useful in teaching such subjects as biology and zoology.

An intelligent teacher provided with a moving picture projector and a stock of films would never lack the earnest attention of her pupils.

Even pictures which only incidentally show the streets of foreign cities would be valuable. What they would do if wisely used would prove a marvel.

Unavailing Remorse

WE NEED to be careful how we deal with those about us, for Death carries with it to some small circle of survivors thoughts of so many things forgotten, and so many more which might have been repaired. Such recollections are among the bitterest we can have. There is no remorse so deep as that which is unavailing; if we would be spared its pains, let us remember in time.—Dickens.

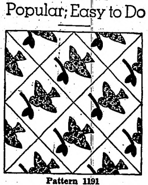
Quilt of Applique Is Popular; Easy to Do



Pattern 1191

You can have good luck tokens 'round you year in, year out, if you make this Bluebird quilt, and such a simple one it is too, in easy applique, with each bird all in one patch. You may make the birds uniform in color, or vary them by using up colorful scraps. Thus using but three materials.

Pattern 1191 comes to you with complete, simple instructions for cutting, sewing and finishing, together with yardage chart, diagram of quilt to help arrange the blocks for single and double bed size, and a diagram of block which serves as a guide for placing the patches and suggests contrasting materials.

Send 15 cents in stamps or coins (coins preferred) for this pattern to The Sewing Circle Needlecraft Department, 82 Eighth Ave., New York, N. Y.

Write plainly pattern number, your name and address.

Season's Beauties

Nature gives to every time and season some beauties of its own; and from morning to night, as from the cradle to the grave, is but a succession of changes so gentle and easy that we can scarcely mark their progress.—Dickens.

FOLLOW the lead of big tire users who buy only on proof of performance.

Last year Greyhound buses traveled 138,000,000 miles from Coast to Coast and from Canada to the Gulf across deserts and over winding mountain roads.

They have won the National Safety Council's highest award in inter-city bus operation for the past four years. This is indeed a tribute to careful driving, efficient equipment and the reserve safety of Firestone Tires made possible by the Firestone Patented Process of Gum-Dipping which prevents internal friction and heat.

Firestone Gum-Dipped Tires run up to 28° cooler and give greatest blowout protection—the scientifically designed non-skid tread will stop your car up to 25% quicker and give you 50% longer non-skid mileage.

Take no chances! Buy your tires on proof of performance. See your nearby Firestone Auto Supply and Service Store or Firestone Dealer and equip your car today with Firestone Gum-Dipped Tires, the Masterpiece of Tire Construction!

Frank Knox Notified of Republican Vice Presidential Nomination—Spanish Rebels Winning Victories—Third PWA Building Program.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.

FACING an enthusiastic crowd that completely filled the big Chicago stadium, Col. Frank Knox received from Senator Steiwer of Oregon the official notification of his nomination for the vice presidency by the Republican party. National Chairman John Hamilton introduced the senator, who spoke briefly but forcefully and with his customary eloquence. As Colonel Knox stepped forward to deliver his speech of acceptance he was greeted by a roar of applause that continued for many minutes. His fellow citizens were glad to express their gratification for the honor done him, and the thousands from outside Chicago were no less warm in their appreciation of the candidate. In the streets surrounding the stadium was another vast throng of people who, unable to get into the building, listened to the proceedings as broadcast by a loud-speaker system.

Colonel Knox

Unlike Governor Landon, Colonel Knox devoted much of his address to the alleged failures of the Roosevelt administration which, he said, had the most glorious opportunity in the history of the nation but ignored its responsibility, failed in its job and defaulted in its obligations.

"From the day that it took office," he declared, "it embarked on a series of hysterical experiments on the economic life of a burdened people. At a time when universal co-operation was a necessity it initiated a campaign of abuse and vilification of business men. At a time when the credit of the country should have been strengthened it inaugurated a policy of credit adulteration and currency experiment that demoralized foreign trade and frightened domestic finance. It set up a system of regimentation of industry that reduced production and prevented re-employment. By coercion of congress it forced the passage of reform measures so recklessly drawn that they hamstrung the revival of enterprise and paralyzed the renewal of investment. It installed a regimentation of agriculture that destroyed food and reduced foreign markets and increased the cost of living and multiplied the expense of relief.

"At a time when private industry was struggling desperately for a new start it set up governmental enterprise to compete with private business. At a time when the burden of taxation was already hard to bear it embarked on a policy of squandering public funds and increasing the weight of taxes. At a time when united effort and mutual good-will would have completed recovery it promoted sectional hatred and class strife. At a time when returning business confidence was ending depression it began a campaign to terrorize business and subjugate the banks. At a time when confidence in the character of government was vital it established a spoils system. At a time when the economic system was worn and emaciated it performed major surgical operations upon the industrial body to see what was inside. It adopted an economic philosophy of scarcity and forced it upon a hungry and distressed people. . . .

"No one can define the New Deal or even describe it. But we know what it means. It means federal control over local business, over local bank credit, over local wages, over local conditions of work. It leads to federal regimentation of the labor, the business, and the home of every American citizen. It leads to price-fixing and production control by federal authority. It leads inevitably to the extinction of the small business man, to the end of free enterprise in America."

Before the ceremonies started there were four big parades, converging at the stadium; and elaborate musical programs were provided both inside and outside the building.

THE WEEKLY crop report and weather summary of the Department of Agriculture revealed that the drouth and high temperature were playing havoc with the corn crop in most of the leading producing states. In some sections there will not even be fodder and over a much larger area no grain will be obtained this year. There were good rains, however, in parts of the central and eastern areas and improvement was noted there in both corn and pasturage.

The present drouth in Iowa, the department said, has caused greater damage to corn than that of 1934. The summary reported almost complete destruction of the crop in two southern and two western tiers of counties, with serious damage in some other sections.

Threshing of winter wheat revealed expected yields, the report said, but spring wheat conditions were termed disappointing.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT ended his 437 mile cruise when his yacht docked at Campobello island, New Brunswick, where he has a summer home. He shaved off the sidewhiskers he had grown to surprise his wife and mother and went ashore for a picnic and a reception with members of his family and friends in the summer colony of the island. Canadian Royal Mounted police joined with the American secret service men in guarding the distinguished visitor.

Mr. Roosevelt remained at Campobello only two days and then took a special train to Quebec, where he visited with Lord Tweedsmuir, governor general of Canada.

GEN. FRANCISCO FRANCO'S rebel forces in Spain, according to late reports, were pressing the government troops seriously and winning some bloody encounters. This despite the claims of Madrid that the Fascists had been checked. The rebel columns advancing on the capital from the south were reported to be threatening communications between Madrid and the eastern seacoast at Valencia and Alicante, chief sources of the government's food supplies. Indeed, it was announced by the insurgent radio station at Seville that the garrison at Valencia had revolted and gone over to the rebels. Leaders of the insurgents claimed they held Huelva, important seaport, and all the territory between Seville and the Portuguese border. The loyalists directed a strong attack on Saragossa but advices from the front reaching Perpignan, France, said their three columns were ambushed by the rebels in a narrow canyon and lost perhaps 2,000 killed. General Caballero commanded the insurgents in that action.

Gen. Franco

General Franco has been quoted as saying the revolution, when successful, will result in a military dictatorship for the time being.

The government, now a red dictatorship, has taken possession of all church property and assumed control of all industry and agriculture. It also has confiscated the merchant marine to form a defense fleet. The loyalists were encouraged by victories in and around San Sebastian.

Claude G. Bowers, American ambassador to Spain, was cut off from communication with the summer quarters of his embassy at San Sebastian for several days, being himself at his summer residence in Fuentarrabia, close to the French border. He finally got in touch with the embassy and removed the staff to his villa. Mr. Bowers also provided safe haven for a number of other foreign diplomats and their families. He said he had ascertained that not a single American had been injured in the civil war. American warships and liners were utilized to evacuate all the Americans in ports where their lives were in danger.

Later Ambassador Bowers and his staff went aboard the cruiser Cayuga, taking with them some of the American refugees.

TWO MEMBERS of the American Olympic boxing squad failed to take warning from the fate of Eleanor Holm Jarrett and broke training rules soon after their arrival in Berlin. Roy Davis, manager of the boxers, advised that they be sent home, and the American Olympic committee so ordered. The two delinquents were Joe J. Church, featherweight, of Batavia, N. Y., and Howell King, welterweight, of Detroit. Their places on the team were filled by Theodore E. Kara and Chester Rutecki, both of Chicago.

EMPHASIS is placed on smaller scale projects to be completed speedily, in the third building program of the public works administration, which was opened by the allotment of $22,742,034 by President Roosevelt. It includes 352 projects in 37 states, and the largest of these is a courthouse for New York city to cost the government $4,835,000. The average allotment is only $64,323.

Secretary Ickes, PWA administrator, said that, in addition to 45 per cent donation, PWA will lend $2,142,000 to help communities defray their 55 per cent share of the cost. President Roosevelt has ordered that all projects "be commenced by October 1, 1936, reach a peak by the end of the year and be completed by October 1, 1937."

Captivating Daytime Frock

This clever dress features a flattering yoke which dips to a point in front and is equipped with twin slashes a few inches below the neckline to accommodate a ribbon bow of any color you wish to use. Most women like several different ones to which they match their accessories. Radiating tucks at the yoke and waist contribute a smooth fit and flattering effect, while center seams in front and back terminate in two kick pleats for reserved fullness where it will do the most good. The pointed pockets with shaped turned over flaps are novel. You'll want to make more than one dress, because the pattern is so easy to follow and the fabrics so numerous to choose from. How about seersucker, novelty cotton, linen, crash or silk.

SISTERS RETIRE AFTER 100 YEARS OF TEACHING

Mankato. —The retirement of two sisters from the Mankato public schools, announced this week with their resignation at Mankato, has brought to an end a century of service to teaching, the combined record of the Kelly triplets. More than half of the 100 years which the three sisters have taught have been spent in Mankato schools by Clara and Catherine Kelly, whose resignations have just been accepted by the board of education. Mrs. Celia Kelly Donahue, third of the triplets, retiring from teaching many years ago. Among the three, Clara Kelly, for many years principal and teacher at the Lincoln school in Mankato for 42 years. Catherine Kelly came to Mankato 15 years ago with the reputation of being one of the best third grade teachers in the state. The two retiring sisters plan to see something of the world while their health is still good.

STRAY DOG KILLS 75 YOUNG TURKEYS

Houston.—A stray black and white dog got into the flock of turkeys at the VerVatt-Maggert turkey farm north of Houston and killed 75 two-month old turkeys. Maggert, who looks after the turkeys, had just left to look after the large flock he had elsewhere on the farm and when he returned he found the dead turkeys and the dog slinkink off in the distance. On the previous night the same dog had visited the farm and Maggert had fired several rounds of buck shot at the animal to scare it away, but after the killing Maggert has equipped himself with a high power rifle and any dog, regardless to whom it may belong, will be killed if it sets foot on the farm.

SEEK TO CHECK BEE DISEASE LOCALLY

The State Department of Agriculture division of Nursery and Apiary is taking active measures to combat spread of American Foul Brood, a disease fatal to bees, which is reaching serious proportions in this state. At present there is no known remedy for the disease and it can only be combated and checked by burning all such diseased colonies and all equipment that has become infected with the Bacteria.

Almer Alsen, Deputy state inspector of apiaries in this part of the state reports existence of foul brood in this locality. He was here a few days ago and outlined the conditions and work that is being done to check the disease. He says the disease is spread by bees robbing infected, weak or dead colonies. The greatest agency for spreading the disease in the past and present is selling of used equipment from infected apiaries, and he warns all bee keepers to avoid buying or selling used equipment unless it is accompanied by a certificate of inspection. It is against the law to sell or exchange any bees or bee equipment without first getting a permit from the State Inspector of Apiaries, A. G. Ruggles, University Farm, St. Paul. Mr. Alsen especially warns all auctioneers not to sell any bees or bee equipment as they will be held responsible for so doing.

Carelessness on part of some apiarists in making disposal of bees and bee equipment after foul brood has been detected in them is causing a spread of the disease to such extent that it threatens the industry in this state. Drastic action is to be taken in this section in the near future, according to Mr. Alsen, to make a cleanup of infected apiaries to prevent further spread of the disease.

LAKE TROUT TO BE PLANTED THIS WEEK

Approximately 200,000 lake trout will be planted in northern lakes this week, according to Dr. Thaddeus Surber, superintendent of propagation of the state division of game and fish.

The lake trout were raised at the St. Paul and Lanesboro hatcheries. Planting of stream trout has been postponed until waters become cooler.

Cholera Halted Convention

Members of the constitutional convention who assembled in Columbus, Ohio, in May of 1850 were forced to adjourn because of an epidemic of cholera which was sweeping over that section of the state.

COMMUNICABLE DISEASES NOW WANING IN STATE

Here's news to gladden the heart of every father and mother in Minnesota! The report of the committee on public health of the state planning board reveals an amazing decrease in the death rate from communicable disease. Diphtheria, typhoid, smallpox and tuberculosis, for instance, show a decline in the Minnesota death rate since 1910 greater than that for the entire United States registration area.

Minnesota deaths from diphtheria have been reduced from 556 in 1910 to 17 in 1935; smallpox, from 207 in 1924 to one last year—and absolute zero for the three years proceding; typhoid, from 688 in 1910 to 17 in 1935; and tuberculosis, which reached its high for the 25-year period with 2,522 deaths in 1911, has shown an almost uninterrupted retreat to the 1935 figure of 935.

Those dramatic records are not accidental the Planning Board report makes clear. They are due largely to alert and active State and local boards of health, public health education in schools and elsewhere, and helpful cooperation on the part of the public.

Here's an insight into how the spread of typhoid has been all but conquered in this state: Sanitation, sewage disposal and hygenic methods have done most to strangle the plague at its source. But cases which do develop are easily transmitted. So Minnesota exercises strict supervision over persons handling ready-to-eat food sold or served to the public. The increased use of pasteurized milk has saved an untold number of lives. Rigid restrictions are imposed upon those proced to be chronic carriers of typhoid bacteria and Minnesota is the first state to grant compensatory aid to give up their work and suffer financial loss.

Vaccines and anti-toxins have aided greatly. In the case of diphtheria, since 1926 Minnesota has provided free distribution of taxin-antitoxin and toxoid to nearly 275,000 persons. Vaccine for typhoid and smallpox are not distributed free by the State but their free distribution and other proved methods of combatting these and other diseases are recommended by the Planning board.

With regard to tuberculosis the report recommends, "a growing appreciation of the value and necessity of quarantine; (and) of the state and county sanitoria; better medical care; the wider use of pasteurized milk and the control of tuberculosis cattle; higher wages, better housing and industrial conditions and better and more abundant diets."

Notice this: If the 1910 death rate for typhoid had been allowed to continue during the 25-year period there would have been 14,521 deaths from this disease; actually there were 2,779. Last year there would have been 688 deaths from typhoid; actually there were 17.

NEBRASKA MAN EARNS 'HONEST MAN' CROWN

Elbow Lake.—The Gust Hansons of Elbow Lake are ready to unofficially place the crown of "The Most Honest Man" on the head of Frank Prokep of Spencer, Neb., and Diogenes can blow out his lantern and take a rest. It all came about like this: Back in February, 1914, 22 years ago, Prokop unknowingly made an error in figuring the amount he should pay for some corn bought from Hanson. The difference amounted to 100 bushels and came about in making an error of one point in a row of figures. Later the mistake was discovered, but the Hanson family had moved to Minnesota and Prokop was unable to locate his debtor. At church gatherings and picnics, the "Most Honest Man" would ask, "Say, do you know what became of the Hansons?" This has kept up for more than 22 years and only recently did Prokop locate the Hanson family through some mutual friends at Briston, Neb. A check for $30, based on corn at 29 cents per bushel in 1914, has been sent in payment of the corn.

Red Lake Falls Liquor Truck Hijackers Given Sentences in St. Paul

Russell Arend of St. Paul and Mathew Stegbauer, Minneapolis, were sentenced Tuesday of last week for their participation in the hi-jacking March 30 of the Red Lake Falls liquor truck and the kidnaping of the drivers, Felix Barrette and Fred Farrington, says the Red Lake Falls Gazette.

They pleaded guilty under the Lindbergh law in taking their victims across the state line into North Dakota. Arend, the ring leader of the gang, was sentenced to five years in Leavenworth prison by Federal Judge Joyce in St. Paul. Stegbauer, for whom the judge said, "there was hope redemption," drew three years in the federal reformatory at El Reno, Oklahoma.

Leonard Parish and Bernard Martineau of St. Paul, also charged with complicity in the same crime were given two years sentences.

Mr. and Mrs. Emil Person, Deloris, Evelyn, Myrtle and Arleen visited at the home of the latter's mother, Mrs. Swan Johnson.

Mr. and Mrs. J. V. Patton visited Thursday evening at the home of G. Lindquist.

Miss Gladys Anderson is visiting at Thief River Falls at the home of her uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Lorentson.

Raymond and Merriam Anderson, Alvin Dahlstrom, Evelyn and Ivanette Thyren were Sunday visitors at Roseau.

PLAYFUL KITTEN STARTS SERIES OF ACCIDENTS

Plainview.— Two children playing with a kitten started a series of mishaps that were rather painful and expensive to the family of Mr. and Mrs. Fay Martin of Plainview. The children of the family were playing with the kitten when it scrampered into a pen where a bull was kept. The boy leaned through the bars of the pen to try to catch the kitten. The bull swung his head at the boy, causing the youngster's head to slide along the bars. A deep gash was cut in his neck and one side of his face bruised. As the youngsters ran for the house, the boy with blood streaming over the front of his garments, the father saw him. He jumped from his wagon and ran to help his son. While giving his attentions to the boy, the team stepped forward to nibble at the leaves of a tree. The standard on the hay rack caught the tree and snapped off. The noise frightened the team and they ran away. The hay rack was smashed, wagon damaged, and all four tugs broken from the harness.

FALLS FROM AUTO AT 50 MILES PER HOUR, UNHURT

Cokato—In a freak accident near Mallory, Carol Jean Wright, three year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Russell Wright Chicago, fell from a car traveling 50 miles per hour without being hurt. The car was being driven by her grandfather, G. H. Anderson of Crookston. She fell onto the pavement and was uninjured with the exception of slight bruises on her arm and head. The child was riding in the car when she pushed the door handle, releasing the catch. The door opened and she fell out into a puddle of water on the pavement. Mr. Anderson stopped the car as soon as he could, but Carol Jean had gotten up and began to run after the car, believing that she was being left. She was taken to a nearby farmhouse where her bruises were treated. The family then continued their trip into North Dakota.

RIVER WORK WINS FEDERAL APPROVAL

President Roosevelt has placed his stamp of approval on the Red Lake river project which has for its object straightening and clearing of the river channel from Highlanding to the Red Lakes to provide a sufficient water supply for Thief River Falls, Red Lake Falls, Crookston, East Grand Forks and Grand Forks which depend on the river for their water supply. The delegation recently sent to Washington have secured assurance of President Roosevelt that immediate action will be taken to remove such obstacles as objection from the Indian Department to lowering the level of the lakes, and restrictions on the type of labor that may be employed on the project so that something can be done this fall toward getting a supply of water for the towns mentioned. In order to conserve the water supply so as not to unduly lower the Red Lakes to detriment of the Indians, it is likely a series of retaining dams will have to be constructed at different points along the river. As St. Hilaire has one of the best and largest basins along the entire river from the lakes to Grand Forks, it is quite probable a dam will be built here. With only a little more than three months remaining until the time when winter normally sets in, it is not expected more than temporary measures will be taken this fall to provide a normal water supply.

Lakefield—Stripped of all clothing with the exception of his hat and shoes, when his clothes were caught in the gears of a machine he was operating, John Nauerth of Lakefield stood as bare as a new born babe, very much to his surprise and that of passersby. Although he suffered a gash on one limb and one side of his body was skinned from his shoulder to his ankle when the machine threw him to the ground, Nauerth was not badly injured, being able to pull away from the machine by sheer force when his clothes were caught. Aside from the slight injuries which were quickly patched up by a physician, the main damage suffered by Nauerth was that of skinfull of pride taken off by the "kidding" of his friends, who accused him of attempting to join a nudist colony.

PICNIC AT MAPLE LAKE

Mrs. M. H. Jackson and daughter, Patricia, accompanied by Mrs. L. F. Olson, Mrs. J. A. Hansen and Mrs. O. Gunstad motored Tuesday to Maple Lake where they were joined by Mrs. E. N. Reiersgord and son Tommy, of Fosston, and their guests, Mrs. Theo. Skatrud and daughter, Rachel, of Argyle and all enjoyed a picnic dinner with Mrs. Anna Patterson and Miss Mabel Patterson at their summer cottage.

CARNIVAL COMPANY GOES TO KARLSTAD

Ray's Amusement Company, which has operated a carnival here the first three days of this week, closed here Wednesday night and moved its equipment to Karlstad. From there the company will go to the Old Mill grounds in Marshall county, and then swings back to the central part of the state. The carnival which is a complete little Midway in itself, is one of the cleanest shows that has been here for many years. Equipped with rides and swings for the youngsters; side shows and concession stands for older people, as well as various other kinds of amusement, the show was well patronized here considering this being the busy threshing season. Mr. Schinkel, owner of the show, allows no rough or questionable features with his outfit which is one reason why the show is always welcome back to any place where it has given a performance.

FARM HOUSE BURNS WEST OF VILLAGE

The farm house on the Maurits Brink farm west of the village, which was occupied by George Baysinger, burned to the ground Wednesday night while Mr. Baysinger was in town. Origin of the fire is a mystery as there had been no fire in the stove for several hours preceding the blaze. Mr. Baysinger lost all his household effects and clothing, and a nephew who came yesterday to visit him, also lost some wearing apparel.

Leo Carpenter received word this week that his niece, Viola Nutt of Wahkon, Minn., had died Saturday at a Minneapolis hospital after an illness of several months. The young woman, who was about twenty years of age, was a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Nutt who formerly resided here some years ago.

Tales About Town

Happenings of the Week, Told in Brief. News Concerning People You Know

Mrs. L. F. Olson is back home after having spent a few days at the home of her sister at Grand Forks.

Ole Loberg came up this week from Willmar to look after matters in connection with his farm northwest of the village.

Mrs. Louis Giese and daughter were here last week-end from west of Euclid for a visit with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. H. O. Jackson.

Rev. and Mrs. M. L. Dahle and daughters left last week to spend a two weeks vacation at their summer cottage on Sauk lake near Sauk Center.

Mr. and Mrs. Verner Nelson and daughter motored down Saturday from Warren for a visit at the home of Mrs. Nelson's father, Mike Fricker.

A fine large size silo is being constructed on the Norman farm south of the village. The new silo, in addition to the new barn erected last year is a good addition to the farm.

Mr. and Mrs. M. A. Graham and baby daughter left Monday to spend a two weeks' vacation visiting with his relatives at Wells, and with Mrs. Graham's people at Bertha, Minn.

Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Johnson of Minneapolis, were here last Thursday for a call on friends. Mr. Johnson, who is employed by a monument concern at Minneapolis, was a former resident of this village.

Rufus Olson, who is stationed at the Great Lakes Naval Training Station, is visiting here with his brother, Lester Olson, while enjoying a ten day furlough. He expects to be transferred soon to active sea duty.

L. E. Healy motored up yesterday from Red Lake Falls to look after matters in connection with his lands west of town. Mr. Healy was recently appointed to wind up affairs of the State Bank of Roosevelt and now makes regular trips up to the border.

Mr. and Mrs. Gust Peterson of Warren visited here last week-end at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Olsen. Upon returning home Sunday they were accompanied by Mrs. Olsen who went to spent a week with them at Warren.

Tom Mogen, old time resident of this community who now makes his home at Hartland, Minn., came up last week to look after threshing operations on his farm west of town. He intends to spend two or three weeks here before returning to Hartland.

A big crowd attended the dance given last Saturday evening at the Bilden & Olsen hall.

Mr. and Mrs. Ray Young and children were up Monday evening from Red Lake Falls for a short call on former neighbors.

Miss Iona Olson, R. N., who has been employed in a hospital at Milwaukee, Wisc., is home to spend a vacation with her mother.

S. Bergland was down Wednesday evening from Thief River Falls for a brief visit at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Margaret Volden.

J. Ralston of Thief River Falls came down last week and re-opened the Winter barber shop which had been closed since departure of Ben Burke.

Honoring Ray Young who recently moved with his family to Red Lake Falls, a farewell party will be given for him by the B. M. Club at the club rooms this evening.

Extensive repairs are being made at the local Barzen elevator. Among other improvements is the addition of a new grain bin of several thousands bushels capacity at the north end of the building.

Monday, September 14 has been set as the date for opening of the local school. Many other Minnesota schools have chosen the same late date so that students who are 4-H Club members may attend the Minnesota State Fair.

Mrs. Axel Jacobson suffered a light stroke last week and has since been confined to bed. Miss Iona Olson, R. N., is in charge at the home. Mrs. Jacobson is showing satisfactory improvement and will likely regain her usual robust health after a rest period. Friends hope her illness will be of short duration.

Harry Jackson of St. Paul, was here Thursday and Friday for a short visit with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. H. O. Jackson and other relatives. Mr. Jackson, who is connected with a hardware specialty manufacturing concern at St. Paul, left Saturday on a trip to the Pacific coast in the interest of his concern.

POSTCARD MAILED AFTER 27 YEARS

Baudette—While looking over an abandoned lumber camp, Bill Strom of Spooner found a postcard dated 1909, which has been mailed from Swift to Cavalier, North Dakota. For 27 years the postcard had lain in the camp, forgotten after its journey had just started. This week the card is arriving at its destination, bringing back memories to the receiver.

GETS NEW POSITION

Ardell Olson, who has been employed as linotype operator at the Journal office at Fertile, discontinued work there last week and came home for a brief visit with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Ordean Olson, before leaving Friday to take a position as compositor with the Osterhus Printing Company at Robbinsdale, Minn.

MANY AT BUREAU PICNIC ON SUNDAY

Many people from this section of the county attended the annual Farm Bureau picnic held last Sunday at the Smiley Hall picnic grounds in Smiley township. Mr. Frank W. White, president of the Minnesota Farm Bureau Federation was the speaker for the occasion. An interesting program of races and various kinds of contests was held, and a general good time was enjoyed by all who attended. The St. Hilaire 4-H Club band furnished instrumental music, and the Norden and Hazel 4-H Club trios rendered some good numbers.

LOCALS PLAY AT RED LAKE SUNDAY

The ball team goes next Sunday to Red Lake Falls to play its return game with the team of that city. While the Red Lake Falls aggregation was defeated by a rather one-sided score here in July, they are reported to have shown much improvement since that time, so a much closer contest is anticipated for next Sunday. A good sized bunch of rooters are arranging to accompany the team to the lower Falls to witness the contest and for a good time which is always shown visitors in that city.

Last Sunday the team played at Plummer and was defeated by a score of 7 to 6. Ragged playing by both teams is reported by those present, and concensus of opinion of fans is that St. Hilaire could easily have taken that game had the team been up to its usual form.

"RAIN MAN" FAILS TO BRING DOWN SHOWERS

OLIVIA—A Weary Willie, posing as a "rain man" stopped off in Olivia long enough last week to test his rain-making abilities. The old gent parked along the railroad tracks west of the village and proceeded to try his chemicals with the greatest of faith. His method added humor to the incident. Red brick was used in the crude construction of a fireplace, where he burned a mixture of kerosene and "chemicals". He stated that he added some tar to the mixture in order to bring a heavier rain. The "rain man" failed, but so have a number of other signs the past few weeks, including an east wind, sun setting behind a cloud, a new moon, and sweating water pipes.

FRANK BOTHMAN SUSTAINS BURNS

Frank Bothman is confined to bed suffering from very severe burns sustained last week when an oil can exploded while he was filling a lighted lantern from the container. The oil saturated one of his trousers which later caught fire as he attempted to extinguish the blaze around the can. He managed to get into a nearby water tank but not before being severely scorched about the limb and one hand. At present he is resting well, but will likely be confined to bed for some weeks. We were misinformed last week when it was stated Bill Bothman had had this misfortune. Frank's many friends hope for his speedy recovery.

FIRES THREATEN NORTHERN AREA

Forest, brush and bog fires have broken out in the district extending from near Roseau east into Lake of the Woods county and east along the border country. Much hay has been burned, and many homes are menaced by the flames. Fire fighters are experiencing much difficulty because of the heavy smoke pall which hangs over the entire district. Because of extreme dryness of foliage and grass it is feared another holocaust similar to the Baudette-Spooner fires of 1910 may occur unless sufficient rain falls soon to help prevent spread of ground fires.

CONCEALS IRON IN BUNDLES DAMAGE THRESHING CREW

Caledonia.—Horseshoes and iron gears don't go through threshing machines handily, and make rather a poor substitute for grain in the wagon, threshers near Caledonia found last week. Two horseshoes hiden in a grain shock were run through the threshing machine on a Wednesday afternoon. The resulting damage was torn rodded teeth out of the cylinder and broken main bearing holders. On the following day, like damage was done in the same manner, total estimation of which amounted to $150. Altogether, 17 horseshoes were found in various shocks and a gear wheel tied to binder twine was discovered in the center of one bundle. The dastardly act was perpetrated on the farm of Alfred Schieber, three miles west of Caledonie. An investigation which followed the finding of the iron concealed in the bundles to cause harm to the threshing crew and the farmer failed to reveal any clues.

There are said to be 17,000,000 telephones in the United States and 15,000,000 in the rest of the world, but both of these may be wrong numbers.—Louisville Times.

An auction sale of horses was held Tuesday afternoon at the local stockyard. The horses were brot in from the drought stricken areas of North Dakota.

Memory of McGraw and Earlier Days Crowds Out Present

WHEN memories stick with you while you should be doing something else, there is only one solution. So you are stuck with them today:

The time when Benny Leonard, who must have weighed 160 pounds, was obtaining publicity for his vaudeville tour by letting it be known that he might soon defend his lightweight title. His very proper indignation when I suggested that my customers might be easier to convince if he would stand on the scales and indicate which leg he was willing to have cut off so that he could reduce to the 135-pound limit.

• • •

There was the year when I was a very young and wise apprentice reporter in Baltimore. Then I thought that all New York sports writers must be phonies. That was because of a firm belief that such names as Damon Runyon, Bozeman Bulger, Hype Igoe could not possibly be real.

• • •

There was the time when I first met John McGraw. A ninth-inning decision had cost the Giants a ball game while they were battling for a pennant late in the season. Naturally I expected to hear numerous inside facts concerning baseball and umpires. Instead he took me in to dinner and devoted two hours to talking about the high cost of steam yachts and the pleasure that might be obtained by owning one. Not once during the evening did he refer to the ball game or the decision that had meant its loss to the Giants.

John McGraw

• • •

The time when, after a very delightful evening with Jim Thorpe, I shook hands with him at 5 A. M. and solemnly promised that his football career would be crowned by an opportunity to play against Bradley in the professional contest that afternoon. The memory that Jim, although already somewhat old and rather fat, played a swell game. I forget the rest.

• • •

The baseball club which was somewhat annoyed at the way a star was conducting his spring training. The daily search that was made of his room while he was at the ball park and the private detective who trailed him until he went to the room at nights. The wondering as to why the star always appeared so shaky the next morning. The night I looked out the window and saw the very obscure rookie who roomed directly above the star dangling a quart bottle on the end of a rope.

• • •

That year in Baltimore when I inaugurated the city amateur boxing championship tournament which has been copied so profitably elsewhere since then. The bootlegger who withdrew his son from the finals because he became angry at the army captain who was representing the A. A. U. as master of ceremonies. The Police department team which went on a sympathetic strike along with the gentleman who sold very good stuff at 50 cents a shot.

• • •

That year when there was so much talk about the International league being a one-man enterprise and Judge Landis' official pronouncement that such tales were all the bunk. The great self-restraint I used in not revealing that a few days previously I had been in the same room while Jack Dunn, officially the Baltimore owner, had issued orders which fired an umpire, two Jersey City ball players and one from Newark. The fact that I spent two hours in persuading Dunnie, who was a wee bit excitable at times, that he should not also fire the president.

• • •

That evening when Wladek Zbyszko threw Renato Gardini at me because somehow I became so suspicious as to hint that all wrestling matches are not made in heaven.

• • •

The time when the very agreeable Bradley agreed to box a four-round exhibition for charity and discovered, too late, that the setup was Kid Williams, who was just getting over being bantamweight champion of the world.

NOT IN THE BOX SCORE:

THE weaker clubs will make a determined fight for a share the wealth plan when the major leagues meet next winter. They claim that they provide half the show even when they visit Yankee stadium. So, they argue, visiting clubs should get a better break than the 20 cents on each paid admission arrangement which has been in effect since the 1890's . . . Sam McQuade, who now makes matches at the Garden, once was an altar boy . . . Uncle Sam's roving poloists have definitely decided not to enter a team in the Olympics, but the British, seeking consolation for their Westchester Cup defeat, will send the same 32-goal side to Berlin . . . Pete Gilhooly, Scotland's celebrated all around athlete, now trains the Flushing Juniors, runners-up in the Empire State Junior (soccer) league.

• • •

Don Petrin, the light-heavyweight, wants the world to know that he now is the daddy of a nine-pound boy. Also that, because he needs more dough than can be had in his father-in-law's bakery, he would like to receive some fight offers . . . It costs $3,000 a night to stage those midget auto races in the Garden bowl . . . International league writers and managers put on even better scraps than the ball clubs. Right now Pilot Vitt of Newark is being panned because he is too hard boiled, while Guy Sturdy of the Orioles gets a blast for being too easy going . . . Al Lane, star Hill school fullback and brother of the former Princeton football captain, has just failed to receive the proper nod from the entrance committee at Old Nassau. He still has a chance to make the grade in the fall.

• • •

Dr. Bier, the Pompton Lakes health farmer, claims a record at which all other fight camp proprietors can aim. During the sixteen years he has been conducting the place, no referee ever has counted ten over a main bout performer who trained there . . . One of the more vigorous fight squabbles now concerns the Braddock-Schmeling picture rights . . . If the Garden gets the show Harry Voiler probably will get the call. If it is under Hearst A. C. auspices the break will go to the justly celebrated Bill Duffy . . . Possible successors to the late Charley Knapp as president of the International league are either Secretary Willie Manley or Umpire in Chief Bill Carpenter.

Ruppert Has Heaviest Insurance on Stadium

Colonel Ruppert carries more insurance (a bigger sum and more different varieties) on Yankee stadium than does any other big-time club owner . . . When Charlotte Epstein skipped the Olympic trials she set some kind of a record. It was the first major swimming meet in these parts that the very capable coach has missed in years . . . In Detroit they whisper that Mickey Cochrane and Schoolboy Rowe are so far apart temperamentally, that, for the good of all concerned, the potentially great pitcher will be traded this winter . . . Jimmy Calleran of the Bushwicks soon will dangle a little second-sacker on his knee. . . . Although he is not quite so brash when speaking for publication, Coach Al Ulbrickson confides to friends that Washington's Olympic crew will crack the record set by the 1928 California boat.

Colonel Ruppert

• • •

The biggest bettor at metropolitan tracks is a young man who once seemed to be headed toward golfing stardom. He plops down as much as 50 C's on a race . . . Aside from the fact that the best Cards' farm outfielder is a Joe Medwick type of kid named Lou Scoffic, the Dodgers gave away a lot of weight when they traded the giant Earnshaw. Eddie Morgan, who eventually will arrive at Brooklyn as part of that deal, is 5 feet 9 inches tall and weighs 160 pounds. It is because they are overstocked with one-base-hitting guys of that size that the Dodgers are in the cellar now . . . In addition to being a distinguished surgeon, Dr. G. Randolph Manning is one of the grand old men of soccer. He was the first president of the U. S. F. A.

• • •

At dinner recently when a group of very well-informed baseball men were discussing the merits of the two major leagues this proposition was set forth: "The Cubs won the pennant last year while the Yankees finished second in their own loop. Suppose you owned the Yankees and, during the winter, you were told that you could have the pick of the Cubs to strengthen your club. Leave pitchers and Di Maggio out of it. This is a deal where you would have to swap a regular for a regular." The unanimous answer to that was that the difference between their ages might make a Billy Herman-Tony Lazzeri deal verry attractive. Otherwise the American leaguers could not improve themselves.

JOE E. BROWN has been having a grand time for himself lately. With his latest picture, "Earthworm Tractor," welcomed by the public as one of the funniest he's ever made, he started off on a vacation.

Being a rabid baseball fan, he took in a few games when he reached the East enroute to Europe. In New York he went to a double-header between the Yankees and the St. Louis Browns, and presented to that sensational new Yankee outfielder, Joe DiMaggio, the award for being the most valuable player in the Coast league in 1935.

William Powell has sold his ornate home with the gold door knobs and is living in simpler quarters. Those rumors of a romance between him and Jean Harlow still persist — but apparently everybody who's unattached wants to marry him nowadays, and that includes girls who've never even seen him, except on the screen. Incidentally, Powell is regarded by actors everywhere as one of the most skillful and talented members of the profession—a tribute which is justly deserved.

Apparently nobody's happy any more until they've seen Hollywood. Young John Jacob Astor and his wife are the latest recruits of note; they are on their way to the film metropolis in a private car.

Bob Burns (don't tell me you haven't heard him and his bazooka on the Bing Crosby broadcasts!) is having honors heaped upon him. He worked in "Rhythm on the Range" with Bing, so the picture's premiere was staged in Little Rock, Ark., because Bob hails from the Ozarks.

Once upon a time The Revelers were the most popular quartette on the air. From time to time one of the sweet singers would drop out and make a name for himself all alone—Jimmy Melton was one who did it, Frank Luther was another—but somebody else would step in and the result would still be swell. You don't hear so much about them as you used to, but they're still on the air, at 6:35 afternoons—and they're still one of the best.

Cowboys have for years been known as devoted fans when Western pictures are shown, a fact which puzzled one motion picture executive so much that he questioned some of them about it. He wanted to know whether they went because the pictures were so much like their own life.

"Oh, no, they ain't like our life at all," one of them explained. "We go because maybe we think that's the way other cowboys go on."

There'll be excitement on the air waves in September, when Major Bowes and his amateurs go into action at the same time as the "Showboat" broadcasts. Nobody's sure which program the great public will prefer—some say the listeners-in are getting tired of amateurs, and others claim that "Showboat" has been sailing too long.

"San Francisco" is a grand picture, and is making money everywhere it's shown, especially in San Francisco. Yet the Chamber of Commerce of that city is still trying to get Metro to take out the earthquake scenes! Very wisely, Metro is refusing — lots of people go to see the picture especially to see them. The picture has added to the popular Clark Gable's following and has demonstrated again that he has a great deal of versatility as an actor.

ODDS AND ENDS . . . Remember "Baby Peggy"? She's a big girl now, making a screen come-back under her whole name, Margaret Montgomery, and you'll see her in a small part in "Girls' Dormitory" . . . Ginger Rogers had a birthday party recently, with tiny dancing figures representing herself and Fred Astaire on top of the cake . . . When "Swing Time" is finished Fred will go to England with his wife and son for a vacation, and Ginger hopes to take a vacation in Hawaii before starting "Mother Carey's Chickens" . . . It looks as if that $5,000,000 suit which Paramount has brought against Samuel Goldwyn for signing Gary Cooper must possibly be a publicity stunt . . . Surely Gary can sign with anybody he wants to when his present contract expires . . . The Tower of London was the scene of the pre-view of "Nine Days a Queen," an English picture based on the story of Lady Jane Gray.

Don't Watch the Thermometer

I am writing this on a hot day—a very hot day. The thermometer on my porch informs me that it is a hundred degrees Fahrenheit. I could believe that it is very much hotter than that.

The people that pass my door have taken off their coats—if they are men.

The women, who refuse to be beaten even if they can't really keep cool, are wearing filmy raiment, but they don't pant the way men do.

But while I admit that I am inconvenienced, and wish I could be in Alaska and lean against an ice floe like a polar bear, I know that if I stop thinking about the weather and go to work I will soon lose myself in my job.

• • •

A little way down the street is a fire-engine house. The firemen have rigged a pipe up in front of the building and from its mouth spouts a continuous man-made geyser. All the children in the neighborhood, and they make as much noise as all the children in town, are stripped to their little buffs and are shouting joyfully as they bend down their backs and let the spray from the pipe run over them.

• • •

But in the suburban town where I live, and in the great city which is not far away, men and women are doing their regular work.

If a fire should break out in another part of the town, the firemen who are now watching the children enjoy their shower baths would mount their ladder trucks and man their engines, and be off with a blare of sirens to do their appointed job.

If they decided they didn't want to get any hotter and stayed where they were perhaps the town might be consumed.

• • •

Men and women can do in a pinch what they have to do, whether the temperature is up or down.

When the need arises, especially the need to help others out of danger, their courage crops out and they all become heroes for the time being.

And I, who have nothing to do for the present but pound a typewriting machine would do well to forget the fact that it is uncomfortable, and stop breathing hard and making continuous trips to the refrigerator for ice cubes to fill my glass.

• • •

Rain or snow, cold or hot, one is easier in his mind if he forgets the discomforts that are bound to come, and to continue with his work.

And the more indispensable work he has to do, the more easily he will withstand the steaming streets and the torrid skies.

As long as it is not humanly possible to change the weather, the only intelligent thing to do is to forget about it.

Fashion Back to Femininity Trend

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

MANNISHLY tailored to the prink of perfection during the practical hours and for sports? Decidedly so, if you would be smartly in fashion. However, it is an entirely different story which the mode is telling "what to wear" at festive midsummer events that take place midst glamorous settings. Comes then into the style scene as lacy and lovely and sheer costumes-beautiful as ere graced a fashion picture.

The lavish use of nets, laces, organzas, marquisettes, tulles and similar materials of filmy texture and transparency quite exceeds anything of its kind seen for many a year. In the daytime they are tailored and for the night hours and for garden party wear these entrancing sheers are made up as pretty-prettily as genius and imagination can possibly create them.

The trio of dainty costumes in the picture most eloquently carries the message of lovely ladies clad in beguilingly feminine array such as is gracing the midsummer landscape with romance and the picturesque. The first impression one gets from this group, aside from the beauty of the sheer materials, is that of big hats, cunning puff sleeves and hemlines that are generously and gracefully wide. Since first impressions usually ring true, we learn important facts in regard to the correct silhouette for 1936 midsummer garden party and dance frocks.

The winsome dress pictured to the left is of a very fine crossbar net. Style points to note are the fancifully picketed hemline with like-pointed rufflings on the voluminous puffed sleeves, the flower ruche about the throat, also the huge-brimmed hat that is made of the selfsame net (stiffly starched) as the gown. Here also we see the return of the parasol.

Garden party dresses when they are as fanciful and airy as the one to the right in the picture make one think of a fairy-story princess, stepping lightly across her garden. The dress is pure white, in organza most beautifully embroidered to knee-depth about the hemline of the skirt and on the sleeves. The gown is simply cut, its graceful lines taking on an added touch of the exquisite in that a double row of binche lace borders the wide skirt working up into a deep point in the front in combination with the embroidery. The treatment of the puffed sleeves is fittingly quaint.

Lovers of beautiful lace will adore the gown shown centered in foreground. It is one of the loveliest from among most lovely dresses brought over on the maiden voyage of the royal steamship Queen Mary and shown at the display of exclusive British fashion creations recently presented here in America. It adds to its interest to know that it was one of four Reville creations approved for the royal garden party of King Edward VIII at Buckingham palace. The gown is of exquisitely fine lupin-blue cellophane lace. The girdle is of forget-me-nots, matching the crown of the hat in the same color. It would seem next to impossible to imagine anything prettier than this fantasy of lace and flowers which is done all in delicate blues.

In the present back-to-femininity trend, the garden party dress has its important place, especially when in the instances cited in this group it is just as perfect for country club or roof dancing on summer evenings.

"PAX" SILK PRINTS

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Prints continue to hold sway in the world of fashion. The lure of them is stronger than ever. Shown in the picture is one of the very interesting and unique "pax" (pax being the Latin word for peace) silk prints designed by a member of the board of directors of the international league for peace. These really handsome silk prints are available to women who are interested in adopting the peace-in-fashions movement. The dress pictured is of a blue and white silk sheer with the word pax so skilfully used as a motif it becomes a part of the patterning. The wide white-bordered cape-bertha is pleated and shirred in accord with the latest styling trend

FROSTED JEWELRY LEADS THE VOGUE

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Summer's newest jewelry is "white and frosty." Rings, bracelets and necklaces that look as icy as a cool drink are being worn at fashionable summer resorts. Crystalline and opaque whites are frequently combined. Crystalline alone adds a glamorous note to costumes in the new smoky pastels, opaque white is good with copper-brown, and with the south-sea batik prints or flowered challis.

Choker necklaces are staging a come-back. Large frosty rings are frequently worn to match. To set off the rings, nails are adopting shades of smoky red polish. Massive couturier rings with multi-colored stones are also smart, and require bright nail lacquer such as robin red or coral to give the hands the proper balance.

For moments when the urge to be feminine has you in its grip, try yielding to the rage for flower jewelry. Fabric flowers, raffia flowers, carved flower motifs, are used—even the real thing straight from the florist. Any flower goes, from daisies to forget-me-nots. Some of the necklaces tie demurely at the back of the neck with a ribbon.

New Mode in Smart Sports Dresses for Daytime Wear

Smart dresses for daytime wear during the summer include grand new sports and spectator sports outfits. Molyneux has scored with a new design made for his private clients, who include several Americans known for their elegance. A suit of beige woolen has a most interesting belt which is made of natural tree bark and is fastened with a sheaf of dried grass. Another successful number is a dress of navy and white linen tweed with the skirt of wide, flat pleats. It is worn under a navy redingote.

Curiosa Americana

"Here Lies—"

VISIT Cape Ann, Mass, and in a cemetery there you'll find a headstone with this inscription: "Here Lies the Body of Boatswain Allen Whose Body Was Lost at Sea." The explanation for this paradoxical statement is this: Boatswain Allen's body really was lost at sea. When his relatives commissioned a headstone-maker to prepare a memorial shaft for the vanished seaman, he began it "Here Lies the Body—" because he always began the inscriptions on headstones thus and didn't know any other way. So they just let him go ahead.

A somewhat similar situation is reported by an American traveler abroad who gleaned this epitaph from a headstone in an English cemetery:

Beneath these cold and silent stones
Lie the remains of Samuel Jones,
His name was really Smith, not Jones,
But we changed his name to rhyme with stones.

No such difficulty, however, was experienced by the man who engraved an epitaph for a former slave who is buried near Savannah, Ga. It says:

Here lies old Rastus Somminy
Died a-eating hominy
In '59, anno domini.

But A. D. gets a different interpretation in this epitaph, found in a Connecticut graveyard, even though the second rhyme is a bit lame:

Here lies cut down like unripe fruit
The wife of Deacon Amos Shute;
She died of drinking too much coffee
Anny Dominy eighteen forty.

What must have been a thrilling incident in frontier history is compressed into this laconic statement on a block of sandstone which stood for many years near the old Buffalo Trace in Indiana. It said:

Here lies Dick Elliott.
He was skulpt by a injun.
I skulpt the injun.

Alliteration

IN 1825 when the cornerstone of the Bunker Hill monument was laid and Daniel Webster delivered his greatest commemorative oration, some unknown poet inspired perhaps by the eloquence of the "god-like Daniel," composed this classic of alliteration:

THE BUNKER HILL MONUMENT CELEBRATION

Americans arrayed and armed attend;
Beside battalions bold, bright beauties blend.
Chiefs, clergy, citizens conglomerate—
Detesting despots, daring deeds debate;
Each eye emblazoned ensigns entertain—
Flourishing from far, fan freedom's flame.
Guards greeting guards grown gray—guest greeting guest.
High-minded heroes, hither, homeward, haste.
Ingenuous juniors join in jubilee,
Kith kenning kin, kind knowing kindred key.
Lo, lengthened lines led Liberty liege love,
Mixed masses, marshaled, monumentward move.
Note noble navies near—no novel notion,
Oft our oppressors overawed old Ocean;
Presumptuous princes, pristine patriots paled,
Queens' quarrel questing quotas, quondam quailed.
Rebellion roused, revolting ramparts rose.
Stout spirit, smiting servile soldiers, strove.
These thrilling themes, to thousands truly told,
Usurpers' unjust usages unfold.
Victorious vassals, vauntings, vainly veiled,
Where, while since, Webster, warlike Warren wailed.
'Xcuse 'xpletives 'xtra-queer 'xpressed,
Yielding Yankee yeoman zest.

Diphphiculties

PUBLISHERS of newspapers on the American frontier often had many handicaps to overcome in getting out their little weekly journals. Few, however, experienced a more discouraging start than a pioneer Colorado editor who explained his situation to his readers in the first issue of his paper thus:

> We begin the publication ov the Roccay Mountain Cyclone with some phew diphphiculties in the way. The type phounder phrom whom we bought our outphit phor this printing ophhice phaled to supply us with any ephs or cays, and it will be phour or phive weecs bephore we can get any. The mistaque was not found out till a day or two ago. We have ordered the missing letters, and will have to get along without them till they come. We don't lique the loox ov this variety ov spelling any better than our readers, but mistaxs will happen in the best regulated phamilies, and iph the ph's and c's and x's and q's hold out we shall ceep (sound the c hard) the Cyclone whirling aphter a phasion till the sorts arrive. It is no joque to us—it's a serious aphphair.

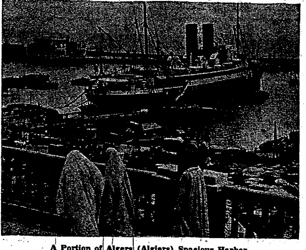
THE RED CROSS

In 1869 Clara Barton became interested in the work of the Red Cross while on a trip abroad. Returning to the United States Miss Barton, a well-to-do spinster, determined to devote the remainder of her life to the formation of the Red Cross in the United States. Recognition was slow in coming, though, America was tired of war. The political leaders feared this international organization as an entangling alliance. In 1881, however, she succeeded in interesting Secretary Blaine in the movement and it was incorporated in Washington that year. Now all that was needed was the Presidential signature to the Geneva treaty. At that point Garfield was assassinated. The next year President Arthur signed

Lovely and Lively Port



A Portion of Algers (Algiers) Spacious Harbor.

Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

MANY visitors to North Africa begin their exploration of the Dark Continent at Alger (Algiers), and remember it as one of the loveliest ports in the world. Its dazzling white buildings climb a terraced hillside above an incredibly blue, crescent-shaped bay. Behind the hills blossoms the narrow fertile plain of the Mitidja, above which tower the mighty snow-clad Atlas mountains.

Alger, the White City! Only a little over a century ago it was the lair of cruel sea wolves, the bloodthirsty Algerian pirates who captured and enslaved Europeans and even Americans. Today it is a beautiful modern French city with many Europeans among its thousands of inhabitants.

Alger is kept in constant touch with France by submarine cables, by regular postal and passenger air service, and by daily steamers to French ports. Railroads connect it with points in Morocco and Tunisia.

Not only is Alger an important French naval station, but it is the largest city in Algeria. From it is shipped much of the country's produce. Its waterfront is lined with merchants' warehouses, wharves piled high with merchandise, and docks beside which lie large steamers.

Alger's European sector has well-built streets along which electric trams and automobiles rush past theatres, hotels and attractive shops. Strolling along broad sidewalks sheltered by arcades, and in cafes fronting palm-shaded squares, one sees well-dressed European men and modish French girls as well as veiled women and stately Arabs in flowing burnooses.

These streets are in direct contrast to the narrow, cobbled alleys of the native quarter which climb up the steel hillside. Along them gayly-colored houses are crowded together.

The native quarter affords many picturesque sights. At the corner of a market place is an Arab coffee house. Outside, squatting on the pavement or seated on benches against the wall, are Arabs, Kabyles, Negroes, men of all classes and ages—merchants, small shopkeepers, clerks, laborers—conversing volubly, playing cards, dominoes, draughts, or merely sitting—sitting idly, vacantly, unconscious of those around them. No man on earth—Neopolitan lazzarone, Hindu ascetic, or Buddhist priest seeking Nirvana — is capable of such utter detachment from the world as the ordinary Arab.

They Love Coffee

A few of those gathered in front of the cafe hold tiny cups of coffee in their hands, taste it, drink it slowly, savoring every precious drop of the pennyworth of fragrant dark fluid. Inside, at the tiled, waist-high fireplace, the cook dips a small, long-handled measure into the steaming copper pot resting on a handful of red embers and fills the cups for the bare-armed attendant to take to customers seated on benches or huddled on mats in the interior of the establishment.

The walls are scrawled with crude drawings of mosques, palm trees, tigers and elephants—these last by an artist who had evidently never seen either animal — or chromos of French presidents and European royalties.

A gray-haired, wild-looking man in rags, hung round with the skins of small animals, strums a one-stringed guitar made from the shell of a tortoise. He enters the cafe and, half shambling, half dancing, holding out a hand for money, wanders among the customers. As he moves he sings in a high-pitched, nasal voice, and the contrast between the eastern love song and its singer is striking.

In better establishments, situated nearer the French quarter and patronized by well-to-do Arabs, one often finds a superior orchestra. Three or four black-coated, white-collared gentlemen in red fezzes play strange instruments — a big guitar, a large drum called a teboul, a long one, the derbrouka, similar to an Indian tom-tom; a ghaita, a sort of flageolet shaped like a doctor's stethoscope, and perhaps a tambourine — the while they sing in nasal tones.

To the poor native the cafe is a club, a hotel, a home. He brings his crust of bread, his handful of onions, to eat there; he sleeps on its benches or on the pavement against its wall; and once or twice a day he spends two cents in it for a cup of coffee.

From the market place lead narrow streets and, as in such eastern cities as Cairo, Tunis, Delhi, and Canton, each is lined with shops devoted to one trade. Down this one are the tailors. In the square holes devoid of counters, tables, or chairs, white-burnoosed, bearded men resembling Biblical patriarchs squat on the floor and sew furiously.

Workers in Brass

In the next street brass workers hammer at bright pots and tall water vessels, denting patterns into them with sharp-pointed instruments struck with mallets. Tinsmiths display piles of saucepans and coffeepots. In the tiny shops of the next crooked lane cobblers stitch rapidly at the native's easy red-leather slippers, or work beautiful designs with gold and silver threaded and spangles on dainty shoes for women.

Here is break in the trades-union character of the shops. Outside this one a small crowd eagerly watches the movements of a youth seated before a tiled stove running up into a pointed chimney. A small table stands beside him. In a dish he mixes a white batter, rolling it, pulling and twisting it with nimble fingers, then dipping it into oil and placing it in the stove. His hand dives in once or twice to turn the morsel.

Then with tongs he draws out a crisp, golden puff, places it on a small square of newspaper, thrusts it into an eager, outstretched palm and receives a coin. The buyer turns away, contentedly munching the succulent titbit.

The next street blazes with color. Here black-bearded Mozabites in flowing Arab garb—heretical Moslems from the Mzab district in the Sahara—or hooked-nosed Jews in semi-European attire display a wealth of rainbow-hued, long-fringed silk shawls; gay-colored bodices and jackets; skirts and other garments in pink, blue, yellow, red; leather belts gold-buckled and heavy with bullion and gold embroidery; white wool or silk and wool gandauras (long gowns), and crimson burnooses worked with gold or silver.

Then comes the Street of the Jewelers! Many of the shops have glass windows displaying massive silver bracelets three or four inches wide, gold and silver earrings several inches in diameter, huge necklace of broad, beautifully designed flat silver and gold ornaments, filigree rings, heavy anklets—truly a street of delight for womankind.

Dazzling White Mosques

Dazzling white in the brilliant sunshine, the walls of a mosque almost blind one by their glare. But enter. You pass into dark, cool shadows, into a silent interior, bare and restful. Through the past centuries bearded Moslems with the blood of the unbelievers red on their hands have gathered here to bow down toward Mecca and beg Allah's aid in fresh crimes. Yet they thought them meritorious deeds, by the truth of the Most High! And every Friday the faithful come here still, and who shall say that none of them mutter curses in their beards upon the Christian dogs that rule them?

The crowding houses of the city end. Across the road is a scarped hillside, with grass, gardens, and trees. In a small open space native barbers shave the scalps of clients or squat beside their chairs waiting for trade, while their tools — razors, scissors, clippers, mirrors — are laid out ready on the ground.

This open-air toilet saloon is a strange sight for the tourist, but does not gain a look from the passengers in the electric trams passing within a few yards of it.

Suddenly one comes upon tombs and the ground falls sharply away. The eye ranges over the deep valley of Bab-el-Oued, with its gardens and houses, to the bright-red scars of quarries and cliffs in the green hillside opposite, crowned with the domes of the famous church of Notre Dame d'Afrique. It faces across the Mediterranean to its sister, Notre Dame de la Garde, on the height above the harbor of Marseille.

Uncle Phil Says:

Watch Your Manners

Is politeness decaying? Don't permit that. It will develop into sheer brutality.

If you care a great deal for a man as he is, you may be able to reform him, but be careful.

People have to become thoroughly exasperated before they thoroughly punish crime.

Keeping still seldom results in worry later on.

Religion of most people is a very good one if they would pay more attention to it.

Those who anticipate the worst, usually prepare for it, that's one good thing.

What Price Relief

Hurling a bad egg has never settled an argument; but hasn't it been a great relief.

Some can enter a room impressively; and not so many can leave it that way.

You must expect to see displays of ignorance all the time. Don't let them perturb you.

In these days, indeed, the king can do no wrong. He's lucky if he is allowed to lay a corner stone.

Much of one's youth is clouded by a perpetual nagging to break trifling bad habits.

Eye the Present

Don't be so "forward looking" that you fail to see what's going on right now.

When a father has a good son, he knows what he should have been when a boy.

A witty wife is lucky if her husband has a sense of wit.

Tomorrow's Hero

Bronze statues now commemorate many who were thought cranks in their day. But with all your wit, can you spot today's crank who will have a statue?

You can't tie a friend up to you if he is on marrying bent. You only get the jag ends of his thoughts.

Tops in Forgetfulness

A husband's forgetfulness caused a man to inadvertently send an engraved invitation to his wife to attend his marriage to another woman, although there had been no divorce. He appeared before Magistrate Thomas Aurelio in New York accused of bigamy, and was remanded for the grand jury.

He was asked if he had sent the engraved invitation to his wife. "She must have been on the mailing list," explained Mr. Ryan.—Montreal Herald.

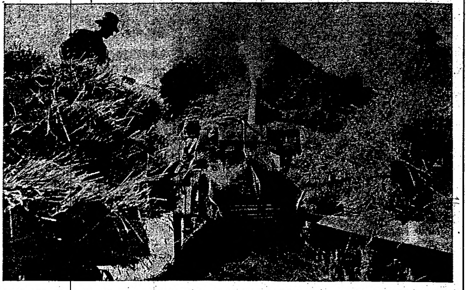
One Locality Where the Wheat Crop Is Good



IN CONTRAST to the drouth devastated regions in other parts of the state and country is this scene of plenty on the farm of Allen Engler in Shawnee county, near Topeka, Kan., showing wheat being threshed. The locality is enjoying a banner wheat crop with an average yield of 25 bushels an acre, selling at one dollar a bushel.

Bedtime Story for Children

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

JERRY'S FEARS ARE ENDED

FOR a week Jerry Muskrat continued to find good things to eat at several of his favorite eating places, things of which he was very fond, and which had been put there by the stranger, who visited the Laughing Brook and the Smiling Pool every day. At first, as you know, Jerry had been very suspicious. He had feared a trap at each of those places where the good things were. But he had found no trace of a trap, and by the end of the week he had ceased to think of traps at all.

Had the Stranger Had a Gun Jerry Would Have Kept Out of Sight

The result was that now Jerry thought of nothing but the good things to eat and scrambled up on the bank and the old log which lay partly in the water, as carelessly as he had been in the habit of doing before the stranger appeared. His one thought was to get those good things the stranger so thoughtfully left there for him.

"I don't believe that this is the trapper of whom Billy Mink and Bobby Coon warned me," thought Jerry. "It must have been some one else who set those traps for Billy Mink. This is a friend. I don't know why he takes so much interest in me and brings me all these good things, and I don't care. I hope he'll keep right on bringing me apples, carrots, and such things. They certainly do taste good to me."

Sometimes the stranger came early in the morning and sometimes he came late in the afternoon. Always he left something for Jerry and Jerry was very grateful. Those feasts saved him a lot of time and trouble hunting for food. This gave him more time to work on his house and make it ready for winter. Jerry had a feeling that the winter was going to be a hard one, and he intended to be fully prepared for it. So he worked hard making the roof and walls of his house thicker than usual and making his tunnels in the banks of the Smiling Pool so that no matter how hard the winter might be, he would be quite comfortable.

Jerry so lost all fear of that stranger that sometimes he would work when he knew that the stranger was watching him. However, he always took care to see that the stranger had no gun with him. Had the stranger had a gun Jerry would at once have been suspicious and would have kept out of sight. As it was, he would keep right on working until the stranger left, and then hurry over to see what he had left for him. Jerry was very happy and quite without fear.

FIND THE COIN

This is one trick that becomes more and more bewildering if you repeat it. People will think that luck aided you the first time; but the longer you repeat the more bewildered they become.

Give a person a coin. Turn your back, tell him to hold the coin in one hand and raise the hand to his forehead. Then request him to place both fists on the table.

Turning about, you immediately point out the hand that holds the coin.

To accomplish this, merely look closely at both hands. The blood will have left the hand raised to the forehead; hence it will be lighter in color.

◆ MOTHER'S ◆ COOK BOOK

THREE GOOD RECIPES

HERE is a good ice-box cooky, which is always a good one to keep ready for any occasion:

Sugar Cookies

Cream one cupful of butter, add two cupfuls of sugar, add two teaspoons of vanilla, one of lemon extract, two teaspoons of nutmeg, one-half teaspoon of salt, three eggs well beaten and four tablespoons of cream. Beat three minutes then add four and one-third cups of flour, one teaspoon of cream of tartar well blended. Shape into two rolls two inches in diameter and roll in waxed paper. Place in the ice chest 24 hours. Cut into thin slices and bake in a quick oven.

Caramel Jelly

Soak two tablespoons of gelatin in one-half cup of cold milk for five minutes. Pour one-half cup of sugar into a smooth iron frying pan. Heat slowly, stirring constantly until a light brown sirup is formed, add one cup of boiling water and cook five minutes, stirring frequently until well dissolved. Add the gelatin mixture and one cup of boiling milk. Cook slowly until the gelatin is dissolved. Add one-half cup of cream, pinch of salt, one and one-half teaspoons of vanilla and pour into molds to stiffen. Turn out and serve sprinkled with shredded almonds.

Orange Cream

Cook together the juice and rind of a lemon, one cupful of orange juice and four tablespoonfuls of flour mixed with one-half cupful of sugar. Add the beaten yolks of four eggs and cook until thick. Cream one-half cupful of butter and one cupful of powdered sugar and add to the cooled custard. Lastly fold in the stiffly-beaten whites of the eggs. Line the bottom of a pan with lady fingers and pour in the orange mixture. Set aside to cool and serve garnished with cream.

EVEN SUMMER

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

WHO has not seen a summer rain
Sweep swiftly o'er a sunlit plain?
Bright was the morn
And soft the breeze,
Yet gales are born
Of even these,
And suddenly the sky is gray,
Yes, even on a summer day.

Who has not seen some summer hour
Grow darker with a sudden show'r?
Yet shall your own
Be always fair,
And loss unknown,
And hurt, and care?
Shall life be always joy to you,
The sky the same all summer through?

Who has not seen the rain appear?
Who ever lived a cloudless year?
The dripping leaf,
The fallen nest,
So comes some grief
To ev'ry breast—
And even so to you it may,
Yes, even on a summer day.

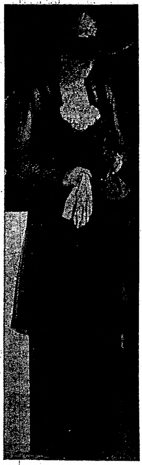
Long Puff Sleeves



For dining in town, a tunic of navy blue net with long puff sleeves is glamorously transparent over a simple gown of navy blue silk crepe. Flat white carnations trim the low neckline and a matching ostrich plume trims the blue hat of mousseline de soie.

Lake of the Sky

Lake Tahoe in California is 6,225 feet above sea level. This exceptional body of water, 23 miles long and 13 miles wide, is called the Lake of the Sky for two reasons. One is its lofty altitude and the other has to do with the remarkable manner in which the waters reflect the blue of the sky as well as the surrounding heights of scenic beauty.

BRITAIN TO BUILD NEW, HUGE FLEET

Strong Enough to Go Anywhere, Says Navy Chief.

London.—Sir Samuel Hoare, first lord of the admiralty, declared that Britain, at the earliest moment, was to have virtually a new fleet "strong enough to go anywhere." Speaking at Southampton he warned that if Britain's sea communications should be cut the people would be dead of starvation within six weeks.

"This overwhelming reason," he said, "makes the reconstruction of our fleet so vitally important. We have delayed so long in its rebuilding that we now are faced with the problem of building what virtually amounts to a new fleet. That this new fleet should be built on the right lines is a matter of life and death to us.

"As our life depends upon our free passage through the seven seas, the world fleet must be strong enough to go anywhere and to carry out its duties in any conditions. It is our determination to have such a fleet and to build it with the least possible delay.

Air Power Threat

He also referred to the "new and formidable threat" of air power against Britain's national security.

"The air powers have made what was once the most secure island in the world the most vulnerable society in Europe," he declared. "For the first time in our history the heart of the empire has become vulnerable. Such a state of insecurity cannot be allowed to endure.

"I care not from what quarter our security is challenged, our reply to the challenge must always be the same. This is not a question of partisanship for or against this or that country in Europe.

"It is the established principle of British policy, it is indeed the basic condition of British life that wherever or whenever our security is endangered it is our bounden duty to make such preparations as will remove the danger.

"It is on this account that we are proceeding with our great program of air reinforcement. It is with the determination to reach at the earliest possible date air parity with the strongest power within the range of these shores that we are creating our new squadrons, producing our new machine."

Help Distressed

He pointed out that the rebuilding of the navy would greatly benefit the "distressed areas," where unemployment has been greatly troubling the nation.

"A rough calculation of the new construction program on which we are embarked," he explained, "goes to show up that to date, out of an expenditure of about 23,000,000 pounds no less than 21,000,000 pounds has gone in orders to the depressed and specially hit areas."

He concluded with the warmest defense of Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin, replying to the latter's critics, particularly the Socialists.

"Far better than the pacifists," he said, "Mr. Baldwin represents, as no other man represents, the forces of peace in the country. Through all these difficult months he has been determined to prevent the conflagration of a European war. There have been many moments when a less steady determination to pursue the path of peace might have plunged Europe into one of the greatest catastrophes in the world's history."

French Town Boasts of a "Monument" to Gossip

Mulhouse, France.—At Mulhouse is a "monument" which, instead of glorifying the virtues of some historic character or event, symbolizes an ancient and modern vice, scandal-mongering.

It is known as the anti-gossip stone, and hangs outside the city hall, which is a magnificent example of Sixteenth century art. In days gone by this stone was placed about the necks of tattle-tales as a punishment for gossip and a warning. Carved in the stone is a woman sticking out her tongue, and an old ditty which, roughly translated, says:

I am the tattle-tale stone,
To each poisoned tongue well known,
Those who are chatty,
Quarrelsome, catty,
Must carry me all day long.

Doubtless the stone served its purpose, for Mulhouse has developed a race of intelligent, industrious artisans.

It was believed she was a taxpayer.

Lights of New York

by L. L. STEVENSON

Prowling around the Big Town—and wondering whether to take a vacation and where to go if he did take one—your correspondent happened to notice that the lobby of the Hotel Times Square contained what looked like antiques. So he sought out Sydney Claman, president of the company, and made inquiries. Sure enough, they are all genuine pieces. Mr. Claman's father, the late Henry Claman, was a noted collector, and the specimens in the hotel were his choicest. When he died, his heirs, not knowing anything about antiques, began selling them indiscriminately. Included in the sales were two Etruscan vases which brought $500 each. Later the heirs learned that the dealer had resold them for $5,000 each and that brought an immediate recount, so to speak, of their heritage.

• • •

The reason why the antiques are in the hotel now is that Mr. Claman, chief beneficiary under the will, placed them there intending to hold them until he learned more about them and then make a sale. However, he has become so attached to them over a period of three years that so far he has not sold a single piece. Thus, a young woman from Oshkosh, visiting the ladies lounge, sits down at a $3,000 writing desk, which experts hold is an outstanding example of parquetry art, and some salesman throws his hat and coat on a marble table worth more than his year's salary. One of Mr. Claman's favorites is a $50,000 Renaissance mantel, inconspicuously placed far back in the lobby. Another is a half-ton, 14-foot-high clock of indeterminable value. It is said to be the chief work of the Worshipful Company of Clockmakers of London.

• • •

Continuing his prowl, your correspondent went down to the waterfront and watched a little tug push a big liner out into the river. That is by no means an unusual sight because those small craft are mighty busy around New York, the leading port of the world. But what was in mind was what big work little boats really can do. For instance, to dock the Queen Mary, it takes a fleet of 12 tugs, pushing, pulling with all their might. That might seem like a large number of tugs—and it is. On the other hand, the Queen Mary represents 80,000 tons and the combined tonnage of the 12 tugs is only 9,000. But 9,000 can make 80,000 slide right into the designated place.

• • •

The ability of small boats to make big ones do tricks, even with adverse winds and tides, is due entirely of course to the skill of the men in command of the little fellows. They go about their business nonchalantly, often in their shirt sleeves, and more often smoking pipes or cigars. But they are just as expert in their line as the man on the liner's bridge is in his. As a matter of fact, they are represented on the liner's bridge by a sort of commander-in-chief. He gives his orders by whistle blasts and those orders are obeyed promptly and exactly as indicated. Tug captains don't wear gaudy uniforms but they know their business—and shipping couldn't get along without them.

• • •

Sidewalk games of New York youngsters always interest your correspondent. Many are peculiar to certain neighborhoods, environment possibly being the mother of invention. Balls, bricks, or even mere chalk marks on the pavement, are all the equipment necessary. Many of the games played by small girls are accompanied by songs and chants. Those played by the boys, however, have merely an accompaniment of shouts and sometimes shrill whistles. More and more playgrounds are being opened, especially in the congested districts, but the sidewalks are still the main recreation grounds for city juveniles.

• • •

In Central park the other afternoon, your correspondent got a taste of that which has brought destruction, loss and suffering to residents of various sections of the country. With so much construction work going on, Central park is bald in many sections. A windstorm came along, picked up the loose earth and distributed it in a heavy cloud, coating ball players, bench sitters and other park visitors so liberally they were forced to flee. It was only a miniature dust storm but highly uncomfortable just the same. And with that, this week's report must end.

Marie of Guernsey

By ROBERT FOLWELL

© McClure Newspaper Syndicate.
WNU Service.

SHE was just a little, clean-aproned girl of Guernsey (gem extraordinary of the Channel islands), and her grandmother had died. The grandmother who had led her through soft lanes with long lovely vistas after her hard-pushed mother had spanked her severely for some real or fanciful error. Both grandmother and mother had loved her dearly; but the mother's patience had been short, while the grandmother's was everlasting.

Her name was Marie, and after her grandmother died; after there was no one to walk and talk with, she went twice weekly to the bare little grave near St. Peter Port to render silent homage to the departed one.

Always the whispered plea as she knelt before the scant, unadorned headstone:

"J'essairai de le trouver un Globe."

Which meant that her whole soul desired to place on this beloved grave one of those unique glass globes filled with artificial flowers, which mark the grave as one that is cared for and cherished. These globes were expensive. Only the well-to-do could afford them. Marie and her mother worked hard for their livlihood in the great glass houses that grow fruit for which the island is famous.

One evening, after her devout prayers for the soul of the departed one, as she was leaving the little cemetery, she came face to face with a stalwart and good looking young man.

"You, too, have come to mourn, Mademoiselle?" Guernsey, it should be known, is greatly of French origin, and nearly all its people speak French and English both.

"Ah, yes, Monsieur. And I am sorry that you also have lost a loved one."

"It was my father," the young man continued, leaning against the massive, moss-grown cemetery portals, "and it is a loss that leaves me very lonely for we always worked and laughed together."

"And with me," said Marie, "it was my grandmother. We, too, laughed together, and she taught me the little that I know of the world. Ah, Monsier," Marie spoke impulsively, "perhaps you would know what is the smallest cost for which one of the beautiful globes and its standard may be obtained in St. Peter Port. I want one for her grave—and the flowers themselves I am able to make . . . we are very poor, my mother and myself . . ."

The young man broke in upon her speech eagerly:

"It seems impossible, Mademoiselle, that we are both longing to place the same tribute on our graves. Miraculous that we meet! I work in the identical shop in St. Peter Port where the globes and their pedestals are produced. I help to manufacture them; but I am, Mademoiselle, unable to buy the artificial flowers which are most expensive. I could procure for you the globe at a trifling cost. And I would be so happy to do this for Mademoiselle."

Marie's eyes were joyous stars as her answer followed close on his revelation:

"But, yes, Monsieur; and for you I will make the flowers which you cannot afford."

He straightened from his leaning posture on the portal and held out both his hands in a winning gesture.

"Mademoiselle, my name is Jacques Langlet. Please call me just Jacques, and please see into the depth of my heart and recognize the extent of my gratitude."

As Marie walked home that night she realized vaguely and with a mysterious glow of happiness that something new and beautiful had entered her life.

And this simple companionship ripened as the weeks passed during which Marie labored lovingly at two clusters of artificial flowers and Jacuqes worked late into the night at his shop in St. Peter Port on two shining glass globes and their pedestals. A man and a girl patiently toiling at a labor of love for each other and their departed ones.

Finally arrived the evening when Marie carefully carried to the cemetery her two lovely clusters of artificial flowers fashioned for the glass globes. Down the winding lane, as she entered the cemetery, appeared Jacques seated on a tiny cart drawn by an island donkey. In the cart were the two glass globes and their pedestals. Marie expertly installed the flowers in the globes, for both, and Jacques set up both monuments with the cement and proper tools he had fetched with him.

Afterwards, at the portals, with the donkey nuzzling his hand, Jacques turned back to Marie:

"I have saved a little money . . ." hesitantly, "perhaps we might continue being partners and make for others what we have made for ourselves in a little shop of our own . . . Marie!"

Tears of happiness came to Marie's eyes as she caught at the sleeve of his coat.

U. S. ARMY GETTING "WAR" TEST

Newest Developments in Fighting Equipment Are Tested in Giant Maneuvers Held in Middle West.

By WILLIAM C. UTLEY

WAR has come to the Middle West—a hypothetical war that raises no fear of ravage and pillage in the civilian population but rather permits them to see what manner of defense their army has prepared for them. But to the soldiery in Illinois, Wisconsin, Michigan, Indiana, Ohio, Kentucky and West Virginia it is war in grim earnest for it is the basis for the August maneuvers of the SECOND ARMY.

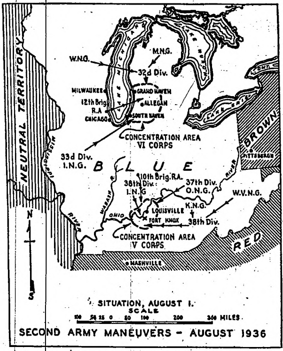
The maneuvers represent — in a short period of time — a complete cycle of mobilization, concentration, training, operation and demobilization, Major General Charles E. Kilbourne, commanding general, explained in outlining the purpose and plan of the field exercises.

While the problem as a whole simulates a conflict between hypothetical Red, Blue and Brown states, with Green as a neutral, its principal purpose is to provide training, and not to be a formal test of training. Whatever units the umpires from time to time may declare have won or lost a decision, all of the troops should benefit greatly from the character of training these maneuvers make possible.

Will Use Modern Methods

In total number of troops involved and in territory covered, these exercises are the most extensive ever held in the Middle West in peace time, General Kilbourne pointed out. The training problem involves the use of the most modern weapons and facilities available and also is the first in this area to give special emphasis to the employment of aviation and mechanized units. Large numbers of Illinois and Wisconsin troops must be transported across Lake Michigan. Units charged with responsibility for supply and communications operate over longer distances than in the field training of former years. Night operations are being conducted and attention given throughout the exercises to the tactical value of the element of surprise.

The entire maneuver is based on situations that are moving, rather than static. By provision of faster means of transportation and by reduction of weights carried, a systematic effort is being made to increase the mobility of troops, in action and behind the lines.



Map Showing the Area Covered by the Maneuvers.

The conditions set up for the maneuver assume that, after a period of strained relations, an outbreak of hostilities occurs between Blue—a state comprising Illinois, Wisconsin, Michigan, Indiana, Ohio, Kentucky, and West Virginia, and Red, an "enemy" state, including Tennessee and Virginia and extending southeastward. Brown, a state which includes Pennsylvania and territory to the east and north, is friendly toward Red and later becomes its ally against Blue. Green, a large neutral state, comprises territory west of the Mississippi river.

Will Use 40,000 Troops

In the first phase of the maneuver the V corps of the Second army (Blue) conducts an offensive in the direction of Nashville, the Red capital. In the second phase the VI corps of the Blue army begins its offensive toward the Brown capital of Pittsburgh, ending its march at Camp Custer, near Battle Creek, Michigan. The principal elements of Red and Brown troops will be represented by units of the recently organized GHQ (General Headquarters) Air force and the new mechanized cavalry. Upwards of 40,000 troops are participating.

It is the largest concentration of troops in the middle west since the World war, and represents the most extensive employment, under field conditions, of aviation and the Mechanized force ever witnessed in the United States.

Frequently called "the laboratory of the army" the "Mechanized force" is the agency through which the United States army is keeping abreast of developments in mechanization and motorization.

Consisting of the mechanized First cavalry; the First battalion, Sixty-eighth field artillery (mechanized), First battalion, Nineteenth field artillery (motorized), the Fifteenth observation squadron, air corps; together with maintenance and supply units, the "Mechanized force" comprises a small compact organization of great mobility and striking power.

This force is under the command of Col. Bruce Palmer, First cavalry. Artillery officer and commander of artillery is Lieut. Col. A. C. Sandeford, Sixty-eighth field artillery. The force as constituted for the maneuver includes 117 officers and 1,841 enlisted men. Its equipment includes armored cars, combat cars (light, fast tanks), cross-country personnel carriers armed with machine guns and automatic rifles. The tables of organization call for 88 combat vehicles for a mechanized cavalry regiment.

The First cavalry, mechanized, has two combat car squadrons, each with two ten-car troops. It also has a machine gun troop of 16 cars armed with 53, .30 cal. guns and 13, .50 cal. guns, and a 16-car reconnaissance troop.

Trend Is Toward Mobility

Brig. Gen. C. D. Herron, chief of staff, in commenting on the employment of the Mechanized force in the army maneuvers points to the fact that the trend of all tactics today involves mechanization, motorization, greater speed and greater mobility.

In order to keep abreast of developments in foreign countries, the army is experimenting with this mechanized force. Great progress has been made in developing combat vehicles that can travel at high speed both on the road and across country.

Mechanized units, however, are sensitive to ground conditions. Streams form serious obstacles. Destruction of bridges and critical road points greatly hinders such a force. And always a mechanized or motorized unit is dependent on the gasoline supply.

In spite of these limiting factors the Mechanized force, with its heavily armed vehicles, each capable of tremendous shock and fire power are of growing importance in the development of our national defense.

Constant radio communication from car to car gives the commander a complete picture of the location of his force at all times and permits complete control of the unit.

Mechanized forces can make deep incursions into enemy territory as illustrated in the rapid movement of the unit from the Fort Knox, Kentucky, area to Camp Custer.

Study Aircraft Effectiveness

Much interest is being shown in the effectiveness of the participating aircraft and the anti-aircraft defenses. Until actually tested by war, it is impossible to state whether the attack by aircraft or the defense against such attack has made the most progress.

In war every development of method or material for offensive operations automatically leads to the development of means of defense against attack by such methods or with such materials, experts point out.

In the beginning of the World war aviation was utilized almost entirely for observation missions. Gradually, however, its potentiality for the offensive was recognized and towards the end of the World war the attack on installations, cities and troops on the ground became daily occurrences.

Efforts to develop a defense against these attacks, other than with aircraft, were decidedly lame until the closing months of the war, when improvements in anti-aircraft artillery and the establishment of balloon barrages seemed to have had a considerable deterring effect, and the percentage of planes brought down was rapidly increasing.

One of the New "Motorized Army" Units.

Following the World war great emphasis was given both to the development of aircraft for offensive operations and to the defensive means. These defensive means are now divided into an active defense and a passive defense. In Europe and in Japan, training of civilians in the so-called passive defense against air attack is being undertaken. We read of cities being darkened during simulated bombardment from the air; of civilians being required to use gas masks; of fire departments and other civil organizations being drilled in protection of property and personnel, and instructions as to methods of preparing effective cover. These exercises are apparently made very real. The object is not only to save lives, but to organize and drill the people so that panic may not add to the actual danger of an attack.

Active Defense Elaborate

The active defense against enemy aircraft consists of pursuit airplanes to attack the bombers of an enemy, of anti-aircraft guns, machine guns and searchlights to be disposed around installations offering a proper objective for air attack, and an aircraft warning service consisting of a net of properly equipped observation stations with a system of communication insuring that the aircraft and the anti-aircraft services are alerted in time to meet threatened attack.

Much has been written of the great advance in aviation and the weapons installed on military aircraft. These improvements extend, of course, to the aircraft designed for operations especially against bombers.

Less is generally known of the development of the anti-aircraft artillery. There has been marked improvement in the type of anti-aircraft guns. The three-inch guns can maintain a fire at the rate of twenty shots a minute, with an effective altitude of over twenty thousand feet. The fifty caliber machine gun, firing six hundred rounds a minute, is effective against any aircraft operating at low or medium altitudes.

New Gun Perfected

Another automatic weapon for anti-aircaft use, the 37-millimeter gun, has been perfected but regiments have not, as yet, been supplied with them. This gun has a maximum vertical range of 15,000 feet, fires a shell that will explode on contact with the fabric of an airplane. It fires at the rate of eighty rounds a minute.

The searchlights used are eight hundred million candle power. Their range is, of course, dependent upon the state of the weather. However, the greatest improvement of material has been in the development of instruments simple of operation, which control by electricity the setting of the gun so that the projectile will meet the plane in flight and also operate the fuse setter to insure that the projectile bursts at the right instant.

Until actually tested by war, it is impossible to state whether the attack by aircraft, or the defense against such attack, has made the most progress. We can state with assurance, however, that both are vastly more efficient than at the close of the World war.

Heart in Puppet Show

A puppet show in a marionette theater in New York City often so affects the audience, chiefly adults, that it stops the show with its cheers and hisses. At times it even shouts encouragement to the hero and hurls eggs at the villain.

In the Family

Rarely does an entire family marry another entire family at the same time. But such a case was recorded recently in the Kwangtung province of China when a widower and his three sons married, in a single ceremony, a widow and her three daughters.—Collier's Magazine.

Olympic Games Formally Opened in Berlin

Adolf Hitler

WITH spectacular ceremony the Olympic Games were officially opened in Berlin when a graceful runner bearing the Olympic flame that had been started from Greece dashed into the stadium, lowered the silver torch before Reichsfuehrer Hitler and kindled the sacred fire in a great cresset. Then came the formal parade of the athletes of fifty nations, nattily uniformed and marching with precision while guns boomed and bands blared. Some of the foreign groups gave the Hitler salute as they passed by the chancellor. Others did not. Among the latter were the Americans, who placed their straw hats on their left breasts and marched by with eyes right. Nor was the American flag dipped before the fuehrer, the explanation being that this was done only before the President. The American contingent was greeted by an outburst of whistling which the knowing declared meant "the raspberry." But on the whole the affair was decidedly successful.

In the first day's contests the United States started things with a rush. Jesse Owens, Ohio State's colored star, broke the Olympic and world records in winning his heat in the 100-meter dash; and Johnson, who is from California, set a new Olympic record of 2.03 meters. In some other events the Americans did well, and in yet others they were eliminated.

In the 100 meter finals Owens won and Metcalfe of Chicago was second. Helen Stephens of Missouri, in winning two heats of the women's 100 meter event broke the world record both times.

By a vote of 36 to 27 Tokio won the Olympic games for 1940, Finland being the losing bidder. The Americans, South America and the British empire were virtually solid for Japan, which offered a transportation subsidy of about $485,000 to offset costs of traveling in the Far East. The Finns urged that the games be returned to a Spartan simplicity.

Lewis and Allies Absent When A. F. of L. Council Meets

JOHN L. LEWIS, head of the United Mine Workers, and his 11 associates on the Committee for Industrial Organization, made good their promise not to be present when the executive council of the American Federation of Labor met to try them on charges of "insurrection." The council members were plainly angered by this defiance and it was predicted they would proceed to find the defendants guilty "in absentia" and to suspend the unions in the Lewis group. This would be the greatest split in the ranks of American organized labor since the federation was formed fifty years ago. It would mean the loss of about one-third of the federation's membership.

Previous to the meeting of the council President William Green in an impassioned speech accused Lewis and his followers of substituting "jungle law" for democracy in their efforts to organize the steel industry. He said he was prepared to make any personal sacrifice, even to resigning his office, to bring about peace and "bind up the wounds."

Col. Roosevelt Willing to Run for Governor

Col. Roosevelt

NEW YORK Republicans are to nominate a candidate for governor at their party convention in September, and Col. Theodore Roosevelt has said in a letter that was made public that he is willing to accept that honor if the party so desires.

Colonel Roosevelt, now forty-eight years old, was the Republican candidate for governor in 1924 and was defeated by Alfred E. Smith. Since then he has been governor of Puerto Rico and governor-general of the Philippines.

Puerto Rico Nationalists Are Found Guilty

PEDRO ALBIZU CAMPOS, leader of the Puerto Rico Nationalist party, and seven of his associates were found guilty at San Juan of a conspiracy to overthrow the United States government in the island by force and were sentenced by Federal Judge R. A. Cooper to prison terms ranging from two to six years. In the first trial of these men the jury had disagreed. The defense attorneys gave notice of appeal.

The case originated in a clash between Nationalists and police last October in which several persons were slain. Following this, Col. E. Francis Riggs, chief of insular police, was murdered, presumably in revenge for the killing of Nationalists in the October fight.

New Locarno Pact May Give Europe Security

WHILE the nations of Europe were worrying over the Spanish rebellion and the danger that it might bring about open rupture among the Fascist and anti-Fascist governments of the continent, steps were taken to assure peace. Germany and Italy accepted the invitation of Great Britain, France and Belgium to participate in a conference this fall from which it is hoped another and better Locarno pact will emerge.

No date for the conference has been set, but it was expected to be held either just before or soon after the meeting of the league of nations assembly in Geneva in September.

Zioncheck Does Not Seek Re-election to Congress

HEREAFTER Washington will have to get along without the excitement provided by the antics of Marion A. Zioncheck of Seattle, Wash. That eccentric—to put it mildly—gentleman has announced that he is not a candidate for re-election, because of his mother's ill health, and says he wants to be America's forgotten man. Zioncheck has settled down to private law practice.

Progress of Revolution in Spanish Republic

Gen. Franco

GEN. FRANCISCO FRANCO'S rebel forces in Spain, according to late reports, were pressing the government troops seriously and winning some bloody encounters. This despite the claims of Madrid that the Fascists had been checked. The rebel columns advancing on the capital from the south were reported to be threatening communications between Madrid and the eastern seacoast at Valencia and Alicante, chief sources of the government's food supplies. Leaders of the insurgents claimed they held Huelva, important seaport, and all the territory between Seville and the Portuguese border.

The government, now a red dictatorship, has taken possession of all church property and assumed control of all industry and agriculture. It also has confiscated the merchant marine to form a defense fleet. The loyalists were encouraged by victories in and around San Sabastian.

Fascist Italy has been accused of aiding the Spanish rebels, and it is asserted a number of Italian bombing planes were sent to them in Morocco. The leftist French government naturally is in sympathy with the Madrid government and Frenchmen, unarmed, have been given permission to cross the border to aid in putting down the rebellion. German and Russian sympathies, also, are ranged on opposite sides, and all this caused fears that a general war might result. France called on all other nations to preserve neutrality, and Spain warned Italy and Germany to keep hands off.

Day by day the struggle in Spain became bloodier and more ruthless. Summary executions of prisoners were common on both sides and these deaths were probably as numerous as those in battle. The government planes showered bombs on the rebel strongholds, virtually destroying many towns; and the Fascist bombers engaged in desperate fights with loyal warships.

President Roosevelt's Vacation Is Ended

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT ended his 437 mile cruise when his yacht docked at Campobello island, New Brunswick, where he has a summer home.

Mr. Roosevelt remained at Campobello only two days and then took a special train to Quebec, where he visited with Lord Tweedsmuir, governor general of Canada.

Immediately after this meeting, Mr. Roosevelt took train for his summer residence in Hyde Park, N. Y., and there began mapping the plans for his campaign for re-election. Half a dozen leaders of the Democratic party, including National Chairman James A. Farley, were summoned into conference with their chief. The President also obtained from Secretary Wallace and Chester Davis a report on drouth conditions and relief needs.

Smaller Scale Projects in New PWA Program

EMPHASIS is placed on smaller scale projects to be completed speedily, in the third building program of the public works administration, which was opened by the allotment of $22,742,034 by President Roosevelt. It includes 352 projects in 37 states, and the largest of these is a courthouse for New York city to cost the government $4,835,000. The average allotment is only $64,323.

Secretary Ickes, PWA administrator, said that, in addition to 45 per cent donation, PWA will lend $2,142,000 to help communities defray their 55 per cent share of the cost. President Roosevelt has ordered that all projects "be commenced by October 1, 1936, reach a peak by the end of the year and be completed by October 1, 1937."

Frank Knox Notified of His Nomination

Colonel Knox

FACING an enthusiastic crowd that completely filled the big Chicago stadium, Col. Frank Knox received from Senator Steiwer of Oregon the official notification of his nomination for the vice presidency by the Republican party. National Chairman John Hamilton introduced the senator, who spoke briefly but forcefully and with his customary eloeloquence. As Colonel Knox stepped forward to deliver his speech of acceptance he was greeted by a roar of applause that continued for many minutes. His fellow citizens were glad to express their gratification for the honor done him, and the thousands from outside Chicago were no less warm in their appreciation of the candidate. In the streets surrounding the stadium was another vast throng of people who, unable to get into the building, listened to the proceedings as broadcast by a loud-speaker system.

Unlike Governor Landon, Colonel Knox devoted much of his address to the alleged failures of the Roosevelt administration which, he said, had the most glorious opportunity in the history of the nation but ignored its responsibility, failed in its job and defaulted in its obligations.

"From the day that it took office," he declared, "it embarked on a series of hysterical experiments on the economic life of a burdened people. At a time when universal co-operation was a necessity it initiated a campaign of abuse and vilification of business men. At a time when the credit of the country should have been strengthened it inaugurated a policy of credit adulteration and currency experiment that demoralized foreign trade and frightened domestic finance. It set up a system of regimentation of industry that reduced production and prevented re-employment. By coercion of congress it forced the passage of reform measures so recklessly drawn that they hamstrung the revival of enterprise and paralyzed the renewal of investment. It installed a regimentation of agriculture that destroyed food and reduced foreign markets and increased the cost of living and multiplied the expense of relief.

"At a time when private industry was struggling desperately for a new start it set up governmental enterprise to compete with private business. At a time when the burden of taxation was already hard to bear it embarked on a policy of squandering public funds and increasing the weight of taxes. At a time when united effort and mutual good-will would have completed recovery it promoted sectional hatred and class strife. At a time when returning business confidence was ending depression it began a campaign to terrorize business and subjugate the banks. At a time when confidence in the character of government was vital it established a spoils system.

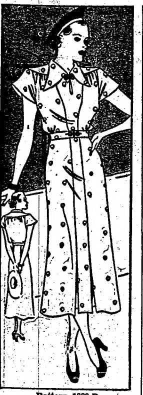
"No one can define the New Deal or even describe it. But we know what it means. It means federal control over local business, over local bank credit, over local wages, over local conditions of work. It leads to federal regimentation of the labor, the business, and the home of every American citizen. It leads to price-fixing and production control by federal authority. It leads inevitably to the extinction of the small business man, to the end of free enterprise in America."

Government Crop Report Shows Drouth Damage

THE WEEKLY crop report and weather summary of the Department of Agriculture revealed that the drouth and high temperature were playing havoc with the corn crop in most of the leading producing states. In some sections there will not even be fodder and over a much larger area no grain will be obtained this year. There were good rains, however, in parts of the central and eastern areas and improvement was noted there in both corn and pasturage.

The present drouth in Iowa, the department said, has caused greater damage to corn than that of 1934. The summary reported almost complete destruction of the crop in two southern and two western tiers of counties.

Chic Frock Slenderizes



Pattern 1889-B

Some folks use a small, round goldfish bowl with a small opening at the tip as a spatter-proof place to whip cream, beat eggs, etc.

* * *

Place a glass pie plate over the top of the kettle when making a stew. The stew may then be watched while cooking without lifting the cover or allowing steam to escape.

* * *

Drain all juices from fruits or vegetables used for salads before arranging them on the plates. Placing the food in a colander for five minutes is a good idea as then all juices will drain out quickly.

Frozen in Congress

The $10,000,000,000 in gold in the U. S. Treasury is owned by the United States and is at the disposal of congress. Congress can devote to any use it sees fit any money, in any form, "not otherwise appropriated." The gold is frozen, but it is frozen in the hands of congress and the President. Congress can repeal the legislation which produced the present situation or turn the legislation in a different direction. It can repeal the delegation of powers to the President.

Published every Thursday at St. Hilaire, Pennington Co., Minnesota

Subscribers should notify the publisher on or before expiration of subscription if discontinuance is desired, otherwise the paper will be continued.

REMITTANCES should be made by postal money order or express order, short-time subscriptions in 3-cent stamps.

SCHOOL NOTES

Because of absence of Supt. Graham, who is vacationing in southern Minnesota, there will be no band concerts until latter part of this month. The band has filled a number of outside engagements lately in addition to regular concerts, and will enjoy two weeks leisure.

A definite check on the number of students from the outlaying community who wish to be transported to St. Hilaire high school will be made about September 1st. Anyone wishing to board in town, and anyone having rooms to rent to students may make arrangements thru the superintendent's office which will be open regular hours commencing Sept. 1.

Aid Extended to Young People Thru National Youth Administration

A reorganization of the National Youth Administration of the seventh WPA district, with regard to supervision and time-reporting, has been effected by N. A. Thorson, District Supervisor. The district has been divided into six areas with each in charge of a project supervisor. In charge of Pennington, eastern Marshall, Roseau and Lake of the Woods Counties will be Marvin Benson, Thief River Falls.

Under the new setup, there will be seven distinct projects, which will include four city projects at Bemidji, Crookston, Moorhead and Fergus Falls, as well as three district-wide projects. The latter projects will provide work for youths in conservation, recreation and rural youth development. The hours of work will be 44 hours per month, and the wage scale will be slightly higher than prior to July 1st.

Youths from families certified to the Works Progress Administration, and between the ages of 18 and 25 years, are eligible to work on the youth project, providing they are out of school. The high school and college student aid will be continued again this season and applies to youths from 16 to 25 years. Application for such aid should be made through the heads of the institutions to which the youth wishes to attend. It is granted to young people who cannot attend school without financial assistance.

TRAFFIC SAFETY DRIVE IS PLANNED FOR SEPTEMBER

Reduction of traffic accidents on Minnesota highways in September will be the object of one of the most determined safety campaigns ever to be conducted in this country. Sponsored by the Minnesota Public Safety Committee, the drive will be supported by industry as a whole and by civic organizations and other groups of every type.

The campaign, actuated by the fact that September is the most hazardous month of the year, was outlined at a meeting of the Minnesota Public Safety committee at Duluth. In commenting on this latest drive of the committee to save life and property, A. V. Rohweder, chairman, pointed out that traffic mishaps took 64 lives in the state in September of last year..

"Because of the strenuous efforts of safety leaders, assisted by public cooperation, the toll was reduced to 64 in 1935 from the 83 fatalities of 1934," he pointed out. "'But, 64 persons lost their lives in unnecessary mishaps.'

The plan of the battle against the toll usually taken by accidents in September includes widespread publicity in newspapers and from radio stations and distribution of thousands of circulars and bulletins by the Minnesota Public Safety committee.

To Improve Road from Highway 1 to Viking

Assurance that the state aid road extending from Trunk Highway No. 1, familiarly known as the Viking road, will be constructed next year was officially given to a committee of Warren and Viking residents appearing before the Marshall county board of commissioners at their monthly meeting at Warren last week.

The highway has been in poor condition a number of years and is impassable much of the time during the winter months. Businessmen of Viking and Warren petitioned the commissioners for early construction which was promised, providing funds are available, next year, said A. W. Sommers, first district commissioner in whose district the road is located.

Schroeder accompanied the boys to Mankato to visit with relatives during their stay.

MARSHALL COUNTY FARMER KILLED BY LIGHTNING FRIDAY

Kenneth Bjornrud, 23, young Marshall county farmer, was instantly killed late Friday afternoon when a bolt of lightning struck him while driving a tractor plowing a field on his farm near Newfolden, says the Warren Sheaf.

Mr. Bjornrud had relieved his brother shortly before the fatal bolt struck, his brother having gone to town to attend to business. When the bolt struck he was about in the middle of the field, Bjornrud falling from the tractor which continued to the end of the field, jumped the furrow and turned around in a circle until the engine stalled.

Dr. H. M. Blegen, Marshall county coroner, was called to the scene late Friday, and after viewing the body pronounced the death as caused by lightning.

Kenneth Bjornrud, son of Ole and Turi Bjornrud, was born Jan. 23, 1913 at Newfolden. On Sept. 29, 1932 he was married to Miss Gladys Tompson of Newfolden. To their union were born two children, Marjory May, who at the time of her father's passing was three years old, and Kenmore Arlin, now one and one-half years old. The family has been residing on a farm northeast of Newfolden.

In addition to his sorrowing family who mourn his passing are five brothers, Oscar, Connuard, Elmer, Henry, all of Newfolden, Ole of Fork township, Sherden of Chicago, and two sisters, Mrs. Lonnie Hanson of Viking and Mrs. George Broten of California.

Funeral services were held at the Bethania Lutheran church in Marsh Grove Tuesday afternoon with Reverend G. P. Ronholm officiating. Many friends and relatives gathered to pay tribute to the young man.

$200,000 ADDED TO STATE ROAD BILL BY DRY WEATHER

The extended dry period this summer has increased trunk highway maintenance costs on gravel roads by at least $200,000, according to an estimate by N. W. Elsberg, state highway commissioner.

Besides adding to the cost of maintenance, the long dry spell has made it impossible to keep the gravel roads in standard condition, and has also increased the danger of fast driving, Mr. Elsberg said.

"There are nearly 5,000 miles of gravel roads in the trunk system," he stated. "These require considerable moisture during the summer months to keep them compacted and permit satisfactory blading or smoothing operations. They are now so dry that blading leaves a soft mulch on the surface which is rapidly thrown off the roads by traffic and wind. However, blading is required frequently because of the bad washboard surface which forms on the hard, dry surfaces.

"The loss of gravel from the roads this summer will be abnormally high and will result in a heavy money loss. We have also had to spend much more than usual for dust laying treatments on trunks through the smaller communities. We are sometimes asked why we do not put dust layer on all the gravel roads. It would cost us more than $2,000,000 to do this for only one season.

"The dryness has affected construction work as well as maintenance. It is almost impossible to compact new grading and graveling, which in many cases remain soft and difficult to drive over. Rains will remedy these conditions, but meanwhile safe drivers will avoid high speeds on gravel roads."

BLARING HORN WARNS OWNER HIS CAR ON FIRE

Le Center—An automobile horn is an instrument of warning, and when a short circuit in the ignition system of a car owned by Joe Knopf of Le Center started fire on the machine recently it conveniently started the horn in operation. But horns blow so much these days that the Knopf family and a number of neighbores thought little of the noise at first. The horn continued to blare forth monotonously, however, so Joe went to his garage and discovered that his car was on fire. LeCenter firemen were summoned in a hurry, but the car was badly damaged. No cause could be determined for the short circuit, so it was thought that the heat wave was even too much for a car.

Blooming Prairie.—Two babies, one 15 months old and the other 16 months old, met tragic deaths at Blooming Prairie and Brainerd last week. Darlene, 15 months old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Antl, sucked on a pad of fly killer, became sick, and was rushed to a doctor, who was unable to save her. At Brainerd, Eldred Strange, Jr. was drowned in a few inches of water in a stock tank on the farm of his parents. The baby was playing in the yard while his mother was working in the house, and accidentally tumbled into the water tank. Although discovered soon afterward, the child died before the hospital could be reached.

MANY FARMERS GET SECOND OATS CROP

An unusual and unlooked for extra feed crop is coming along in fine shape on many farms in this section. In many oat fields where the crop has been harvested, a second crop is coming on. Sufficient moisture early in the season caused the grain to stool well, but dry weather later in the season brought up only about half the usual number of stems. Recent rains have revived the roots and a second crop is now well on the way to maturity. This will provide excellent pasturage in most instances, and will also mean much additional feed for winter, if cut green.

PHEASANT SEASON OPENS OCTOBER 24

Pheasant hunting in Minnesota will begin October 24 and will last until November 13 in twelve western counties and until November 1 in 55 counties in the southern and central parts of the state, the state Conservation Commission decided at its regular meeting last week.

The nine-day season will be in effect in the following counties; Norman, Mahnomen, Clay, Becker, Wadena, Todd, Morrison, Mille Lacs, Kanabec, Pine, Stearns, Benton, Sherburne, Isanti, Chisago, Washington, Anoka, Hennepin, Wright, Meeker, Kandiyohi, Renville, McLeod, Carver, Scott, Dakota, Goodhue, Rice LeSueur, Nicollet, Brown, Redwood, Lyon, Lincoln, Pipestone, Murray, Cottonwood, Watonwan, Blue Earth, Waseca, Steele, Dodge, Olmstead, Wabasha, Winona, Houston, Fillmore, Mower, Freeborn, Faribault, Martin, Jackson, Nobles, Rock, Sibley.

The 21 day season applies only to Wilkin, Ottertail, Traverse, Grant, Douglas, Pope, Stevens, Big Stone, Swift, Chippewa, Lac Qui Parle, and Yellow Medicine. The longer season in these counties was decided upon following a survey made by Frank Blair superintendent of game propagation, which indicated a substantial increase in pheasants.

There will be no pheasant season in Lake, Cook, St. Louis, Koochiching, Lake of the Woods, Roseau, Kittson, Marshall, Beltrami, Polk, Itasca, Pennington, Red Lake, Hubbard, Clearwater.

FAREWELL PARTY

Ray Young of Red Lake Falls was the guest of honor at a farewell party given last Thursday evening at the B. M. Club rooms by members of the club. Following a brief program of short talks, a chicken dinner was enjoyed. As a token of remembrance from the club of which he had been a member since it was organized, Mr. Young was presented a suitable memento. Mr. Young and family now reside at Red Lake Falls where he is employed at the Coast to Coast store.

ONE DIES IN AUTO MISHAP NEAR TRAIL

Four young men of Red Lake Falls were involved in a serious auto accident which occured about 10 o'clock last Sunday evening while the party was returning home from Trail. Their Chevrolet coupe left the road on one of the numerous turns in the highway at that point and crashed into the ditch bank. One of the young men named Thibodeau, was instantly killed; another named Olson, a brother of the plumber at Red Lake Falls was so badly hurt that he is not expected to live. Leo Bendal suffered a broken collarbone and severe cuts. The fourth member of the party, Roy, son of the dray man at Red Lake Falls is in serious condition suffering from shock and nervous breakdown.

LOSE AT RED LAKE

The local ball team lost its game with Red Lake Falls in that city last Sunday by a score of 9 to 8. The game was a very interesting one; the score being tied at different times. A good sized delegation went down from here to witness the contest.

PLAY KITTSON NEXT

The ball team is scheduled to meet the Kittson team of Crookston on the latter's ground next Sunday. Kittson has played a good brand of ball during this season so an interesting contest is in prospect. A large group of fans plan to go down with the team.

County Fair Premium Checks Total $1,934.70

Robert J. Lund, secretary of the Pennington county fair board, late last week completed the task of sending out checks to premium winners at the 1936 fair July 28 to 31. He stated that premium payments this year aggregated $1,934.70, the total being $228 higher than for the 1935 fair. The county fair association will be reimbursed by the state to the extent of $1,550, he added.

Tales About Town

Happenings of the Week, Told in Brief. News Concerning People You Know

Some new play ground equipment has been received for use at the local school.

Monthly meeting of the board of directors of the creamery will be held at the creamery office Friday this week.

There appears to be a brisk demand for houses again this fall. At present there are none available in St. Hilaire.

Miss Pearl Simonson is spending her summer vacation here with her father, Peter Simonson, after having attended summer school at the state university.

A large number of Indians have been put at work clearing brush and other obstructions from outlet at the lake and west in preparation for the federal project which will get under way soon.

A large part of the small grain crop thruout this section has already been threshed, and practically all will be finished within a week. Some flax and sweet clover remains to be threshed later on.

Miss Lilly Johnson, accompanied by her mother and sister, Eva, Mrs. N. E. Beebe and Mrs. O. Gunstad motored Friday to Maple Lake and spent the afternoon at the Mrs. Anna Patterson cottage.

Sweet clover promises to be one of the best paying crops in this locality this season. With the exception of top seeds which have not matured well, the seed appears to be of fairly good quality.

Mr. and Mrs. Otto Johnson, accompanied by Mrs. R. L. Hauge, motored Saturday morning to Bemidji to visit relatives and friends. Upon return Sunday they were accompanied by Mrs. Joe Hauge and son, Norman, who will spend several days here with relatives. Mrs. R. L. Hauge remained at Bemidji to receive treatment for her eyes.

Visitors Tuesday evening in St. Hilaire were Mr. and Mrs. Melvin Sherva and son of Fertile, and their guests, Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Wilson and Siguard Wilson of Helena, Mont. The three latter were enroute home after attending an Eagle's convention at Chicago and stopped at Fertile for a visit with their former schoolmate, Mr. Sherva.

Both Mr. Sherva, who is publisher of the Fertile Journal, and Stanley Wilson, who is a member of the firm of Thurber Printing Company at Helena, learned the rudiments of the printing trade at the Spectator office. A very pleasant visit is acknowledged from them at this office.

Friends will be pleased to know Mrs. Axel Jacobson is improving after suffering a light stroke two weeks ago.

Altho still confined to bed, Frank Bothman is convalescing at a satisfactory rate following his recent accident where in he suffered severe burns.

Mynor Bilden of Wakonda, S. D., and three young men companions from that vicinity were here last Friday and Saturday for a visit with Mr. Bilden's uncle, A. Bilden.

Rev. and Mrs. M. L. Dahle and daughter, Grace, returned Monday evening after having spent a two weeks' vacation at their summer cottage on Sauk lake near Sauk Center.

Mr. and Mrs. Ben Jacobson and son, John Olson and Miss Mikkelson of Hibbing are here for a visit at the V. G. Brink, Axel Jacobson and Gunnard Lindquist homes.

Ed. Christensen has made a deal whereby he sold his interest in the Cities Service Oil Station to Walter and Ed. Folden of Newfolden. Change of management is expected to be made within a short time. Mr. Christensen and family plan to move to a farm northwest of Thief River Falls.

Stanley Olsen, who has been employed at Fargo during the summer months, arrived Monday for a short visit with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Olsen before leaving for Judson, N. D., where he has been reelected superintendent of the village school. Before coming here, he had spent a short time visiting at the home of his brother, Harvey, in Chicago.

BACK FROM MONTANA

O. W. Brink, oldtime resident of this community, who has been engaged in ranching near Eight Point, Mont., for the past fifteen years or more, arrived here a few days ago for an indefinite visit at the homes of his sons, Albert and Victor. Mr. Brink's ranch lands are in the area which will be flooded by the Fort Peck federal dam project, and he expects to discontinue his ranching activities for a time at least. Mr. Brink states drought conditions are bad in parts of Montana this year and that large numbers of cattle are being sent to market because of shortage of feed.

GOV. FLOYD OLSON IS CRITICALLY ILL

Rushed back by airplane to the Mayo hospital at Rochester following a ten day stay at his Gull Lake summer home, Governor Floyd Olson is reported to be critically ill. Members of his family as well as close personal friends have been called to his bedside. While no statements as to nature of the governor's malady, nor more than brief bulletins concerning his condition have been given out by the Mayo clinic, it is generally understood his condition is grave and that there are little or no hopes entertained for his recovery.

HERE FROM KANSAS

Mr. and Mrs. Ed Carlson and children motored here last week from their home at Morganville, Kansas, to visit a few weeks at the home of Mrs. Carlson's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Joe Patton. Mr. Carlson states crop conditions are not so good in his state this season. With exception of one small area in southwestern Minnesota, he said, this section looked the best of all territory thru which they traveled.

FOREST FIRES UNDER CONTROL

Recent rains over most sections of northern Minnesota have been a great help in bringing forest and brush fires under control. While bog fires are still burning in the country northeast of here, the pall of smoke which had spread over this section the past two weeks, has almost disappeared which indicates the fires are being brot under control.

HERE FROM CHICAGO

Mr. and Mrs. Sam Wiley and children, and Mrs. Harry Lucas of Chicago were visitors last Sunday at the N. E. Beebe home. They are also visiting with friends at Crookston and with relatives in North Dakota while on this trip. Mrs. Wiley and Mrs. Lucas will be recalled by former St. Hilaire people as Ila and Marjorie Jones.

EXTRACTING BIG HONEY CROP HERE

August Berglund, Al. Brink and Harry Winter, local apiarists, have commenced operation of their honey extracting plant to care for a bumper crop from their different stands. Combined output of the local apiaries is expected to reach about two carloads for this season. The honey is of exceptionally fine quality, light colored and fine flavored, which is so much desired on the market. There is much hard work connected with taking care of a honey crop even with the modern method of extracting and packaging now in use.

FORMER RESIDENT DIES IN SAN DIEGO

Dr. E. F. Dann, former resident here, and who has resided the past eleven years at San Diego, Calif., died Friday at his home in that city after suffering a heart attack. He was 91 years of age at the time of his death.

Dr. and Mrs. Dann came to this community from South Dakota some years ago after he had acquired extensive real estate holdings east of the village which he disposed of before going to California to spend his declining years. Dr. Dann saw service in the medical corps during the Civil War and later practiced his profession for many years in South Dakota before coming here. He was held in high esteem by all who knew him here, and all old friends in this community will be pained to learn of his death.

MEMORIAL PROGRAM

On Sunday, Aug. 23rd, the Tenth Annual Observance of the Monson Lake Memorial Association will be held at Monson Lake Memorial Park, 4 miles southwest of Sunburg and 11 miles northeast of Kerkhoven to pay tribute to the memory of those brave pioneers who were massacred by Indians on that particular spot on August 20th, 1862. This observance is of especial interest to many people here who lost relatives during the Indian outbreak of 1862. The late Mrs. Anna Stina Peterson of St. Hilaire, was one of the last survivors of the massacre in which all other members of her immediate family lost their lives. A splendid program has been arranged for the observance this year.

Earliest Glass Valued

The earliest known American glass is rarer than any jewel to a collector. It was made in the Jamestown colony in 1608 by Dutch and Polish glass blowers imported to make glass beads and rum bottles to trade with the Indians.

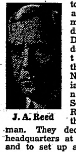
Jeffersonian Democrats Band Together

FORTY - THREE Democrats, most of them prominent nationally or locally and representing twenty states, gathered in Detroit to tell one another and the world how much and why they disliked the New Deal. After two days of conferring, they organized themselves as the National Jeffersonian Democrats and named Former Senator James A. Reed of Missouri as their national chairman. They decided to establish headquarters at once in St. Louis and to set up an organization in every state. Then they gave out a 1,500 word declaration or platform in which they declared they "will not support for re-election the candidates of the Philadelphia convention for President and vice president, and we call upon all loyal and sincere Democrats to consider the question of their duty to their country in the approaching election with the same earnestness that has guided our delibrations—joining with us if they feel that our conclusions are sound and our anxiety for the future of our party and our country is justified."



J. A. Reed

The name of Governor Landon was not mentioned in the declaration, but a number of its signers are openly supporting the Republican candidate. Among these are Joseph B. Ely, Col. Henry Breckinridge, John Henry Kirby of Texas and Robert S. Bright of Maryland. However, the avowed prime objective of the Jeffersonians is the defeat of President Roosevelt and the restoration of the Democratic party to its status before the New Dealers captured it. Their declaration is unsparing in its denunciation of Mr. Roosevelt's course and the policies of his administration.

Bar Association Split on New Deal Legislation

WHEN the American Bar association convenes in Boston soon it will receive two widely differing reports from a special committee named to study the effects of New Deal legislation on the rights and liberties of citizens. They were made public in Washington. The majority report, signed by John D. Clark, Cheyenne, Wyo.; Fred H. Davis, Tallahassee, Fla.; George L. Buist, Charleston, S. C., and Charles P. Taft II., Cincinnati, Ohio., "deplored" the action of President Roosevelt in reducing congress to a "rubber stamp" body to carry through his progrem.

"Novel legislative and governmental trends of the New Deal are just as uncertain today as they were two years ago," the report said. "Laws specifically proposed as emergency measures with limited life have been declared by important members of the administration to be the beginning of permanent changes in national policy.

"There has been a continuing conflict between such officials as to whether a new social and economic order is in the making or the old institutions are being perfected so that they may be preserved."

These findings were challenged by Kenneth Wynne, New Haven, Conn.; Fred L. Williams, St. Louis, Mo., and James G. McGowen of Jackson, Miss. In their minority report they said: "If the purpose of the resolution creating the special committee was to get the opinion of the American Bar association regarding legislative trends designed to meet changing economic conditions, the report is superficial. It does not deal with the problem but concerns itself with a short range attack on surface trivialities."

Congressman Zioncheck Commits Suicide

MARION A. ZIONCHECK brought to an end in characteristic manner his checkered career and his life. He leaped to his death from a window of his office in Seattle shortly after he had filed for re-nomination to the congressional seat he had held for two terms. His friends attributed the suicide to worry over a psychiatrist's advice that he take a long rest from politics. His trouble had been diagnosed as dementia praecox.

American Track Team Victor in Olympics

EIGHT days of track competition that brought out many record-breaking performances showed that the American team was unbeatable in the matter of total points. These Yankee athletes piled up a total of 203 points. Finland was second with 80 1-4, Germany third with 69 3-4 and Japan fourth with 51 13-22. Jesse Owens, the marvelous colored lad from Ohio State university, captured four gold medals for firsts in the 100 meter and 200 meter runs and the broad jump and for pacing the winning American quartet in the 400 meter relay. The decathlon was won by Glenn Morris of Denver.

Japan captured the most highly prized Olympic championship when Kitei Son, young Corean student, won the marathon race over a very tough course and in the record time of 2 hours 29 minutes 19.2 seconds. The distance was 26 miles and 385 yards.

Among the women contestants Helen Stephens of Missouri distinguished herself by breaking the world record in two heats of the 100-meter dash.

Commerce Department on Recovery and Public Debt

SECRETARY OF COMMERCE ROPER'S department has just put out a "world economic review" for 1935 which contains many interesting statements. It says, for instance, that future business prospects are conditioned in part upon the possibility of narrowing the gap between government expenditures and receipts. It asserted that "the government deficit springs from the root of unemployment, which is still the major problem confronting the country.

A. P. Sloan

As to "the part played in the recovery to date by the heavy government expenditures," the report said:

"This question is not easily answered, but it is certain that such outlays have had an influence in many directions — for example, on retail sales, on farm income, on the growth of bank deposits and on the prevailing level of interest rates."

The latter statements may well be compared with the report of Alfred P. Sloan, president of General Motors, to the stockholders. Business recovery throughout the world — in which the United States has participated — is being generated by a combination of various factors, Mr. Sloan explains. In this country the automobile industry has been helped, he says, by principal influences. Only one of these, he points out, has its roots in the New Deal financial schemes and he finds that particular influence a bad one because it creates a temporary fool's paradise in which sales and earnings are ballooned by extraordinary government expenditures.

Asserting that political extravagance has created a highly undesirable and artificial stimulus, Mr. Sloan urges that such spending be halted before it is too late to stave off disaster.

Oil Men and Companies Accused of Conspiracy

CHARGED by the government with conspiracy to violate the anti-trust law by combining to dominate the purchasing of oil in the Texas, Louisiana and Oklahoma fields and to fix prices of gasoline in the Middle West, 58 persons, 23 petroleum concerns and three publishing companies were indicted by a federal grand jury in Madison, Wis. Among the prominent defendants are Edward G. Seubert of Chicago, president of the Standard Oil Company of Indiana; Henry M. Dawes of Evanston, Ill., president of the Pure Oil company, and many officials of Standard Oil, Pure Oil, Deep Rock, Socony-Vacuum and various other oil concerns and their subsidiaries. Also in the list are Warren C. Platt of Cleveland, publisher of the National Petroleum News and Platt's Oilgram; his two publications and the Chicago Journal of Commerce.

H. M. Dawes

The indictment charged that the defendant oil companies formed pools in the east Texas and mid-continent fields for the purpose of purchasing gasoline at artificially high prices from independent producers, and in furtherance of such a scheme were members of associations which included the independents. Further it was charged that independent refiners to aid the plan, had curtailed their production of gasoline.

This, said Mr. Platt, is exactly what the oil companies did with the approval of Secretary of the Interior Harold L. Ickes, administrator of the NRA petroleum code, when efforts were being made to limit the production of gasoline, prevent the flow of excess quota oil into market channels, and raise prices in that turbulent industry.

"The government's charge turns on whether a practice legally started and carried on under the recent NRA petroleum code was continued in illegal manner after the NRA was killed by the United States Supreme court," Mr. Platt said.

Two American Authors Called by Death

LINCOLN STEFFENS, long prominent as a journalist, writer and lecturer, died at Carmel, Calif., at the age of seventy. He was creator of the so-called muckraking school of journalism and in many magazine articles he exposed the corruption in municipal politics.

Another well known American writer, Arthur B. Reeve, passed away at his home in Trenton, N. J. He gained fame by his crime and mystery stories.

President Resents Charge of Politics in Relief

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT was visibly aroused by Republican charges that the New Dealers were seeking to reap political profit from the drouth conditions. At his press conference he broke with the usual rule by permitting himself to be directly quoted as saying:

"It is a great disservice to the proper administration of any government to link up human misery with partisan politics."

The President announced that he would hold a series of regional conferences with governors of states in the drouth area; and naturally Governor Landon, his Republican opponent, will be among those he will meet. It was believed they would come together about Labor day in Des Moines, with the governors of Iowa, Nebraska, Oklahoma and Missouri. Mr. Landon said he would accept the President's invitation to such a conference.

Senator Keyes, New Hampshire, to Retire From Office

SENATOR HENRY W. KEYES of New Hampshire has announced that he is not a candidate for reelection by the Republicans, prefering "to retire from active participation in public affairs." The Republicans therefore will choose between former Senator George H. Moses and Gov. H. Styles Bridges, both of whom have announced their candidacy for the nomination.

Kansas Republicans renominated Senator Arthur Capper, and the Democrats picked Omar Ketchum of Topeka. In Kentucky the Democrats renominated Senator M. M. Logan, whose Republican opponent in November will be Robert H. Lucas.

Ten "Rebel" Unions Are Suspended From A. F. of L.

UNLESS John L. Lewis and his associates in the Committee for Industrial Organization repent and cease their "rebellious" activities before September 5, the ten unions they head will be under suspension from the American Federation of Labor. Such was the verdict of the federation's executive council which passed on the charges of John P. Frey, president of the metal trades division, that the CIO was "fomenting insurrection and rebellion." David Dubinsky, head of the garment workers, cast the only vote against the suspension order.

J. P. Frey

Lewis having definitely set himself against any peace overtures, it appeared that the suspension certainly would be put into effect. The next move will be up to the Tampa convention in the fall, which will be asked to vote the expulsion of the refractory unions.

The ten unions accused by Mr. Frey and found guilty are:

United Mine Workers.

Amalgamated Clothing Workers, Sidney Hillman, president.

Oil Field, Gas Well, and Refinery Workers, Harvey Fremming, president.

Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers, Thomas H. Brown, president.

Ladies' Garment Workers, David Dubinsky, president.

Textile Workers, Thomas F. Mc Mahon, president.

Flat Glass Workers, Glen McCabe, president.

Iron, Steel, and Tin Workers, M. F. Tighe, president.

Automobile Workers, Homer Martin, president.

Rubber Workers, S. H. Dalrymple, president.

Lewis characterized the council's action as one of "incredible and crass stupidity" and said that it was "dictated by personal selfishness and frantic fear."

Fierce Fighting in the Spanish Civil War

DESPERATE fighting for possession of the passes in the Guadarrama mountains north of Madrid was going on between the government forces and the rebel troops. Loyalist soldiers were hurried to that region, and Madrid claimed some victories. However, the Fascists on the northern side of the range were said to be within sight of the capital and in position for a vigorous advance.

The rebels scored in the south by landing 2,000 Moroccan troops from Ceuta after a lively sea and air fight in which two loyalist warships were driven off. The loyalists were also reported to have met defeat near Avila, losing 600 men and some tanks and trucks.

On the twentieth day of the rebellion the government announced it had captured the provinces of Catalonia, Valencia, Murcia, Malaga, Ciudad Real, Guadalajara, Badajoz and the northern resort city of San Sebastian.

Atwater—Thousands of persons gathered in this community for the watermelon festival. A carload of watermelon was served free as a continuous program of entertainment drew the attention of the throng.

St. Paul—State conservation department officials reported that young ducks and pheasants are dying because of lack of rain as a special study was begun to determine what protective measures should be sought.

Duluth—Minnesota fishermen were given 200,000 more possible catches when that number of lake trout were planted in northern lakes. The trout were raised at the St. Paul and Lanesboro hatcheries. Planting of stream trout has been postponed until waters become cooler.

Moorhead—Minnesota is confronted with an acute drouth situation endangering the safety of northwestern communities in the depleted water supply for domestic use and fire fighting, members of the state executive council emphasized as relief measures were considered.

Minneapolis—Ducks are dying by the thousands along Minnesota dried-up ditches and ponds, state conservation department officials say. Drouth conditions are giving increasing impetus to a statewide movement for a closed duck season this fall. Pheasants, too, are seriously affected.

Badoura—Ready to repair the ravages of forest fire now raging in some parts of Minnesota, more than 11,000,000 pine and spruce seedlings are at Badoura nursery waiting for all planting, Grover M. Conzet, director of the state division of forestry, announced. Norway pine, white pine, jack pine and white spruce are included among the seedlings.

International Falls—American fire fighters were sent across the international boundary to help Canadians lay a protective barrier in the path of flames sweeping south to the Superior National forest on Minnesota soil. Two hundred men were ordered across the border by R. U. Harmon, forest supervisor, to bolster a force of 125 Canadians.

Minneapolis—Financing of the government's seed buying program, through an RFC loan of $10,000,000 for purchase of 8,000,000 bushels of seed grains to be distributed among northwest farmers, will be completed within a week. Buying will start immediately after, F. R. Wilcox of Washington, head of the Federal Surplus Commodities corporation, said here.

The 1,600,000 acres embrace one of the last American wildernesses. The area is located in northeastern Minnesota across parts of St. Louis, Cook and Lake counties. It is one of the biggest remaining tracts of virgin timber in America. Wild moose still tample its paths. Its streams, portages and lakes form the finest canoeing territory in America.

Winona—Extension of the upper Mississippi river wild life and fish refuge to include an additional 6,000 acres of land was made in a transfer of management of the area from the war department to the United States biological survey by executive order of President Roosevelt. Superintendent Ray C. Steele of the refuge was notified that the land lying in the pools of the Alma, Wis., and Whitman, Minn., nine-foot channel dams will hereafter be included in the migratory waterfowl flyway refuge which extends for 300 miles from Wabasha to Rock Island, Ill. The area, including famous Lost island, when added to the holdings of the refuge will comprise an expanse of water with acreage larger than Lake Pepin.

St. Paul—Heavy gains in state income tax collections plus a larger legislative appropriation increased state and federal aid to Minnesota schools from $11,274,614 for the year ending June 30, 1935, to $14,261,078 for the year ending last June 30. This was disclosed in the annual financial statement of the state department of education for its fiscal year ending June 30. The legislative appropriation was $750,000 greater than in the previous year, while the schools' share of the income tax was more than $3,000,000.

Luminous Legend of the Married Man Who "Went Saturday"

PEIPING

LET it not be said that the Chinese lack a sense of humor. The following tale, told by a professional story teller, holding forth at one of the fairs held on the outskirts of the city, was translated to me by the ricksha boy whose job it was to see that I didn't walk myself to death. Herewith the legend of The Man Who Went Saturday:

Wu Chi Chen, the son of a silk merchant, decided, upon the death of his father, to spend his patrimony in making one particular woman happy. With his fine eye for loveliness, he selected the belle of the village and led her to the altar. When the marriage ceremony was over and the guests were in the midst of merrymaking, Wu, all unconscious of the effect that his remarks would have upon those assembled, arose and made the announcement that henceforth he would make Saturday, the day of his marriage, memorable by bestowing upon the bride each succeeding Saturday during the whole of his lifetime a gift of price.

The bride clapped her hands in joy. Others of the company remained silent. Wu, seeing that his declaration was ill advised, passed it off with a mere gesture until he found opportunity to ask his best man what had caused the strange quiet.

"You're Nutty" Warns Pal

"You are crazy," said the friend "Who ever heard of such bondage? If you survive for thirty years, that means 1,560 Saturdays spent in pleasing one woman. I doubt very much that you will get through the first year. And besides, it is a bad example. It may have sounded good to the women, but no man alive can ever again look upon you with anything save mistrust."

"What care I so long as I hold the love of a perfect woman," said the groom.

"You poor nut," quoth the best man, who was frank in all his opinions, "you won't even hold your sanity. There is no such thing as a perfect woman. In a few short months your powers of selection will begin to fail. What to buy for her; where to buy it, and what to say when you present it, will begin to gnaw at your imagination.

"You will spend Thursday and Friday thinking about the approaching Saturday, and on Sunday and Monday you will writhe in agony at having made a possible bad selection in what you brought home. That you will get in Dutch with every other married man in town is, of course, a lead pipe cinch. And your wife will win the hatred of other women. It doesn't take much to see where you will bring up in this town."

"Your remarks are ill advised and offensive. I am far from convinced that there is cause for alarm. I shall beset myself with serenity . . ."

Too Many Saturdays

"Until next Saturday" interrupted the best man, rising, "and from then on, the rest of your days you will be on the way to becoming the battiest Chinaman among the four hundred and sixty million inhabitants of this country. You have gone completely kaffooie and I'm not seeing you again if it can be avoided."

So saying, the outspoken friend grabbed his hat and fled from the premises, followed by other guests who had taken similar alarm at Wu's foolhardy declaration.

And it came to pass after an expiration of a few months that Wu discovered the presence of more Saturdays than there were suitable gifts for "the perfect beautiful woman." Tradesmen from far and wide appeared in Wu's home town bringing many costly and beautiful creations offered for cash. The idea being to keep Wu's bride quiet throughout the week and hysterically happy of a Saturday. The procession of vendors that flocked to Wu's front door increased steadily until Wu instructed his servants not to answer the bell.

Old Friends Are Chilly

One by one, all the old friends of the bridegroom gave him the cold eye, until hardly anybody bothered to pass the time of day with him. His one monotonous query, "What is there under the sun that will make a suitable present for one's wife?" had done its diabolical work. It got so that whenever Wu Chi Chen showed up, all married men excused themselves and faded out.

One Saturday night, very late, after the bride had retired, The Man Who Went Saturday came home, quite drunk, crawled into his bed and slept peacefully for twelve hours.

At this juncture, my ricksha boy began to rock with laughter. I choked him off long enough to ask if Lord Saturday had brought home the usual week-end present.

"No, him forgettum, all same eveley man who like ketchum plenty sleep."

What Irvin S. Cobb Thinks about

Debunking War's Romance

SANTA MONICA, CALIF.—Mrs. "Bud" Lighton, one of the smartest women on this or any other coast, has started a symposium of suggestions for the promotion of national sanity the next time diplomats or politicians, profiteers or professional sword rattlers, or all of these types combined, try to rush a country into futile and uncalled for war—which classification covers most wars.

Her peace formula includes these ideas:

Irvin S. Cobb

No brass bands whatsoever. No speech-making by stay-at-home orators. No recruiting except by men who have themselves enlisted for active service. No brass buttons. No shiny buckles, no gaudy regalia. Respect for the flag and, if necessary, all proper defense for it, but no cheap waving of it beforehand. No blatant emotional displays being turned off or on like a hydrant. Reason to be invoked rather than mob-steria.

Red Baiters' Field Day

A GENTLEMAN in Iowa, who presumably inquired into the matter, asserts that in this country are upwards of 4,000,000 aliens who entered illegally and that the vast majority of these —over 90 per cent, are on relief. While we're fighting corn borers and tobacco worms and boll weevils with government funds, wouldn't it be a grand idea to turn a lot of G-men loose to round up these smuggled-in human parasites and ship them back where they came from?

Locally speaking, I'm told that the average foreign-born agitator, ostensibly seeking to organize the casual workers of this state, is really a red agent spreading communistic doctrines under cover of his seeming activities in the industrial field. In other words, his real aim is not to unionize labor but to disunionize America.

Watson, the fly-swatter and the insect poison—quick!

The League's Big Moment

AT LAST here's a chance for the League of Nations to function. For the poor thing it has been an uphill pull to slide down hill so steadily, with each descending step toward the bottom marked by disappointment and failure. It had almost as tough sledding as a smooth-faced, bearded lady would have trying to get a job in a museum.

But now, the league can punish at least one small nation for persistently breaking the otherwise solid front presented by nearly all the important European powers. Surely, ere long, it will hang some sort of penalty on little, simple-minded Finland for regularly paying installments on her debt to us.

This disruptive thing cannot possibly be permitted to go on forever when the sacred principles of dishonor, ingratitude and repudiation are all at stake!

Paging the Black Legion

IT IS passing strange that the Black Legion is so slow about offering Herr Hitler honorary membership in the mother-lodge up in Michigan. Both parties seem to feel alike on the subject of persons of color.

Meanwhile just so long as they didn't try to stop him from shaking those nimble feet our brown-skinned flying squirrel, Jesse Owens, should worry because a dictator refuses to shake his hand.

With Metcalfe and other dark colleagues helping him pile up so commanding a lead for the American team in the Olympic games, it's almost time for the band to play "All Gawd's Chillun Got Wings."

Synthetic Spanish Hidalgoes

AND the famous Santa Barbara fiesta fiesting on every side and yours truly looking as much like a Spanish hidalgo as anybody born in McCracken county, Ky., could be expected to look.

Plenty of other disturbing occurrences, too. Heat wave still hanging on in spots. Fresh European complications on account of the Spanish mess.

Down at his home on the range where seldom is heard a discouraging word—except from Washington, D. C.—we behold Uncle Jack Garner, with his head over the corral bars, beginning to moo plaintively.

And now, on top of all that, it seems we must start worrying about Tommy Manville's next wife or wives, as the case may be—and probably will.

I do wish Tommy could see his way clear to hold off till fall. If memory serves me aright, the fall always was his favorite marrying season, anyhow.

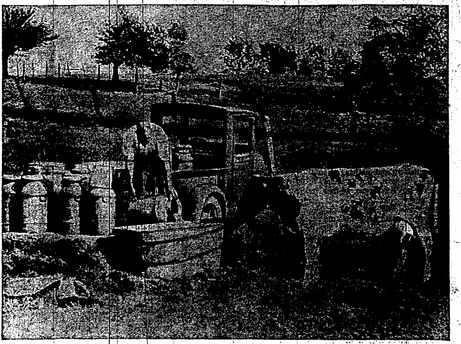
Water Carried for Miles to Thirsty Cattle



A common scene now in the central New York farm district is that of farmers hauling water from reservoirs many miles away to save the lives of their parched stock. Here is Bert Cardwell, of Onondaga Hill, filling up a tank for his cattle. All springs and wells in the district went dry as the result of the greatest dry spell in the history of the country.

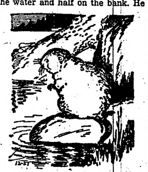
BEDTIME STORY FOR CHILDREN

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

JERRY HAS A SAD AWAKENING

THE stranger had visited the Smiling Pool as he had been doing for more than a week. Jerry Muskrat had kept right on working on his house. All the time he had kept a bright eye on the stranger to see what he was doing. As usual the stranger visited each of Jerry's favorite eating places. It seemed to Jerry that he was at each a little longer than usual, but Jerry didn't think anything of that.

Just as soon as the stranger had left Jerry swam straight over to a certain old log which lay half in the water and half on the bank. He felt sure that on the upper part of that old log he would find some pieces of apple or carrot. He wasn't disappointed. His nose told him they were there even before he could see them. Now ordinarily Jerry climbed right up that old log out of the water, but this time he didn't. It just happened so, that was all. He climbed out on the bank beside the log and then up on the log. There he sat down and began to eat. My, how good those pieces of apple and carrot did taste! You see, Jerry had been working very hard and he had a splendid appetite.



Finally He Twisted Around to See What Held Him. It Was a Trap.

At first he sat facing the water. After a while he changed his position so that his back was to the water and his tail dropped down in the water where it covered the lower part of that old log.

Snap! With a squeal of pain and fright Jerry jumped right up in the air. He lost his balance and fell off the old log. Then he tried to scramble away. He couldn't. Something was holding him by his tail and pinching it most dreadfully. Jerry was too frightened to think. He couldn't imagine what dreadful thing had got him. He pulled and pulled until it seemed to him that he must pull his tail out by the roots. Finally he twisted around to see what held him. It was a trap! The stout cruel jaws of it were gripping his tail about an inch from the end.

Then Jerry understood. He awakened to the truth, and it was a sad awakening. That stranger was a trapper after all. He had been putting those good things there for Jerry so that he would get so used to finding them that his suspicions would be put to sleep. When he was quite sure that Jerry had grown careless and was no longer suspicious of traps he had placed a trap on that old log just under water.

If Jerry had climbed up on that old log as usual he would have stepped in that trap and been caught by a leg. As it was, he had accidentally sprung it with his tail. Being caught by the tail was bad enough, but it would have been worse to have been caught by a leg, though Jerry didn't stop to think of this at the time. So far as he could see it didn't make any difference how he was caught as long as he was caught.

Poor Jerry! He was so frightened that for the time being he hardly noticed the pain.

The Kitchen Cabinet

VARIOUS GOOD THINGS

HERE is a cottage cheese pie that everybody will like, because it is different:

Beat three eggs, add one cupful of cottage cheese, nine tablespoonfuls of sugar, one cupful of freshly grated coconut, one teaspoonful of nutmeg, a cupful of coconut milk and a cupful of rich milk, or use as much of the milk as the nut contains and add enough cow's milk to make two cupfuls of liquid. Add a pinch of salt and more sugar if it is not sweet enough. A grating of lemon peel may be used instead of the nutmeg if that is not liked. Pour into a deep pastry lined pie plate and bake as for custard pie.

Crisp Molasses Cookies

Take two and one-half cupfuls of pastry flour, one-fourth cupful of bread flour, one teaspoonful each of baking powder and salt, two teaspoonfuls of ginger, then sift all again. Heat one cupful of molasses, add one-half cupful of butter and two teaspoonfuls of soda. Add the flour gradually and when well mixed, chill. Roll very thin and cut with a cooky cutter. Bake ten minutes.

Orange Sponge Cake

Beat two egg yolks with four tablespoonfuls of orange juice and one-half tablespoonful of lemon juice until thick; mix three-fourths of a cupful of sugar with one-half teaspoonful of grated orange rind and add gradually to the egg yolks; add the stiffly beaten whites of the eggs and cut and fold in one cupful of flour, sifted four times with one-fourth of a teaspoonful of soda. Pour into a buttered cake pan and bake in a moderate oven.

Lemon Pie

Take one and one-half cupfuls of bread crumbs, cover with one cupful of boiling water and let stand until soft. Mix one cupful of sugar and one and one-half teaspoonfuls of cornstarch, add two egg yolks well beaten and the juice and grated rind of a lemon. Combine the mixtures and make in one crust.

British Blow Up Jaffa Danger Zone

This unusual picture shows houses in Jaffa, Palestine, being blown into the air by the force of an explosion. In one week 150 houses in the old city were blown up by British troops as part of their plan for the defense of Palestine. Steel helmeted troops armed with machine guns surrounded the old city during the operation.

ALL THE SAD

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

WE TALK so much about the mass,
As though the lowly were a class,
The high exempted from all care.
I stood beside a casket where
A rich man lay. I heard the sob
Of her whom death had come to rob;
It seemed to sound, that sob of pain,
Much like a widow's in a lane.

However money may appear,
There is no difference in a tear
Nor in the heartbreak of a wife.
All men are rich, all who have life,
All men are poor, whom life has fled.
For who would rather lie there dead
Within a silver casket than
To walk abroad, earth's poorest man?

To one great class my heart goes out:
The lover who has cause to doubt,
The woman with a widow's weeds,
Whatever heart however bleeds—
And you will find them, rich or poor,
Within the mansion, on the moor.
I wish our talk of classes had
Room for them all, for all the sad.

Mount Ararat Twin-Peaked

Mount Ararat is a twin-peaked mountainous area situated where Armenia and Persia meet, south of the Caucausus range. It is noteworthy for its extensiveness rather than its height, the highest peak being something under 17,000 feet. The mountain is of volcanic origin. Its lower regions are inhabited and the summits have been repeatedly ascended and thoroughly explored. The usual statement that Noah's Ark rested on Mount Arrat has no foundation in the Hebrew text, which reads "on the mountains of Ararat." In ancient times Ararat was the name of a district in eastern Armenia, and sometimes also for all Armenia and the mountain ridge in the southern part of that country.

ROBOT CHARTS HOT BELT HIGH IN AIR

See New Possibilities for Speed Plane Route.

Sydney, Australia.—Radio experiments just completed by Dr. D. F. Martyn and Dr. O. O. Pulley of Sydney university have demonstrated the possibility of exploring the entire stratosphere for a distance of 150 miles above the earth without the necessity of further dangerous ascensions.

Except for the possibility of ascertaining whether the stratosphere constitutes a medium for speedy aerial travel, the two Sydney scientists are convinced that all necessary information about the earth's upper atmosphere can now be obtained from the earth itself.

Under the system invented and thoroughly demonstrated by Doctor Martyn, the upper air can now be probed by radio signals.

His new method gives accurate data on the amount of electrification, the amount of ozone and the temperature throughout the whole thickness of the upper air from 22 up to 150 miles.

Robot Does All Work

The new type apparatus which Doctor Martyn has perfected consists of a robot that sends out signals, catches the echoes, varies the wave lengths and plots all the information obtained on a tiny chart.

One of the first discoveries made by Doctor Martyn with his new invention was that there is still another cold layer of air far above the stratosphere cold layer recently reached by Russian and American balloonists. Between the two cold layers there lies sandwiched a warm layer and it is in this latter that Doctor Martyn thinks that stratosphere flying might become a possibility.

According to the radio records made by Doctor Martyn, temperatures again dip in the second stratosphere above the warm-zone layer, reaching a minimum at 50 miles above the earth's surface.

From these upward the temperatures increase till they end in a torrid zone at 150 miles of altitude.

Former Theory Upset

On this latter heated zone Doctor Martyn's radio reports contradict the belief of Professor Appleton, who was convinced this zone was hot only in summer. Martyn's experiments show that the seasonal drop is only from 1,300 to 1,000 degrees.

As a consequence, Doctor Martyn declares, that the earth is perpetually girdled by a fiery ring of inconceivably rarefied air, in which, necessarily, no human activity could ever be hoped for.

Measurements of the upper ozone show fluctuations exactly corresponding to barometric measures on the ground, but antedating them. As a consequence weather forecasts, Doctor Martyn declares, can be made from these radio probes of the air.

Australian authorities are so impressed with Doctor Martyn's findings that modern ozone measures are now being installed at the commonwealth weather bureau, the solar observatory at Canberra and at the installation of the council for scientific and industrial research.

Separation Suit Filed 28 Years Ago Dismissed

New York.—Twenty-eight years ago Mrs. Georgia Raynor sued Valentine R. Raynor for a separation, but neglected to prosecute it, and it was never placed on the court calendar.

Through all the years the husband sent her $8 a week for maintenance of herself and a child. But recently he moved in supreme court to have the wife's suit dismissed.

Mrs. Raynor, now 54, living in Columbus, Ohio, appeared before Justice Louis A. Valente to oppose the husband's motion and pleaded that she was without means of support.

Faced with the unusual circumstances the justice regretfully granted the husband's motion, adding:

"While I am granting the motion to dismiss, I am doing so with a strong hope that he will continue to make his remittances to his wife as heretofore in the spirit which can no longer be deemed one of compulsion, and in vindication of the opinion the court on the whole has formed of his basic sense of honor."

Canada Builds Largest of Steam Locomotives

Montreal.—The world's largest streamlined steam locomotive, 94 feet long, weighing 650,000 pounds, and capable of attaining a speed of 100 miles an hour, has been completed here.

The engine is one of four being constructed for the Canadian National railway, and will be the first "streamliner" placed in operation in Canada. It is known as the No. 6400. The design follows the streamlining plan developed by the national research council at Ottawa and the motive department of the C. N. R. It was selected after an exhaustive series of wind-tunnel and other tests.

Ira Vail, former star auto race driver, was recalling old times. Among his memories is one of sailing through a barbed wire fence, which practically denuded him, and landing in the ample lap of a fat lady. He came to before the woman who acted as a cushion recovered her poise, and was bundled hurriedly into an ambulance. In the mad dash to the hospital, he was ten times more scared than he ever had been in a race! Such incidents were not uncommon in the lives of racing drivers of former days and were looked on as "funny," rather than grim. Vail chuckled when he recalled how Louis Disbrow, after a spill, had been carted to the morgue just as good as dead, only to sit up on his slab and throw the attendants into confusion by demanding a cigarette. Then there was Ralph De Palma whose car careened off a New England track. He was picked up with a cornstalk through his stomach and was thought to be fatally injured. But he married his nurse.

• • •

Ivy Overholtzer, of Los Angeles, has the most novel combination around race tracks, Vail believes. He operates an undertaking establishment and turns his hearse into an ambulance merely by changing the signs. He's a great pal of the drivers.

"People have asked me many times what makes a man become a racing driver," Vail said. "I think the best answer is a crack made by one of the boys—'you don't have to be crazy but it helps.' "

• • •

This doesn't concern Vail or other race drivers but it seems to fit in at this particular point. An out of town couple was enjoying a ride through Central park in one of those throw-backs to old days that have their stand near the Plaza—a horse and carriage. The passengers noticed that the driver called his horse Frank and finally asked him what had caused him to give his animal such a name.

"You see," replied the driver, flicking the animal's ear lightly with the whiplash, "my best friend's name was Frank."

Bob Hope, who played in vaudeville theaters all over the country before appearing in the "Follies" and other B'way musicals, believes that the present generation has forgotten that form of entertainment. Says Hope:

"The young folks of today think that 'next-to-closing' is a bankruptcy sale, that a 'sketch' is a drawing and, for all they know, the 'Two Black Crows' were a couple of birds that stole corn from farmers. They think a 'pit musician' is a guy who plays in a mine and when they hear the expression 'working in one,' they ask, 'One what?' To them 'bow music' is what comes from a violin and they believe that only a sheriff can 'stop the show.' The only 'acts' they know about are those passed by congress and to them a 'double' is a horse parlay."

• • •

Speaking of terms, it seems that swing music, now so popular, has a lexicon of its own. For the following glossary I'm indebted to John L. Gould in the Herald-Tribune: "Jamster," improviser on the melody against a rhythmic united front; "swing," the art of jamming; "jitterbug," swing fan; "digit truckin'," the art of manipulating an instrument; "long underwear gang," stooges of the old-fashioned crooner; "laid it in the groove," got hot, went to town; "spank the skin," play the drum; "licks," hot bars; "gang o' horn," plenty of trumpet; "long-haired," old-fashioned; "growl," trumpet in agony; "iron horn," trumpet; "corn-fed stuff," what the Pilgrims danced to.

Family Pride

By NELL SAUNDERS

© McClure Newspaper Syndicate.
WNU Service.

A HANDSOME, expensive looking but dusty automobile slowed down on the main street of the little village of Brompton. The driver called to the only citizen who happened to be in sight, Ben Jenkins.

"Say, young feller," called he, "what sort of a place is it out there on the turnpike? Can you get a decent meal there?"

"On the turnpike?" repeated Ben Jenkins.

The driver-owner consulted the guide book. "White house at first turn to right on Romilly turnpike after leaving Brompton," he read slowly.

"Why, that would be the Romilly house. Are you sure that is what the books says?"

"Those are the words."

Ben, who kept up his family home in Brompton and spent his vacation there, walked on and presently encountered Mr. Carson, postmaster of the town.

"Funny thing," said Ben; I met some people who spoke about having meals at a white house at the first turn to the right on Romilly turnpike after leaving Brompton. That's the Romillys', isn't it?"

"Sure," said the postmaster. "Didn't you hear?"

"They haven't sold the place, have they?" inquired Ben.

"Sold, nothing. The how and the wherefore is, so folks say, that they've lost their money—every darned cent of it, and Miss Nancy had to open up the place as a kind of roadhouse for tourists."

Later Ben entered the Romilly house and took his seat at a small table. Presently a white clad waitress approached him with a list of dishes offered for that day's dinner. Ben took it with a queer thrill—it was unmistakably written by Nancy Romilly. The solitary meal followed but Nancy did not appear. After it was over Ben offered his card to the maid, and asked her to take it to Miss Romilly.

Nancy was alone in the old dining room. She rose from her desk and came swiftly to him with outstretched hands.

"How amazingly well you are looking," Ben exclaimed.

"Yes," laughed Nancy. "Work seems to agree with me."

"But why didn't you tell me? I might have helped you."

"Oh, it was too late by the time I found out," said Nancy. "Besides, it's been a wonderful experience. Aunt Susan is very feeble now. She keeps to her room with her attendant and really doesn't know. And the work and the people keep me from loneliness. I really don't know how it will all end—"

"Don't talk about such things," Ben burst out. "Nancy, Nancy—if this had only come sooner. I was in love with you—I always have been, but I never dared to ask you, because I was afraid of your money and your pride—"

"No, Ben, I confess the Romilly pride is slipping away. I've learned a lot in five years, and this little business venture, which really has been absurdly profitable, has taught me that people are pretty much the same wherever you find them. No, Ben, the Romilly fortune has remained and I'm adding to it, but the old Romilly pride—"

"Then you didn't lose your money?" gasped Bob Jenkins.

"Why, that's the joke. People don't think I lost my money, do they? Well, that makes it all the more interesting. No, some one of the editors of the Guide Book just made a funny mistake. Probably thought our house looked like a roadhouse and assumed it was. So the people began to come, and they were hungry and it was such fun feeding them and so hard to explain the mistake every time, that I just started in."

"I never would have come to see you if I hadn't believed them," said Ben.

Nancy Romilly leaned forward and placed a pretty, capable hand over one of Ben's.

"Perhaps I could manage to lose it—if—"

"You really are—glad that I came back?" stammered Ben.

Nancy laughed and said, "What do you think, Old Romantic?"

Small Purchases

Shopping habits of American women are indicated from a novel direction, in the analysis of 30,000 weighed purchase in grocery and butcher shops, made by a scale company. Examined from the viewpoint of price, as indicated on the computing scales, it is found that the most common purchase at the butcher's costs 35 cents, the next most common 25 cents and the third most common 30 cents. At the grocery, women most often make a 5-cent purchase, secondly a 10-cent purchase and thirdly a 15-cent purchase. More than half the weighed grocery sales are below 12 cents, more than half the butcher's sales are below 36 cents. The study emphasizes the importance of honest weight to consumers.

EUROPE WATCHES SPANISH WAR

Anxiously Await Outcome of Struggle Between Right and Left Factions; May Change World History.

By WILLIAM C. UTLEY

ORDINARILY you can take a Spanish revolution as a Greek revolution, or you can let it alone. The general custom among the laity of observers in America in the past has been to let 'em alone.

In Greek revolutions the government changes hands between matinee and evening performances and, although whole navies are captured, no one ever gets hurt. The ordinary Spanish revolution is much the same, the one distinguishing factor being that murder and mayhem are present, but nobody gets hurt except Spaniards.

Ever since Spain lost her last American colonies some 30-odd years ago, riot, revolution and rebellion have been rife in the sunny land. But because, in the past, these revolutions have been of little consequence outside the borders of Spain itself, other nations, even those on the European continent, have been justified in merely remaining aloof and letting matters take their course until once more a Spanish government of one kind or another is answering the 'phones. Aloofness often is only official as it is possible to do a neat little business in arms with both warring sides, unofficially.

But with this newest and most serious of Spanish revolutions the customary policy of laissez - faire among her neighbors is one difficult, if not impossible, to maintain. For here in Spain is now the ultimate expression of a struggle that is now going on among the peoples of nearly every nation in Europe.

See Death Struggle

This is not a civil war to determine whether republic or monarchy shall be the form of government. Actually it does not involve the question of how the nation shall be governed so much as who shall govern it.

There is a death battle between what have come to be called in Europe, and are more and more frequently mentioned here in the United States, the Right and the Left. On the Right is Fascism; on the left is Socialism. On the one side are the monopolies, the bureaucrats and the big land owners; on the other are the peasant farmers, the small business men, union labor and the proletariat.

Gen. Emilio Mola, Rebel Leader.

It may be truthfully said that practically all Europe today is divided into Rightest and Leftist factions. The sharp line of demarcation becomes more apparent with each new heated political debate, with each new spirited election. For that reason every European eye is directly focused upon Spain. Deeply concerned are France, whose new Leftist government has not yet proved the panacea it was heralded to be; Germany, which will find new cause to arm against "the Reds" if the Left wins and a new victory over communism if the Right wins; Italy would welcome a strong Fascist neighbor, and exclusive of her subtler political interests, Great Britain must protect Gibraltar.

While former revolutions in Spain have resulted in only qualified victories or defeats, it is generally conceded that this one will be decisive. It may string along for many months, even years, but it will be a fight to a finish.

Europe Watches Struggle

Yet what is important about this civil war is not which government, Right or Left, emerges victorious, the choice of the majority of people. It is the fact that there is a serious fight. This is a bloody and cruel war. Homes, theaters, hospitals have become ammunition centers and barracks. Snipers spit death out of store windows, cannon wheels scar the surfaces of plains, the drone of bombers disturbs the calm of fabled Spanish skies.

Right and Left have taken arms against each other. All Europe watches. For years the continent has been a tinder box, awaiting a match to set it off. Crisis after crisis has been passed and another great war has been averted or postponed, sometimes ever so narrowly. May not this develop into the next of these great crises? What will France do if Italy sends aid to the Fascists? What will Germany do if Red Russia interferes on the other side?

The Spanish-American war may be arbitrarily taken as the real beginning of the political disintegration of Spain. It was less than a decade after that when she lost her last American colony. Four years later came the first of a series of uprisings among the people; it was quelled. That was in 1909; in 1917 there was another unsuccessful revolt.

When the crisis after the World war came, the Spanish monarchy found itself unable to look after the welfare of its 23,000,000 subjects, who were finding it next to impossible to make a living. An attempt was made to right conditions in 1921 when Primo de Rivera was set up by the Rightist factions as dictator. It didn't work.

New Regime Fails

Ten years later the republic was voted in and King Alfonso XIII was on his sudden way out. Spanish citizens were free men. All the ills of the old times were to be forgotten. Their troubles were over.

But, alas, it didn't work out that way. Actually, the new government had been heralded a few months before its inception by a serious general strike and an uprising among the military forces. There was the world-wide depression to be reckoned with, and the fact that in Spain the currency was deflated, industry frozen and foreign markets for Spanish farmers hopelessly lost. Primo de Rivera had been driven into exile by rising governmental debts and deficits. Political liberty was supposed to rectify all of these things. Of course it didn't.

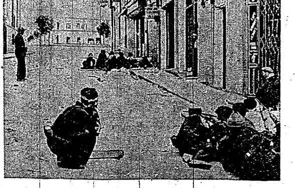
When the republic was born 75 per cent of the population was dependent, directly or indirectly, upon agriculture, yet so evilly was it distributed that only one-tenth of the farm population could make a fair living from it. Immense estates, relics of feudal days, held the really fertile land; the poor peasant was doomed to watch thousands upon thousnds of acres of rich land carelessly, wastefully cultivated, or even thrown open to pasture, while he, burdened with heavy debts, had to work a tiny patch of poor land. The great hordes of landless farm - hands, working only half the year, and then at meager wages, were steadily growing.

Small private industries wallowed hopelessly in debt, while great monopolies were so entwined into the government that when there were losses, the taxpayers made them good, but when there were profits the stockholders got them all.

When the republic came into being there were countless and needless bureaus eating the substance of the treasury. A costly and overlarge army, with many needlessly high-salaried officers noted for blundering and extravagant "colonial" adventures, was being kept. Unemployment, starvation wages and continued repression from the Right had concentrated the mass of poor industrial workers into a few large cities and had greatly increased their numbers.

Expected Drastic Changes

The people, rightly enough, expected drastic changes from the Men of the Republic. The economic theory of the Rightists, nominally second in power in the republic and today represented by the rebelling Fascist generals, was that of repression, wage-reduction breaking-up of labor unions, and concentration camps for forced labor—all the principles of Fascism. The republic was to substitute higher wages, new and fairer distribution of land, government control of industry, resettlement and rehabilitation projects and a security program.



Scene in Toledo Showing Snipers Fighting Rebels.

But the early republican government found itself torn between two loyalties. It attempted to steer a middle course, providing legislation only upon pressure from Right or Left and, naturally, leaving only a result of hopeless conflict of policy.

The Right, bewildered by conflicting policy, between socialism one minute and Fascism the next, froze credits, paralyzed industry and agriculture, and hired armed bands of men to annoy the Leftists and thus provoke the government. In the summer of 1932 it all came to a boil and the Right provoked a military revolt, but intervention of civilian troops on the part of the government quelled it.

Economic conditions failed to improve. There were strikes, riots and demonstrations. The Left was still in a bad way. The peasants led an uprising in 1933. So severely was it put down, the government began to lose the loyalty of the peasants and kindred classes. When later that year the Socialists were driven from the cabinet and the Right assumed what amounted to almost all the power, there were political scandals and months of continued unrest followed. In 1934 the Left revolted upon the calling of Gil Robles into the cabinet. This was nearly a successful revolution and was only quieted by the employment of the Spanish Foreign Legion and paid Moorish troops. Never before in Spanish history had such measures been necessary to protect the government. It was sufficient to instill more confidence and courage into the Left, and to incite the proletariat further against the government of the Right.

Women Marksmen Take Part.

Accordingly the Left forced elections and swept the existing government from power. That was early this year. The same old struggle has been going on ever since—the power has not yet definitely come to one side or the other to permit a continuity of action.

But the new revolution, openly and unmistakably a civil war to the bitter end, will leave Spain at last completely Right or completely Left—completely Fascist or completely Socialist.

Americans Leave Spain

The efficiency of the State department and the foreign service has been strikingly demonstrated in the emergency precipitated by the revolution in Spain, which required the government to conduct the first evacuation of Americans from a European country since the World war.

When the revolution broke, Ambassador Bowers was at his summer house at Fuenterrabia, on the coast, five miles from San Sebastian, the Summer capital, where were stationed Messrs. Johnson and Schoellkopf. Cut off from communication by telephone with his Summer embassy and prevented by barricades and fighting from going to San Sebastian, Mr. Bowers was taken off by the cutter Cayuga and subsequently established his embassy on the vessel to cruise in Spanish waters so as to be of aid to Americans.

At the outset the situation in the Spanish capital was serious, with firing in the streets. The United States embassy stocked all the food it could get and stored water in large reservoirs for a siege. Then American nationals were directed to go to the embassy. A total of 160 went there, including Filipinos and Puerto Ricans. The embassy also received official requests to harbor nationals of Belgium, Sweden, Finland, Turkey, Chile, Panama, Cuba and Austria, and did so.

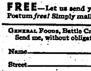
WHY—THIS SOUNDS LIKE COFFEE-NERVES TO ME—BUT SURELY YOU'RE NOT LETTING THIS BOY DRINK COFFEE!
BUT, DOCTOR— I DIDN'T KNOW—I'VE ALWAYS FELT THAT HE NEEDED A HOT DRINK!
-OF COURSE YOU NEED A HOT DRINK! —AND TELL 'EM ANOTHER THING YOU NEED IS TO BE LET ALONE!
THE RIGHT KIND OF A HOT DRINK IS VERY BENEFICIAL— TRY GIVING HIM POSTUM—MADE —WITH-HOT-MILK!
ALL RIGHT, DOCTOR—I'LL TRY IT—IF YOU THINK THE CHANGE WILL HELP HIM—
CURSES! I WAS AFRAID OF THIS! NOW I'LL HAVE TO BEAT IT!!

LATER
JACK, YOUR WORK SHOWS REMARKABLE IMPROVEMENT LATELY! YOU'LL SOON BE OUR STAR PUPIL AT THIS RATE!
MOTHER SAYS IT'S BECAUSE I'VE BEEN FEELING SO MUCH BETTER SINCE I SWITCHED TO POSTUM—MADE -WITH-HOT-MILK!



Paul ARTHUR

OF COURSE, children should never drink coffee. And many grown-ups, too, find that the caffein in coffee disagrees with them. If you are bothered by headaches or indigestion or can't sleep soundly...try Postum for 30 days. Postum contains no caffein. It is simply whole wheat and bran, roasted and slightly sweetened. Try Postum. You may miss coffee at first, but after 30 days you'll love Postum for its own rich, satisfying flavor. It is easy to make, delicious, economical, and may prove a real help. STAR DUST
Movie • Radio

By VIRGINIA VALE

YOU may think that it would be all too easy to break into the movies if you were related to a star. But—well, just see what Florence Eldridge has to say about it.

In private life she is Mrs. Fredric March. In public life she had been a well known actress on the stage for some years before they were married. When he decided on movies instead of the stage, she went along to Hollywood, because being a good wife is more important to her than having a career of her own.

Came the time when RKO was casting "Mary of Scotland," in which Katherine Hepburn and Fredric March are co-starred (and a swell picture it is!). Miss Eldridge wanted the role of Queen Elizabeth.

"I was selected only after every other candidate for the part had been tested and rejected for one reason or another," says she. She finally got it, of course, and turned in an excellent performance.

Gertrude Michael

Gertrude Michael was the target for a lot of remonstrating when she left Paramount; there were people who said she'd find that free-lancing was a lot worse than sticking with a big company, even though that company didn't seem to be doing a great deal for you. Some of them predicted that she'd be completely out of pictures, first thing she knew.

Whereupon she signed up with RKO and now she's headed straight for the top—and the head shakers aren't saying much of anything.

That brand new motion picture company, Grand National, has just signed up a young man who looks like big star material. His name is Brilhart Chapman, and he's a dancer—has appeared in solo numbers for the past four years with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Recently he has been dancing at a night club in New York, and now he's off to Europe on a vacation, before he starts work before the camera.

Lily Pons is all set to begin picture work again, although she has said that she doesn't care too much about it. She spent her vacation in Connecticut, its climax being the arrival of her mother from France.

[illegible] McCormack, the famous [illegible]nor, sang "Killarney" and "[illegible]e Me, If All Those Endearing Young Charms" in England the other day for 20th Century-Fox's "Wings of the Morning" — and if you see the picture you'll see the famous singer in natural color—it's the first Technicolor picture produced in England.

The football broadcasts are being lined up, so that all of us who don't want to go to games, or can't make it, can sit at home this fall and hear what's happening on the gridiron. An oil company is acting as sponsor for the broadcasts of one hundred major games, over thirty-six stations on the coast. Don Wilson, whom you've heard doing another sort of announcements with Jack Benny, will do some of the announcing.

Richard Dix

If you listen to the Music Hall of the Air, on the radio, you probably feel that you know Ted Hammerstein; he is the grandson of the late Oscar Hammerstein, one of America's most illustrious theatrical figures.

Ted tells this story about himself: He broke into the theatrical business by working for a Broadway booking agent.

This theatrical agent was one of the important ones, and his waiting room was usually filled with people clamoring for work. Keeping them from storming the inner office was Hammerstein's main duty. He did his job as bouncer very effectively—and some of the people he threw out later made good—among them Richard Dix, Chester Morris and Ben Lyons!

ODDS AND ENDS . . . Her admirers are declaring that Norma Shearer's performance in "Romeo and Juliet" makes her the greatest American actress, bar none, on stage or screen . . . Marlene Dietrich says she'll never return to Germany, not because of troubles with the government, but because the German people don't like her in pictures . . . Now it's Donald Woods who has gone on strike on the Warner Brothers lot . . . Wonder what is causing that epidemic . . . Bette Davis must be glad that she walked out on "God's Country and the Woman"; the company has been having a run of accidents on location.

FAMOUS HEADLINE HUNTER

FLOYD GIBBONS' ADVENTURERS' CLUB

Hello Everybody

"Hornets and Bullets"

By FLOYD GIBBONS

CROWD over there, boys and girls, and make room for a new Distinguished Adventurer in this club of ours. He is Ralph Gewehr of South Orange, N. J.

I've got to admit, right at the start, that Ralph's yarn is a stinger. It happened to him in August, 1934, up in the Adirondacks, when Ralph and his pal, Billy, started out with a couple of .22 calibre rifles to hunt eagles.

Well, sir, that's a good enough start for any adventure. An eagle is a pretty tough proposition, and a .22 calibre rifle is a pretty small piece of hardware to try to handle one with. If they'd found any eagles on that little hunting trip of theirs, they'd have had plenty of adventure. And I guess if they hadn't run across anything more dangerous than a cottontail rabbit they'd have had an adventure, too.

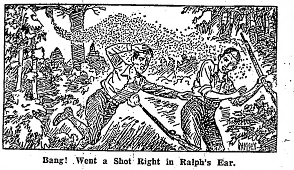
Those lads were slated for trouble. Their numbers were up—especially Ralph's. Anything they did that day would have been wrong, and when Billy took a pot shot at the only game in sight, he started something worse than a whole flock of eagles and a couple of buzzards thrown in for good measure.

Boys Find Hornet's Nest Is Dangerous Target.

With their rifles in their arms, Ralph and Billy headed up the trail on foot. They trudged up to the top of Blue Ledge, a distance of ten miles from the summer camp of Ralph's folks at North river. The boys planned to spend the night in the mountains, like real hunters, and look for adventure. They were too tired to go after eagles by the time they arrived, but hornets were another thing.

Now a hornet is pretty far from an eagle, but a hornet's nest makes a nice target—if you don't care what you shoot at—and Billy didn't care. He let fly at that hornet's nest and hit it smack in the center and then adventure began in earnest. Ralph says those hornets came out of that nest like a cloud of buzzing smoke. He thinks all the hornets in the world must have been in it from the way they went for him. He took one look at the flying circus and then hit the trail as fast as he could go. But it wasn't fast enough. They dove at him in mass formation and kept right on his tail.

He got a glimpse of Billy tearing through the woods with a million or so of the enemy on his shoulders and the next second tripped and fell.



Bang! Went a Shot Right in Ralph's Ear.

Bang! went a shot right in his ear. He thought it was Billy's rifle for a moment because his had fallen out of his hand. Then he felt a stinging sensation in his side. That must have been a big hornet, he thought, from the way it felt.

Ralph Is Shot by His Own Rifle.

The hornets were stinging him everywhere, but none of them hurt as much as the one in his side. He put his hand on the spot and drew it away covered with blood! Ralph was shot! His own rifle had exploded on hitting the ground and the bullet must be in his body!

Hornets were forgotten in the face of this discovery. The situation was deadly serious. Here was a boy shot in the side and he was ten miles from civilization. Besides, both boys were already tired from their long walk. And, to make matters worse, the only doctor was eight miles more beyond Ralph's cabin. They could make that last eight miles in his mother's car, but how would Ralph ever survive the walk?

Ralph says their Boy Scout training came immediately to mind. The thing to do in case of a sudden shock, they recalled, was to apply heat, externally, internally and eternally. So Billy built a fire, heated some water and made coffee. Ralph drank the coffee, which heated him internally. Then Billy wrapped him in the blankets for the external heating. The boys washed the wound with hot water, bound it up as well as they could with their handkerchiefs, and started on the long trek back home.

Wounded Lad Makes Heroic 10-Mile Trek.

Did you ever try to walk ten miles with a bullet in your side? Ralph advises you not to. In addition to the mental torture of not knowing how badly he was wounded, Ralph suffered intensely from the heat. It was mid-August and hot enough without the blankets and the coffee, and he had to trudge along bundled up like an Indian papoose.

That walk, Ralph says, was a nightmare. He figures he must have lost at least ten pounds and laid the foundations for a headful of gray hair. But he kept on going, even if he did think that each step would be his last. Finally they got back to the camp where Ralph's dad had a car.

It was late at night when the boys finally staggered into the doctor's office after a ride that shook the daylights out of Ralph. The doctor looked at the wound and ordered him to the hospital. Then began another ride that Ralph will remember all his life. It was forty miles, but Billy drove it almost as fast as those hornets could fly.

State Troopers Ask the Boys Searching Questions

At the hospital another surprise was in store for them. State Troopers—called by the doctor, as they always do in cases of gunshot wounds—met the boys and questioned them. Ralph says they seemed to think that he and Billy had been shooting at each other or holding somebody up. But they cleared themselves of that suspicion and Ralph went on the operating table.

An operation is an adventure in itself, but Ralph's was one with a happy ending. The bullet—which, fortunately, was not a high powered one—had entered his side, and, striking a rib, had glanced off and missed the vital organs. The doctors, after an X-ray had been taken, picked the slug out of his shoulder and when Ralph woke up there was his mother, more scared than he was. Billy had found her and told her "Ralph had been shot."

Ralph was out of the hospital in a few days and the wound healed up in a few weeks, but, he says, he hasn't been eagle hunting since.

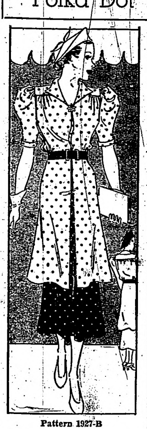
Darwin's Early Life

Darwin's father was a physician and wished him to adopt that profession. At the age of 16 he entered the University of Edinburgh, but disliked medicine, and later entered Christ's college, Cambridge, to prepare for the ministry. There he became acquainted with Henslow, the professor of botany, who did much to shape his career. The proficiency that Darwin displayed in every department of natural science won him such distinction that he at last obtained his father's consent that he should not enter the church

Comets Return to Sun

Most comets return to the sun after a period of years. Biela's comet, on its return in 1846, split into two parts, and on its next visit came back as twins — two comets were traveling in almost the same orbit formerly occupied by one and on the same time schedule. There are several records of such multiple comets. The converse of this phenomenon is even more common. They break up. What causes this is unknown. Disintegration probably is caused by the same forces that cause them to split.

Polka Dot Tunic Frock



Pattern 1927-B

Even the slenderest of clothes allowances will permit including this clever tunic frock in your wardrobe. It's the very dress you've been wanting . . . so perfect for town, country, commuting and vacationing.

The tunic has a blue polka dot on white ground and flares partly from a tiny waist held by a patent belt. The lines conform to the current wide shoulder vogue while puffed sleeves push up at the shoulder a la Margot. You may wear the neckline open having revers in the same or contrasting color, or buttoned high and ornamented with a clip pin or bouquet. Your friends will succumb to the charm of your black and white shantung model, polka dotted satin, pastel sheer splashed with crisp white, or any favorite shade or material that expresses your personality, making this ensemble yours alone.

Barbara Bell Pattern No. 1927-B is available for sizes: 12, 14, 16, 18 and 20. Size 14 requires 2 3-4 yards of 35 or 39-inch material for the tunic and 2 yards for the skirt. Send 15 cents in coins.

Send for the Fall Pattern Book containing Barbara Bell well-planned, easy-to-make patterns. Exclusive fashions for children, young women, and matrons. Send 15 cents for your copy.

Custard pies should first be started to bake in a hot oven to set the crust, then the heat of the oven should be quickly reduced so that the custard may cook slowly.

When you have potatoes left over from a meal do not peel, as a cold potato keeps better with the jacket on. If peeled, it dries on the outside and must be trimmed before using, and that is wasteful. Also, an economical way to prepare mashed potatoes is boil them in their jackets, peel and then mash.

EQUALIZATION BOARD CHANGES ASSESSMENTS

The official proceedings of the Pennington county board of equalization which completed its work last week, are published elsewhere in this issue of the Times. They reveal that increases of from ten to 370 per cent were made in the full and true valuation of unplatted real estate, exclusive of buildings and improvements, in all but three townships of the county over the figures returned by the township boards of review. No change was made in Cloverleaf and Goodridge townships, while valuations in Rocksbury township were decreased ten per cent.

The full and true valuation of lands and buildings on platted real estate was changed as follows: Goodridge village, increased 50 per cent; and City of Thief River Falls, increased five per cent. Figures as turned in by the St. Hilaire board of review were approved.

Numerous changes also were made in the personal property assessments.

COUNTY SCHOOL HEAD REPORTS ON '36 ATTENDANCE

A total of 2,537 pupils in the Pennington county schools were counted for apportionment during the past schol year, while 282 did not qualify, it is revealed in the annual report of A. C. Matheson, county superintendent of schools, filed last week with Dr. John G. Rockwell, state commissioner of education.

Included in the group counted for apportionment were 1,838 pupils in the high and graded schools of the county and 699 in the ungraded elementary schools. A total of 243 pupils were graduated this year from the eighth grades of high and graded schools, and 183 from ungraded elementary schools.

Enrolment by ages in the county school system was reported as follows: Ages five to seven inclusive, 542; eight to 15, 1,888; 16 to 20, 348; and under five and over 20, 41.

Adam Lendobeja Home in Smiley Destroyed

The Adam Lendobeja home east of the city in Smiley township was destroyed Saturday by a blaze that had its origin in the attic. Mrs. Lendobeja, home alone at the time, summoned assistance and succeeded in saving most of the household goods. The destroyed building will be replaced with a new structure, it was announced.

PARACHUTE JUMPER GETS TWO THRILLS

Grand Rapids—Mickey Morgan, parachute jumper de luxe, got a new thrill when he leaped from a plane several thousand feet above the field at Grand Rapids during a circus performance. The first chute he opened failed to carry him properly, splitting open, and when he pulled the cord for the second chute, after the tangles were straightened out, Morgan lit in the woods southeast of the air port. What was his surprise when he found that he had lit on top of a big buck deer! The animal lost no time in disappearing into the woods, leaving Morgan on the ground.

OPEN CAMPAIGN TO SLASH SEPTEMBER TRAFFIC MISHAPS

Support of the September safety campaign of the Minnesota public safety committee, is urged by Governor Olson in a proclamation today. The campaign is being conducted by the committee in an effort to reduce traffic accidents in September, the most hazardous month of the year for motorists.

The proclamation, which designates September as "Minnesota Safety Month," follows:

"Whereas there was conducted in Minnesota in 1935 a campaign of such effectiveness that September traffic deaths and injuries were materially lower than in the preceding year; and

"Whereas the possibility for reduction in deaths and injuries from motor vehicle mishaps by co-ordinated efforts was so demonstrated;

"I, therefore, as governor of the state of Minnesota, hereby proclaim the month of September, next following, as "Minnesota Safety Month," and call upon the Minnesota Public Safety committee to initiate and sponsor such efforts and activities as may serve to enlist the active co-operation of all citizens for still greater reduction of traffic deaths and injuries, particularly during the month of September, but, as well, for all succeeding months.

"I urge and request of all the departments of state, all courts of jurisdiction, all county and municipal officers, and others in authority, full co-operation toward making Minnesota the safest state, and particularly toward changing September from the month of high traffic accident scores to the lowest."

Statewide organization of every type, industry, and members of city and county public safety committees are working actively to make the campaign a success. Publishers of Minnesota newspapers, through their state organization, have pledged themselves to give the drive every assistance.

ABDOMEN PUNCTURED IN 10 PLACES, BOY LIVES

Coleraine—His abdomen punctured in ten places by the accidental discharge of a rifle, 11-year-old Donald Caverly, son of Monson Caverly of near Remer, is recovering in the Itasca hospital. Against the advice of his elder brother, he was carrying the rifle as he rode on a hay rake in his picking off a gopher. The gophers got a rest when the rifle slipped down through the tines of the hay rake and discharged straight into young Caverly's body. It was thought he would bleed to death before he could be gotten to the hospital but his courageous fight seems to be pulling him through so that he should live to shoot more gophers.

STATE IN TRIBUTE TO GOVERNOR OLSON

All Minnesota joined yesterday in paying tribute to Governor Floyd B. Olson whose death occurred Saturday evening at the hospital at Rochester. People from all walks of life, rich and poor, young and old, passed before his bier Tuesday as the body lay in state in the rotunda of the state capitol at St. Paul, and thousands more attended the funeral service held yesterday afternoon at the municipal auditorium in Minneapolis, the Governor's home city.

In every city and hamlet thruout the state flags hung at half-mast, and business places were closed in silent tribute to the state's executive. The funeral services for Governor Olson, including the funeral oration by Governor Philip LaFollette of Wisconsin were broadcast over the Twin Cities stations and countless thousands of people in Minnesota and adjoining states heard them.

Coming from pioneer stock, and struggling against early adversity, Governor Olson rose to his high position in this state and in national affairs because of his dynamic personality. He was keenly interested in the welfare of the common people, and his administration will go down in history of the state as having accomplished something worthwhile for the common good.

The new governor, Hjalmar Petersen, has issued a proclamation calling for a 30-day mourning period thruout the state in honor of Governor Olson during which time flags will remain at half staff. Memorial services in places of worship thruout the state, and a public memorial service at the state capitol will be held at the end of the mourning period, September 24th.

Governor Olson is the third Minnesota chief executive to die in office. The others were Governor John A. Johnson and Governor Winfield Hammond.

The First American Luther League meets at the Fred Erdman home Wednesday evening, Sept. 2. Everybody welcome.

Late Chief Executive

FLOYD B. OLSON

Nearing the end of his third term as governor of Minnesota and a candidate for the United States senate in the November election, who passed away at a Rochester hospital Saturday evening at 8:30 after an heroic battle for recovery. He had been in failing health since last December.

DEFEAT KITTSON IN SUNDAY GAME

The St. Hilaire ball team regained its standing of second in the Northern Minnesota League when it defeated Kittson in a fast game played on the Kittson grounds near Crookston last Sunday. Hallamack and Almquist did the hurling for St. Hilaire and were given good support by their team mates. Two home runs by St. Hilaire players were features of the game which ended with the score 10 to 8.

The Kittson team comes here next Sunday for their return game which also will be the final game on the League schedule for this season. Kittson put up a mighty good battle last Sunday, so fans can be assured of seeing a real contest next Sunday.

Tales About Town

Happenings of the Week, Told in Brief. News Concerning People You Know

Henry W. Peterson and son, Martin, of Warren, were here Thursday evening attending to business matters.

Mrs. William Olson was taken ill Saturday and has since been confined to bed. She is much improved at this time.

Mr. and Mrs. Ben Jacobson and son, and their guests, have returned to Hibbing after spending a week here with relatives.

The Mission Ladies' Aid meets at the Carl Swanson home, on the East side, Friday evening, August 28th. Everybody welcome.

Friends of Frank Bothman will be pleased to know he is improving at a satisfactory rate following his recent accident wherein he suffered severe burns.

Phil Anderson writes that he and family are now settled in their new home at Joilet, Ill. Everything is going along fine, Phil says, and he sends greetings to all friends in this community.

Martin Peterson has been down from Warren this week making repairs and improvements on the residence property on Water street which is owned by his father, H. W. Peterson.

The river above the dams here, where water was from 12 to 15 feet back in sawmill days, is now entirely dry. It is now possible to walk on the river bed from the old mill site to the north bridge.

Miss Valarie Olsen, who has been a patient at the University hospital at Minneapolis for several weeks, returned home today. Her sister, Mrs. Arthur Hanson, went down Tuesday night and accompanied her home.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Winter and children, and Miss Blanche Hoff returned Monday after visiting a week at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Zahn at Littlefork. The latter is a sister of Mrs. Winter and Miss Hoff.

Mr. and Mrs. M. R. Graham are busy today moving their household effects to the G. Fellman house on Water street which they have leased. Their present residence has been purchased by Richard Larson who will occupy it with his family in a short time.

Martin Hallstrom has purchased the residence property on Water street which belonged to his father, P. A. Hallstrom. Mr. and Mrs. Hallstrom expect to move down from Thief River Falls within the next few weeks to occupy their newly acquired place.

Rules on Eligibility for WPA Employment Now in Lynskey's Hands

Detailed instructions governing eligibility for employment on the Works Progress Administration program are now in the hands of John Lynskey, representative in Pennington county of the coordinated field service in Minnesota, state director of which is Benjamin E. Youngdahl. These regulations were drafted in order to obtain, in all parts of the state, uniform standards to determine eligibility for the WPA.

These standard regulations do not change the ability of Works Progress Administration insofar as the number of jobs is concerned, J. B. Kovarik, district director, stated. The work program must continue within the limitation of its quotas and the amount of money available.

Detailed information as to WPA eligibility may be obtained by calling or writing to John Lynskey at the court house.

Ethel Calsness returned Thursday after visiting a week at the Frank Breneman home at Crookston.

Mr. and Mrs. M. H. Graham and baby daughter returned Monday after spending a week with relatives at Bertha, Minn.

Selmer Rosette expects to leave about the first of the month for Detroit, Mich., to bring back another lot of used cars for local sale.

Mr. and Mrs. Paul Roy and son, Jimmy, accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Frank Johnson returned yesterday after a sight-seeing trip to Winnipeg.

Mr. and Mrs. R. Kirkconnel and family, who have resided here the past two years, are returning this week to their former home at Thief River Falls.

Mr. and Mrs. Howard Bilden motored here Thursday from their home at Minneapolis and spent until Thursday visiting with his father, A. Bilden, and with friends in the community.

Local honey producers are experiencing some difficulty in securing a sufficient supply of cans for their product. A strike in the can manufacturing industry is responsible for the shortage of containers.

Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Becken motored here last week from Bemidji and visited at the farm home of Mr. and Mrs. Otto Johnson southeast of the village, and went from here to visit relatives at Halstad. They were on their honeymoon trip following their marriage Monday at Bemidji. Mrs. Becken, nee Cora Helgoe, is well known in this locality where she has been employed at different times.

Gordon Vigen, son of Thos. Vigen of Bemidji, was here last week for a short visit at the home of his aunt, Mrs. Otto Johnson. Mr. Vigen is manager of the new Andria Theatre at Alexandria, Minn.

GARNES CHURCH BURNED

An early morning fire of undetermined origin completely destroyed the Lutheran church in Garnes township southeast of here last week. The church building had just undergone extensive repairs, and a new set of pews had been installed a few days before the fire. When discovered during the early morning, the fire had progressed so far the building was a heap of embers.

COUNCIL PROCEEDINGS

Regular meeting of the village council held Aug. 3, 1936, at the council room. Meeting called to order by the president. All members were present. Minutes of previous meeting were read and approved. On motion the following bills were allowed as read:

STUDENT AID AVAILABLE

Word has been received that the National Youth Administration will again give aid to students from needy families. Altho the quota from our school is small to begin with, more will be allowed later. The maximum aid is $6.00 per month. Students between ages of 16 and 25 may apply. Application blanks may be obtained at the school office. These must be filled out and sent in before school opens so call soon as possible.

SCHOOL TO OPEN SEPTEMBER 14TH

Enrollment of students for the coming school term will start at 9 o'clock Monday, Sept. 14 with classes meeting in regular sessions.

Subject offerings in high school has been enlarged to include typewriting, offered in the eleventh and twelfth years; Economic Geography in the same years; Community Civics in the ninth year, and Orientation in the eighth year.

The school is now on the 6-6 plan. The upper six years will be high school. The seventh and eighth grades will use that room for study; the high school having the Assembly as usual.

The program for the coming year will give the last two periods to Music and Physical Education. As this is for six years, it will give seventh and eighth grade students better opportunity to participate in band and other school activities.

CHARLES KUNDERT DIED YESTERDAY

Charles L. Kundert, age 56, manager of the Red Lake Falls and St. Hilaire telephone systems, died yesterday afternoon at his home at Red Lake Falls from effects of a stroke suffered Sunday. He became ill while witnessing a ball game and had to be assisted to his home. Shortly thereafter he lapsed into a semi-unconscious condition in which he remained until his death.

The sudden and totally unexpected death of Mr. Kundert came as a severe shock to his family, as well as to a host of friends at Red Lake Falls and in this community who saw him apparently in the best of health as late as Sunday forenoon.

Mr. and Mrs. Kundert and family came to Red Lake Falls from South Dakota about ten years ago to take over the telephone exchange there. In 1927 they acquired the local lines and have operated both systems since that time. Mr. Kundert divided his time between the two towns, and as a result, he was equally as well known to the people of St. Hilaire and vicinity as he was at Red Lake Falls. Blessed with a sense of good humor; always agreeable; keenly interested in all affairs of a civic nature, Mr. Kundert was an ideal citizen and a valued friend. This section is a better place for his having lived in it, and is a loser by his death. To the stricken family and other relatives is extended the heartfelt sympathy of the people of St. Hilaire and vicinity.

Besides his wife, Mr. Kundert is survived by a family of three daughters and one son. The children are Mrs. V. Pushing of Olivia, Mrs. W. A. Weed, Marcia and Dwight Kundert of Red Lake Falls. He is also survived by his aged father who resides in South Dakota, two brothers and one sister.

Funeral services will be conducted Saturday afternoon at 2:00 at the Presbyterian church at Red Lake Falls, and interment will be made in the cemetery east of that city.

WIDSTEN RESIGNS

Hal Widsten, member of the local high school faculty last year, and who was re-elected for the coming school year, motored up Thursday from Bemidji and tendered his resignation to the school board. Mr. Widsten has been offered, and has accepted the principalship of the village school at LaPorte near Bemidji. He is a very capable and efficient teacher, and his decision to locate elsewhere will be a distinct loss to the St. Hilaire school.

Red Cross—Next meeting of the local Red Cross will be at the home of Mrs. M. H. Jackson next Tuesday, Sept. 1st.

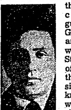
Russian Conspirators Against Stalin Plead Guilty—Italy and France Sparring Over Spain—Roosevelt Primed for Drouth Area Tour.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.



Gregory Zinoviev

SIXTEEN men, arraigned in Moscow on charges of plotting the assassination of Dictator Josef Stalin and the seizure of power in the Soviet republic, calmly pleaded guilty. Two of them, Gregory Zinoviev and Leo Kamenev, were members with Stalin 13 years ago of a triumvirate that governed Russia and are well known to the outside world. The confessions did not end the trial, for the defendants contradicted and accused one another until the case was in a jumble. Some of them, like Zinoviev, proudly accepted responsibility for the plot, which was said to have been engineered by the exiled Leon Trotzky. It was believed all sixteen would face the firing squad.

Twelve more men and one woman, the government announced, were held for examination and probable trial. Some of these were involved by the confessions of the sixteen conspirators.

In the case on trial the defendants revealed the fact that not only were they plotting the assassination of Stalin and four others, but planned also to betray Trotzky and place Zinoviev and Kamenev in supreme power.

Trotzky, at Hoenefoss, Norway, scoffed at the Moscow proceedings as "humbug." "For political vengeance," he said, "the trial puts the Dreyfus scandal and the reichstag fire in the shadow. The confessions were forced by the 'Ogpu' (secret police), which gives the accused a choice between confession according to the Ogpu's desires and taking lesser penalties or death."

PREMIER MUSSOLINI, insisting that neutrality in the Spanish war must mean absolute nonintervention, suddenly put Italy's air force of 1,500 war planes in readiness for flight to the aid of the Spanish rebels if France would not abandon her support of the Madrid regime.

News of this stirred the People's Front government of France to indignation. Officials in Paris said if Italy sent arms and munitions to the rebels in Spain or otherwise openly aided them, France would have to abandon her neutral position and help the socialists.

For a day this situation alarmed the statesmen of Europe, but soon it was stated in both Rome and Paris that negotiations for the neutrality accord were going forward nicely with prospects for a satisfactory agreement that would include both Italy and Germany. Whether Germany would come in, however, was still in doubt. Berlin was further provoked against the Madrid government by the stopping and search of the German steamer Kamerun by Spanish warships off Cadiz. German warships were ordered to protect German shipping "by all means" and the German charge d'affairs at Madrid was instructed to "protest immediately and in the sharpest form against the action of the Spanish warship, which constituted a violation of all international law."

Virgilio Cabanellas

DISPATCHES from the French border said Spanish rebel warships finally had begun the long threatened bombardment of San Sebastian and Irun, and that the loyalists were carrying out the threatened execution of the 1,900 Fascist hostages they were holding there. The battleship Espana fired a lot of heavy shells toward Fort Guadalupe but for a time at least was apparently not trying to hit that stronghold because many of their sympathizers were held prisoners in the fort. The Guadalupe garrison was hesitant in returning the fire for fear that shells would fall on French territory. Already the French government was angered by the dropping of bombs on French border towns, though it was disputed whether they came from loyalist or rebel planes.

The Fascists captured the important town of Badajoz, near the Portuguese border, at the point of the bayonet, and were reported to have executed 1,500 government adherents taken there. The rebels also reported a victory near Zaragoza after a bloody battle. General Franco met General Mola and "President" Virgilio Cabanellas at the northern rebel headquarters in Burgos and planned for further advances of their southern and northern columns on Madrid. These will be supplemented by 4,000 Moors and foreign legion veterans marching eastward from Badajoz.

CATALONIA, which for four years has been an autonomous region within the Spanish state, and which has been supporting the Madrid government against the Fascist rebels, sees in the present conditions the opportunity to establish its full independence. The generalitat or government council decreed confiscation of all private property; and then, "to eliminate dual control and place all responsibility in one place," all magistrates, judges and others appointed by the Madrid government were relieved of their duties. The council also announced it would act henceforth in complete independence in maintaining order.

The Catalonian decree promulgated plans for a single tax and speedy suppression of multiple taxation. The basis for the new tax plan, although undecided was presumed to be income, not land, as the large agricultural properties are to be collectivized.

POPE PIUS XI, addressing pilgrims from Malta, took another whack at communism. Alluding evidently to the civil war in Spain, he says: "The world is upside down, and sick from a grievous malady which threatens to become graver and more dangerous still. It is not necessary to say to you Maltese what this illness is, because you have a definite part in the tribulation.

"There is only the hand of God to aid humanity and put an end to the horrible massacres which are going on and all the offenses against human fraternity, against religion, priests and God."

PREPARATIONS for President Roosevelt's trip through the drouth region of the Middle West were practically completed and the Chief Executive was supplied with all the facts and figures needed to give him a comprehensive understanding of the situation before starting. This information was furnished mainly by WPA Administrator Harry Hopkins, who was selected to accompany Mr. Roosevelt on the tour. Mr. Hopkins told the President that in the drouth area 90,000 persons already are on the WPA payrolls and that the number eventually will be 120,000 to 150,000, the relief work being continued through the winter. At this time the cost per man is about $50 a month.

Estimates of the amount of money deemed necessary to meet the situation in the "dust bowl" were given the President by Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau and Acting Budget Director Daniel Bell.

President Benes

NEITHER Fascism nor Communism will be tolerated in Czechoslovakia, which is "a firm, indestructible lighthouse of democracy," said President Eduard Benes in a speech at Reichenberg. But he told the German minority which he was addressing particularly, that he hoped that in the fall "the Locarno powers will be able to work out a plan for general European co-operation and that good neighborly relations will be established between Germany and Czechoslovakia."

Leaders of the German minority in Czechoslovakia charge that unemployment in their part of the country is greater than anywhere else in Czechoslovakia—73 unemployed per 1,000 population, compared with the state average of 38 per 1,000.

They charge that this is partly the result of the government's failure to place orders in German Bohemian factories and failure to give state jobs to members of the German minority.

SOIL conservation compliance is to be checked by a system of aerial photography, if the experiments now being carried on by the AAA are satisfactory. The plan is still only on trial but several millions of acres have already been photographed, it was learned today. So far it is proving cheaper and more efficient than the usual way of checking farmers' soil conservation compliance. The air pictures also are being extensively used by the soil conservation service to map erosion and soil depletion and to determine remedies.

SEVEN minutes of lively fighting put Joe Louis of Detroit once more on the road to the heavyweight championship. He made his come-back by knocking out Jack Sharkey, one time title holder, in the third round at New York. The Lithuanian sailor from Boston was plucky enough but proved no match for the much younger negro. Louis now wants an immediate return match with Max Schmeling, but the German insists his next fight must be with Jim Braddock.

THERE is enough wheat in the United States for the usual domestic requirements of the season of 1936-37, according to the midsummer report of the bureau of agricultural economics, but the supply of red spring wheat and durum is short and consequently importation of those varieties will be continued. The amount, however, will not be large, Secretary Wallace stated.

"It is probable the spring wheat mills in the 1936-'37 season will use a larger percentage of hard red winter and Pacific northwest wheat than last year," said the report. "A larger than usual quantity of soft red winter wheat is also likely to be used in bread flour. As a result, imports of milling wheat may be less than in 1935."

Wheat prices in the United States may be expected to average about as high relative to world price levels as during the 1935-'36 season, when the price of No. 2 hard winter at Kansas City was 15 cents over Liverpool, the bureau said. During the last three years short crops together with other influences resulted in wheat prices in the United States being maintained unusually high relative to the world market price.

"Farm prices probably have been 20 cents to 30 cents higher than might have been expected with more nearly normal yields in the United States," the report continued. "A return of average or greater than average yields in the United States would result in an export surplus and prices would adjust toward an export basis.

"The acreage seeded for the 1936 crop, 74,000,000 acres, was the second largest in history, and seedings as large for the 1937 crop would produce fully enough wheat for total domestic utilization even if yields should turn out to be one-fourth below average."

President Roosevelt

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT was at his best as a radio orator when he addressed the summer camp at Chautauqua, N. Y., on foreign relations. He expressed his deep concern about tendencies in other parts of the world and spoke bitterly about the violation of both the letter and the spirit of international agreements "without regard to the simple principles of honor."

"Our closest neighbors are good neighbors," the President said. "If there are remoter nations that wish us not good but ill, they know that we are strong; they know that we can and will defend ourself and defend our neighborhood."

Mr. Roosevelt said he had seen war on land and sea.

"I have seen blood running from the wounded," he said. "I have seen men coughing out their gassed lungs. I have seen the dead in the mud. I have seen cities destroyed. I have seen 200 limping, exhausted men come out of line—the survivors of a regiment of 1,000 who went forward forty-eight hours before. I have seen children starving. I have seen the agonies of mothers and wives. I hate war!"

Germans felt that Mr. Roosevelt's speech was aimed at them and resented his criticism. A Mexico City newspaper saw in it evidence that the Monroe doctrine was to be revived.

STARTING its 1937 building program, the Navy department opened bids on twelve new destroyers and six submarines. The bids came from private shipyards and estimates were submitted by navy yards, according to law. The latter were not made public.

It was found that the cost of construction has advanced approximately $1,000,000 per vessel in the last year. A year ago contracts for destroyers averaged $4,000,000, and $2,500,000 for submarines. Present bids were about a million dollars higher on each type of craft.

FOLLOWING the recommendation of Father Charles E. Coughlin, the National Union for Social Justice, in convention in Cleveland, indorsed the candidacy of Representatives Lemke and O'Brien, heads of the Union party ticket. But, also on the advice of the priest, the Lemke platform was not indorsed. The 25,000 members of the N. U. S. J. present enthusiastically and unanimously elected Father Coughlin president of the organization. Lemke and O'Brien both appeared before the convention, delivered speeches and were given a rousing reception.

AN EQUITY suit attacking the constitutionality of the commodity exchange act, chiefly on the ground that it seeks to regulate intrastate rather than interstate commerce in violation to the Constitution, was filed in the federal district court in Chicago.

The suit was instituted by William S. Moore, a member of the Chicago Mercantile Exchange, and names the exchange, its board of directors, and the following as defendants: Henry A. Wallace, secretary of agriculture; Leslie A. Fitz, supervisor of the commodity exchange administration in Chicago; Daniel C. Roper, secretary of commerce; Homer S. Cummings, United States attorney general; Michael L. Igoe, United States district attorney of the northern Illinois district, and Ernest J. Kruetgen, Chicago postmaster.

In his petition Mr. Moore asked that the commodity exchange act be declared unconstitutional, void, and unenforceable.

On Success for Women—

Are They Failures Because of Lack of Something to Do?

◆

IN A recently published symposium of twenty-eight authorities on the present status of women, one well-known writer tries to explain women's failure. She says it is natural for women to fail. For "it is out of the necessity for food and shelter and for providing for the family that most men have fashioned success, and the lack of this insistent necessity has been a great handicap on the activities of women."

"What they have had to do," we are told, "women have often done very well indeed. Crises of illness in their children call forth from mothers efforts that in other phases would be termed heroic. Likewise, during the World war, women faced danger and loss gallantly, and they were happier than at any other time in this Twentieth century. But there are today so few things that women have got to do."

If our readers find that ridiculous, I am glad they agree with me, says a noted writer on subjects pertaining to women. To call women failures because more men are in "Who's Who," because less women than men have made positions for themselves in the professions and industries of the country, is preposterous on the face of it. It leaves entirely out of account the fact that success cannot be measured by rule of thumb, that it is a relative term. Suppose a woman who might have made a successful office manager, a well-known author, or a famous psychologist, chooses instead to give the major portion of her time and interest to raising a family. Is she a failure? That phase of the question has been so often and so ably discussed that I shall not try to add to it.

However, in the statements that men have a head start for success in the necessity to provide for a family, and that women are at a disadvantage because today "there are so few things they have got to do," there is food for thought, and, perhaps, for discussion, by our readers.

While it is undoubtedly true that the success of many men has grown out of their necessity to earn a living, there are countless thousands to whom that necessity has been the obstacle between them and success. There, again, it is the question of what is meant by success. It seems to me that acquiring wealth is only one kind of success, and it is success only to the man who started out with that as an object. And I have known personally men whose connotation of success was making a worthwhile contribution in certain of the arts or sciences, men with ability and talent for the work of their dreams, who failed because of the necessity for the daily grind in a gainful occupation.

As to there being "so few things that women have got to do" — isn't the emancipation of women from complete absorption in domestic or other duties their great opportunity for growth? In Europe, the American woman is regarded as notoriously her husband's superior in matters of mental growth amd cultural attainment. The reason is obvious, of course, in his preoccupation with breadwinning which sets her free for the higher aims of self-improvement and cultural and civic betterment for her community. Isn't that one kind of success?

DAISY FLY KILLER

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted

by William Bruckart

National Press Building Washington, D. C.

Washington.—President Roosevelt has come out again with a statement that the burden of taxes is regrettable and that there must be no new levies nor tax increase by the next congress. He chose to get his views to the public by staging a conference at the White House the other day when he summoned Chairman Harrison of the senate finance committee and Chairman Doughton of the house ways and means committee for a breakfast meeting to discuss the subject. He followed this almost too quickly by releasing a statement, a letter from Secretary Morgenthau that substantiated the spoken word of his two congressional leaders.

No New Tax Levies

But somehow the word from the White House prompted many observers here to pick flaws in the pronouncement; they began at once to find several places in the new picture that appeared to have been smeared over by the paint brush, and, in addition, there was a sudden yelp from the Republican national committee which did not help Mr. Roosevelt's plans to show the country that the tax burden had reached its peak.

The Republicans were quite harsh because they called attention to the fact that Mr. Roosevelt on three previous occasions had assured the country there would be no new taxes, and that in each instance new tax legislation somehow or other had been enacted by congress.

Aside from the presidential declaration that there would be no new taxes nor increases in the present levies and that there would be a study of the general tax structure, the President made the point through Secretary Morgenthau's letter that there were a good many hundred millions in "recoverable assets." He also urged upon the country that business has improved so rapidly that additional federal income may be expected from the present tax rates. This latter, of course, is true providing business holds its own or moves to higher levels but it is with respect to the recoverable assets that many questions now are being asked. For the sake of clarity, it may be explained that the recoverable assets to which Mr. Roosevelt referred consisted of the loans of federal money by the various emergency agencies for relief and recovery purposes. There are the millions loaned by the Reconstruction Finance corporation; the equally large amounts loaned by the Works Progress administration and the Public Works administration to states, counties and cities for relief or for job-making construction. In addition, there are loans by the Home Owners' Loan corporation, the Federal Farm Credit administration, loans for crop production, for marketing and countless other types. These are all carried on the books as recoverable assets and their total may amount to as much as $8,000,000,000.

The policy of the New Deal administration is to consider these at their face value. It is the claim of the White House consistently that these loans will be repaid and that they can be used to retire an equal amount of the national debt, which, indeed, is true if the loans ever are repaid.

So, whenever the New Deal is called on to defend itself against charges of imposing a gigantic burden of tax or an equally gigantic burden of public debt, its spokesmen attempt to demonstrate that the public debt figure as well as the taxes must be considered in their relationship to these recoverable assets.

To explain the Roosevelt position further, one may recall that a month ago when the public debt reached the staggering total of $33,779,000,000 the Treasury secretary contended in a public statement that against this sum there should be offset the cash assets in the general fund of the Treasury, then totaling $2,681,000,000 and the $2,000,000,000 of gold that is sterilized in what is known as the exchange sterilization fund.

"In addition," Mr. Morgenthau added in his statement, "we have certain assets representing obligations due us upon which the Treasury will realize cash and which will ultimately be available for debt retirement. These recoverable assets —millions to home owners, to farmers, to railways, to banks and insurance companies, to states, and cities—now total more than $4,000,000,000. These three items—cash on hand, stabilization fund and recoverable loans—provide an offset of $8,750,000,000 to the $33,779,000,000 public debt."

It thus is made to appear directly in issue how completely the Roosevelt administration calculates using these recoverable assets in retiring the public debt. Having gone so thoroughly on record, it is difficult to see how there could have been such a mistake made as developed from the White House conference on taxes. I refer to the inclusion in Secretary Morgenthau' letter of a reference to the recoverable assets as one of the reasons why no new taxes will not have to be levied. Some critics have stated boldly that the White House statements on the recoverable assets cannot be justified. Their assertion is that if the Treasury properly included recoverable assets as a thing to be used in offsetting the public debt, then by the same token those recoverable assets, or repayments of them, cannot be used to reduce the tax burden. In other words, the money represented by those assets cannot be spent in two different ways. Either it must be used to retire public debt or it must be used for current spending by the administration. It seems to be simply a refusal to believe the old adage that you cannot have your cake and eat it too.

If I should attempt to analyze the situation in the light of a personal equation I think I might properly say that if I loaned $500 to a friend and at the same time if I borrowed $500 from a bank, I might properly say the $500 loaned to the friend could be used to pay off the bank loan. So far, so good. But if the friend repaid $250 to me and I spent that $250 and had no other resources, I can't quite figure out how I would pay the bank the $500 I had borrowed from that institution.

Although perhaps my worries as an individual about government policies may not be very important because I am just one individual, I entertain considerable fear about those recoverable assets in another respect. For some reason—and I think I can state it—I doubt that a very large portion of those recoverable assets ever will be collected. I have a hunch that in the next fifteen or twenty years the bulk of those debts which the Roosevelt administration counts as repayable will be cancelled or defaulted. In either event, I think I see how politics is going to play an important part and I am convinced further that Mr. Morgenthau and Mr. Roosevelt as well, if he shares Mr. Morgenthau's belief, is overlooking that very vital influence when he holds these loans as likely to be repaid.

* * *

Default Likely

I recall that the late Albert C. Ritchie, four times a Democratic governor of Maryland, predicted that the money loaned for the various purposes outlined above, would never be paid back. Indeed, Governor Ritchie, who was a very practical man and who thoroughly disliked deluding himself, used the word "repudiation" in connection with these debts. He said they would be handled just like the $11,000,000,000 of war loans made to European nations.

It is a noble thought, of course, that the loans will be repaid, yet it is quite apparent that a cancellation drive is already under way. I think most of those who do me the honor to read my column will recall that more than a year ago I directed their attention to the reduction in interest rates which congress had ordered on many of the loans. That is simply the first step. Cancellation proposals, undisguised, are bound to follow.

Unless I am mistaken, the astute Jesse Jones, chairman of the Reconstruction Finance corporation and a man who never kids himself, already has kissed good-by to many of the millions that have been loaned by his agency. Of course, the Reconstruction Finance corporation carries those loans on its books and counts them still as valid. But I am of the opinion that Mr. Jones probably regards those items as dead debts.

But to go further with the idea of cancellation, it takes no stretch of the imagination to say that the Home Owners' Loan corporation, for example, will soon have a good many thousand foreclosed properties on its hands. It takes no more imagination to say that politicians who have ridden into office with promises to help those people whose homes have been foreclosed will carry out their promises by further voting interest reduction or curtailment of principal.

A more striking illustration, it seems to me, can be found in the case of the loans to states, cities and towns. Who among the politicians is going to have the courage to resist the tumult and the voting of their constituents to avoid increase in their local taxes when they call for cancellation of the loans?

While the bonus for the ex-service men is a dead issue, every one knows how representatives and senators capitulated to the demands of the veterans' lobby. Picture for yourself, if you will, how much stronger the demand will be when a whole community sets up a howl to have the funds it has borrowed from the federal government finally declared to have been just a gift and not a loan.

Railroad Jim THE COLUMN CONDUCTOR Says . . .

Freight trains nowadays act like express specials. New freight schedules are so fast, I sometimes wonder if everything has to be delivered day before yesterday.

●

Many of our passenger trains are running faster schedules, too. Well, one thing is sure. We make faster runs, but the first railroad commandment is still "Safety First." That's one rule they won't change.

●

Western railroads and allied industries provided jobs for 750,000 workers last year. Some of them live in our town. Good neighbors.

●

Passenger fares are now the lowest in history with substantial reductions on round trips. And no more surcharge for riding in sleeping cars.

●

This new Free pick-up-and-delivery of less than carload freight—I heard some traveling salesmen talking about it on the train yesterday. They said it saves shippers a lot of money and centers all responsibility on the railroad. The railroad picks up the freight at shipper's door and delivers to receiver's door. Of course, local delivery men get the haul from door-to-car and car-to-door at both ends. The railroad handles the whole transaction.

●

When railroads are busy, I notice towns along the railroad are prosperous. The merchants put more ads in the newspapers.

●

We are proud of railroad achievements, appreciate the public's good will and increased patronage, and pledge continued progress.

TWO FAREWELL PARTIES

Farewell parties were held Monday night for Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Christensen who have sold their interest in the local Cities Service station and are leaving to make their home on a farm northwest of Thief River Falls. Mr. Christensen was the guest of honor at a party given by the Business Men's Club at the club rooms. After a program of short talks, Mr. Christensen was presented with a suitable reminder of the occasion by the club, and later a buffet lunch was served. During the same evening Mrs. Christensen was honored at a party given by a group of ladies at the Paul Ortloff home. A very enjoyable evening was spent, and a fine lunch was served. Mrs. Christensen was the recipient of an appropriate token of remembrance from her friends. Friends in the village are loath to see the Christensen family depart, but all join in wishing them success in their new home.

Magnus Johnson Said to be in Improved State

Magnus Johnson is really improving and it looks as if he's going to recover, his physician, Dr. Karl Danielson, said Wednesday at Litchfield.

The temperature of the former United States senator, who has been fighting double pneumonia in Litchfield hospital, was down to about 99, Dr. Danielson reported. His pulse had declined to 120.

"Mr. Johnson had a pretty fair night and I feel that unless unforseen complications develop, he will pull through," the physician said. "He has lots of endurance. The disease has stopped spreading."

Miss Emma Dupont, Red Lake County Auditor, Is River Drowning Victim

Believed to have been grief crazed by death of her father, the late George DuPont, Red Lake county auditor, who died last April, Miss Emma Dupont, 37 years old, who succeeded him, drowned herself in the Red Lake river Wednesday.

Her body was found near the power dam one mile from Red Lake Falls. She was last seen alive at 6 a. m. Wednesday morning and when she failed to come home for lunch at noon search was begun.

Survivors are her step-mother, three step-brothers and five step-sisters. Funeral arrangements were incomplete Wednesday night.

REPUBLICAN RALLY

A Republican rally will be held at Thief River Falls on Friday, September 18. The gathering will start with a dinner at the Sons of Norway hall at 7:00 P. M. Prominent speakers have been secured for this occasion, and an invitation is extended to people of the county to hear them. A charge of 50 cents per plate will be made for the dinner.

BALL TOURNAMENT HERE SEPTEMBER 13

To mark end of the baseball season for teams in the Northern Minnesota League who finished their schedule for 1936 with the games played last Sunday, plans are now being made for a district tournament to be held in St. Hilaire on Sunday, Sept. 13.

Teams participating will be Goodridge, Plummer, Oklee and Garnes from the east half of the district, and Red Lake Falls, Kittson and St. Hilaire from the west half. An invitation has been extended to teams and ball fans from all the towns mentioned to gather at St. Hilaire park for a picnic dinner. Local people will serve coffee and cream to all comers. Afternoon a program of contests, races, etc., will be given at the ball ground. The ball game following will be played by teams representing the east and west districts, the members being outstanding players on the different teams this season. This should prove a very interesting contest and well worth seeing.

While all plans have not been completed up to this time, it is expected one or two bands will be on hand to furnish music during the day.

TO OBSERVE ANNIVERSARY

Fiftieth anniversary of foundation of the church organization and dedication services will be held at the Clearwater Lutheran church in Wyandotte township next Sunday. The Rt. Rev. I. T. Aastad of Detroit Lakes, assisted by other pastors, will officiate at the services at 11:00 A. M. and a program will be given afternoon starting at 2:30.

Two Men Killed Near Orleans Sunday Night

A father and son were killed Sunday night in an automobile accident near Orleans, Minn., five miles south of the Canadian border. The dead are Charles Melin, 60, years old and his son, Axel, 35. The accident occurred when the car left the road and crashed into a concrete bridge. The elder Melin was a widower and is survived by several children. Axel leaves his wife and several children.

WOLF, KEPT FROM DOOR, RETURNS WITH RACOON

Moorhead:— Residents of Elm street in Moorhead have been more or less successful in keeping the wolf from the door, but are finding it equally difficult to close their outside portals against some of the rest of the animal kingdom. Three householders were startled one night recently to find a raccoon snooping around their dining rooms. Merton Moll heard something sniffing something to eat. It had broken through a front porch screen. He chased the animal from the house, but Mr. Coon was not to be discouraged. He went next door to the Herman Sears residence, and repeated the performance. Chased from this home, too, he tried his luck across the street, but there met his Waterloo. A dog owned by Mrs. Herman Klotz resented the intrusion of his domain, and killed the raccoon. Neighbors blame the marauding coon for the death of 25 chickens nearby recently.

OPENS FOOD MARKET

Sig Engh, brother of William and Ed. Engh of this village, who has resided at Minneapolis since leaving here some years ago, has gone into business for himself after being employed in different provision and meat markets at Minneapolis for several years. His new shop which carries meats and allied lines, is located at 622 Hennepin avenue. Friends back home hope the new venture will prove successful, and wish Sig the best of luck.

LAST FRAME RALLY WINS SUNDAY GAME

Final game in this season's schedule of the Northern Minnesota League was played by the local team last Sunday when it met the Kittson team of Crookston on local ground. The visitors had the edge from the start and played a consistant game thruout. At their end of the ninth frame with the score 5 to 2 in favor of Kittson, Myles Jackson went in as a pinch hitter for St. Hilaire, getting a safe single. From that point on the home boys pounded out singles and doubles in quick succession until four runners had crossed the pan, giving St. Hilaire the game 6 to 5.

Mr. and Mrs. Gerald Stephens and children were here this week from near Angus for a visit with relatives and friends.

Mrs. O. C. Johnson and daughters of Moorhead, Mrs. Solum and daughter Myrtle of Grand Forks, visited here last Sunday at the Mike Highland home.

MANY AT FUNERAL OF CHAS. KUNDERT

More than fifty people from St. Hilaire and vicinity were at Red Lake Falls last Saturday to attend funeral services for the late Charles L. Kundert, which were held at the Presbyterian church in that city. The church edifice was entirely too small to accommodate the large number of friends who came to pay their last respects to Mr. Kundert who was highly esteemed by everyone thruout this section. The floral tributes were both the most beautiful and numerous of any ever seen on similar occasion at Red Lake Falls. The Masonic lodge of Red Lake Falls, of which Mr. Kundert was a member, took part in the service at the church and also at the graveside in the cemetery east of the city where interment was made.

BAND CONCERT SATURDAY

The school band will give another open air concert at the grounds north of Larson Bros. store next Saturday evening at 8:00. This will likely be the last outdoor concert for this season unless weather conditions like the present should continue.

Bullitt Is Made Ambassador to France—Hitler Stirs Stalin to Talk of War—Secretary Dern Dies in Washington.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.

TRANSFER of William C. Bullitt from the embassy in Moscow to that in Paris is not surprising. He it was who was chiefly responsible for the recognition of the Soviet government by the United States, and when he was rewarded with the ambassadorship it was expected he would be able to swing a lot of Russian business to American concerns. Also it was hoped he could persuade his Russian friends to keep their promises not to disturb this country with communist propaganda. In these respects at least Mr. Bullitt has been a disappointment. But he retains the confidence of President Roosevelt and will not be out of place as ambassador to the leftist French government.

W. C. Bullitt.

Some observers think Mr. Bullitt is sent to Paris for the purpose of secretly sounding out the major European powers on the possibility of reconvening the world economic conference in 1937.

Jesse Isador Straus resigned as ambassador to France on the advice of his physicians. The President wrote him that "if this administration shall be continued for another four years, I shall count on your returning as a part of it."

REICHSFUEHRER HITLER has injected a little more ginger into the international armament race by suddenly announcing that the term for compulsory military service for Germans was doubled—two years instead of one. As matters are just now in Europe, this appeared to be aimed directly against soviet Russia, and if the London newspapers are to be believed, Dictator Stalin recognizes this and reacts as might be expected. The London Evening News and Daily Mail both assert that Stalin, in a secret radio address to the red army, said:

"Comrades of the red forces: We are on the very eve of momentous events. At any moment now you may be called upon to lay down your lives for the defense of the proletarian birthland.

"This is the moment you have been anticipating, and now your birthland is expecting you to do the duty you have so eagerly awaited.

"Our enemies are getting into position, So be ready. The enemies are on the frontiers of our great land. Keep watch.

"Everything money could buy, everything the genius of man could invent and everything the loving labor of the workers could make have been given into your hands for the defense and glory of the Soviet land."

The London papers say other Soviet leaders followed Stalin with similar talks. The foreign office in Moscow flatly denied that the dictator had delivered any such address as was reported.

German economists, worried over the mounting costs of re-arming their country, were told the doubling of the term of military service would not be quite so expensive as it appeared, for more men in barracks means fewer on dole. However, the national debt continued to grow and ways of meeting payments are becoming fewer and more scanty.

SECRETARY OF WAR GEORGE H. DERN died in Walter Reed hospital, Washington, of heart disease and other complications resulting from influenza. He had been ill since last spring but part of the time had insisted on attending to his official duties, keeping this up even from his sick bed. Mr. Dern, who was sixty-four years old, was formerly a brilliant mining engineer and was the second non-Mormon to be elected governor of Utah, serving two terms.

ANNOUNCEMENT was made by WPA officials in Washington that more than 110,000 farmers are now at work on Works Progress administration projects in the drouth areas of the West and Central West.

About half of the farmers on the WPA rolls are in North and South Dakota. North Dakota reported 32,762 at work on federal projects and South Dakota 22,927. Relief and agricultural authorities have estimated that 110,000 to 120,000 farmers will need help through the winter in the Dakotas.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT'S special train made a quick run to Bismarck, N. D., and the special committee on the drouth, headed by Morris L. Cooke, reported to him on its inspection of the afflicted area. The President then took an automobile tour through the countryside to see for himself some of the effects of the long dry spell. He conferred with Acting Governor Welford and Senators Nye and Frazier of North Dakota and Acting Governor Holt and Senators Wheeler and Murray of Montana. Next day Mr. Roosevelt's train carried him down to Pierre, S. D., and thence into other drouth stricken states.

Mr. Roosevelt's original schedule was changed to permit him to make a quick run to Salt Lake City for the burial services of Secretary of War Dern.

JOHN L. LEWIS' Committee for Industrial Organization in one of its initial efforts to organize the steel workers seems to have succeeded only in leading one big plant to go out of business, throwing 750 men out of employment. Such is the result of a strike in the plant of the Standard Steel Spring company at Coraopolis, Pa., the strike being directed by the CIO. The employees who didn't strike later refused to work because, they said, their families had been threatened by phone with bombing if the men returned to the plant. So the company closed down and began removing the machinery. It was alleged the strikers were assured in advance that they would be given relief money if the plant were closed, and that the state authorities did nothing to protect the plant or the non-strikers from violence.

FEDERAL JUDGE JOHN P. BARNES of Chicago upheld the constitutionality of the Commodity Exchange act and denied an injunction to restrain its enforcement asked by members of the Chicago Mercantile exchange. Judge Barnes agreed with the contention of Special Assistant Attorney General Wendell Berge that the act is "merely an extension of the provisions of the grain futures act," which has been held constitutional by the United States Supreme Court.

FIGURES given out by the Department of Commerce revealed that July merchandise exports from the United States declined to $178,324,000, the lowest level of the year, while imports increased to $193,409,000, leaving an unfavorable balance of trade of $15,085,000 for the month. It was the second successive month an unfavorable balance was reported. However, compared with the 1935 month, exports were up 3 per cent and imports up 9 per cent.

Sec. Roper.

The unfavorable balance was regarded by Secretary of Commerce Roper as convincing proof of economic recovery in the United States because nearly half the increase in imports over last year in dollar volume was accounted for by luxury items such as furs and whisky and commodities not extensively produced in this country, such as wood-pulp, paper, nickel and tin.

The increase in exports over July, 1935, consisted chiefly of finished and semi-manufactured articles, including machinery, electrical apparatus, aircraft, iron and steel manufactures and inedible vegetable products.

AFTER more than five weeks of desperate fighting, neither the Spanish loyalists nor the rebels were able to claim a decided advantage, and it became evident that the conflict would be long drawn out if the other European nations could keep aloof. This latter eventuality was made more probable by Adolf Hitler's announcement that the German government had ordered an embargo on arms to Spain. He thus lined his country up with Great Britain and France, and Italy had accepted the French proposal for neutrality, though with some reservations.

These "neutral" nations, however, do not intend to be imposed upon and both the British and the German governments made strong protests to the Madrid government against alleged violation of the freedom of the seas. Five British warships set sail from Gibraltar and Hitler sent seven from the Baltic to enforce the demands that interference with shipping cease. The crews of these vessels were ready for immediate action.

The United States does not consider the attempted blockade of rebel-held ports any more valid than do the European nations. Secretary Hull told the Madrid foreign office: "My government directs me to inform you that, with the friendliest feelings toward the Spanish government, it cannot admit the legality of any action on the part of the Spanish government in declaring such ports closed unless that government declares and maintains an effective blockade of such ports."

FOLLOWING the confessions and execution of the Russian conspirators against Stalin and the Soviet government, the Norwegian authorities decided that Leon Trotzky, alleged author of the plot, had violated the conditions of his asylum in Norway. They gave him the choice of immediate arrest or signing a promise to refrain from all revolutionary activities, and he chose the latter.

DURING the fall maneuvers France has been testing the strength of its new fortifications along the German frontier — the Maginot line. In the Montmedy region the elaborate system of concrete strongholds was subjected to an "enemy" attack, and observers said the assailing troops, armed with the newest and speediest equipment, were able to penetrate the line only at a few places and in small numbers. Reservists from the interior of France had moved up to occupy the line in thirty-six hours. Watching the "battle" was a delegation of generals from Soviet Russia.

FLOYD B. OLSON, Farmer-Laborite governor of Minnesota and candidate for the United States senatorship, died of stomach cancer after a courageous fight. He had been ill for months but had kept up his executive and campaign activities as best he could until the end. Hjalmar Peterson, lieutenant governor, succeeds him as governor, but at this writing there is doubt as to whom the party's state central committee will select to make the race for the senatorship. Francis H. Shoemaker of Duluth announced his candidacy immediately, and two other men were being considered—Senator Elmer A. Benson, now a candidate for governor, and Representative Ernest Lundeen of Minneapolis.

TOM BLANTON of Abilene, Tex., veteran ranter in congress, has lost his seat in that body and says he will return to the practice of law. For twenty years, with one brief interlude, he has represented his district in the house but in the run-off Democratic primary, which is equivalent to an election there, he was beaten by Clyde L. Garrett of Eastland, a county judge.

JOSEPH W. HARRIMAN, former president of the Harriman National Bank and Trust company of New York and a powerful figure in national finance, was released on parole from the federal northeastern penitentiary at Lewisburg, Pa. He hastened to New York where, it was believed, he would seek a position teaching business subjects. Harriman was sent to prison in 1934 for four and a half years after his conviction on charges of banking irregularities involving more than a million dollars.

SENATOR JAMES COUZENS of Michigan, a Republican long noted for his independence of party restrictions and a candidate for renomination on the Republican ticket, has announced that he will support President Roosevelt for re-election. His statement was:

Bainbridge Colby

"Believing as I do that the most important matter confronting the nation is the re-election of President Roosevelt, I intend to support him.

"The outcome of my own candidacy for the senate is neither important to the nation nor to me, but I believe it is important that my many loyal supporters in Michigan be advised in advance of the primary on September 15.

"The reasons for this conclusion will be advanced from time to time between now and election next November."

On the other hand, Bainbridge Colby of New York, who was secretary of state in President Wilson's cabinet, announced that he is for Landon, declaring in a published statement:

"Governor Landon's candidacy carries the hopes of every American who knows what America stands for, and who respects the principles which have brought us to greatness as a nation, and preserved our liberties as self-governed people.

"The thoughtful and independent Democrats throughout the country —and their number is formidable— are determined in this election to rebuke the betrayal of their party by the administration in Washington."

GREAT BRITAIN and Egypt have settled their disputes and signed a treaty of friendship and alliance. It brings Egypt much nearer to its goal of independence while at the same time it provides full safety for England's interests, especially the Suez canal. The British troops probably will be withdrawn from Cairo and other cities and concentrated with the air force within the canal zone around Ismailia. The maximum strength is to be 10,000 in the army and 3,400 in the air force, but in an emergency Britain will be allowed to send necessary reinforcements.

The British high commissioner to Cairo and the Egyptian minister to London will be raised to the status of ambassadors.

What Kind of Salad Shall We Have for Lunch, or for Dinner?

That Seems to Be All-Important Question on These Warm Days.

And what kind of a salad? That's the usual question in warm weather both for lunch and for dinner. Whatever you choose, it must, of course, be crisp and well chilled. For dinner, it will probably have French dressing. This mixture of oil and vinegar can, however, be varied by different blends of seasoning.

The most important seasoning is, of course, the oil itself, and next to that is the vinegar. You may have your preference between Italian and French olive oil or you may be American enough to prefer one of the salad oils made from a corn or cottonseed base. A malt, a cider, a wine vinegar or one of these vinegars flavored with tarragon will each give a different character to your dressing. Lemon or lime juice used instead of vinegar will lend an individual note.

Whatever acid you use, be sure that you do not overdo it. Many dressings are too sour. While the standard proportions are supposed to be three tablespoons of oil to one tablespoon of vinegar or lemon juice, four to one often makes a more desirable combination. Besides salt, pepper and sugar, which are always used for seasoning, a little mustard, chile sauce, ketchup, or a dash of one of the sauces of the Worcestershire type are good additions. Some prefer to have the bowl rubbed with garlic or add some sliced onions or onion juice.

Chiffonade Dressing

½ cup French dressing
2 tablespoons minced celery
1 teaspoon minced parsley
1 tablespoon minced onion
1 hard-boiled egg, finely minced
2 tablespoons minced green pepper, or cooked beets

Mix other ingredients and add to French dressing.

Special French Dressing

1 cup salad oil
1 cup sugar
¾ cup malt vinegar
1 teaspoon grated onion
½ cup ketchup
1½ teaspoons salt
1 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce

Mix ingredients and beat until thick. Store in refrigerator and beat before using.

GROUND GRIP TIRES
First Choice
OF FARMERS EVERYWHERE

Firestone Farm Exhibit, Great Lakes Exposition, Cleveland, Ohio

OUTSTANDING performance has made Firestone Ground Grip Tires preferred equipment for farmers, who have proved that Ground Grip Tires save 25% in time and fuel, and greatly reduce repairs and upkeep costs.

The self-cleaning tread gives the greatest traction ever known. Gum-Dipping gives the cord body strength to stand the extra stresses of super-traction. The special construction of two extra layers of Gum-Dipped cords under the tread binds the tread and cord body into one inseparable unit. With Firestone's new demountable rim and cut-down method of applying the rim on the original wheels, one set of Ground Grip Tires will fit several implements.

Go to your nearest Firestone Tire Dealer or Implement Dealer or Firestone Auto Supply and Service Store today and ask to see these money-saving tires. And when you order a new tractor or implement, specify Firestone Ground Grip Tires.

Mud Slinging Ahead

Washington. — As the political campaign waxes warmer, it becomes painfully evident that the fight in 1936 for the suffrage of the people is going to be very dirty. It is going to be bitter and there is no way now apparent that such a characteristic can be avoided.

I do not believe that either Governor Landon, the Republican candidate, or President Roosevelt, seeking re-election as a Democrat, can prevent the hurling of invectives that are going to be very close to mud-slinging. Naturally the President of the United States seldom makes a mud-slinging speech and Governor Landon personally is a mild-mannered man who believes in discussing issues rather than individuals, but the intentions or the desires of these two candidates cannot control the bitterness that is, to my mind, certain to be found in this campaign in a large measure.

As typical of the sort of thing to which I have referred is the recent speech of Secretary Ickes who, in a national radio broadcast, became quite ill-tempered in his attack on Governor Landon. Mr. Ickes is not known for his composure anyway and when he gets heated up on any subject, he is likely to be guilty of remarks that are not becoming to an official of our government or any other.

I have not the slightest doubt that before the campaign has proceeded much further there will be similar speeches attacking Mr. Roosevelt personally and that, while Governor Landon may not approve, there will be unworthy charges hurled at the President.

Mr. Ickes skated pretty close to the line in his attack on Governor Landon by various adroit phrases which were designed to create the impression that the Republican candidate was either ignorant or dishonest. I do not know Governor Landon personally but I can offer this thought: No man is going to be nominated by any political party in a national convention, nominated by acclamation, unless his record is pretty clear. For Mr. Ickes to say, therefore, in effect, that Governor Landon had sold out to "Wall Street" was not the sort of campaign discussion likely to produce confidence among all the people in their government. It is comparable, in my opinion, to a charge that the President of the United States, who advertises himself continually as a friend of the common man, was guilty of increasing his own personal fortune through presidential acts—and every one knows this is not true. But to get back to the theme song of the Ickes' speech, it seems to me that the tragedy of his radio pronouncement lies in the fact throughout his discussion he was preaching class hatred. Every one knows, of course, attacks on "Wall Street" are very common in any political campaign. The demagogues use it every hour of every day everywhere they can find any one to listen to them. It is ridiculous, but it has happened for a good many years. So when Mr. Ickes made the charge that Governor Landon was either unwittingly or knowingly leading a "rich man's fight" against President Roosevelt he was descending to a rather low level of campaigning.

* * *

May Cause Showdown

I have seen indications of a reaction against the Ickes' speech in another way. John Hamilton, the Republican national chairman, on his recent organization tour of the western states, propounded the inquiry that seeks to identify the "economic royalists" about which President Roosevelt spoke several weeks ago. If the Roosevelt campaigners continue this class hatred propaganda, I rather suspect from what Mr. Hamilton said in his speeches there will be a perfect barrage of demands to know the names of these economic royalists. It may not seem important; indeed, it seems like it probably is inconsequential, but if the Republicans let down a barrage on the President of the United States, he is likely to be put in a bad corner.

Without attempting to forecast what the Republican opposition is likely to say, I can recall as an observer close to the wheels of government during the Roosevelt regime that Mr. Roosevelt frequently was a guest on the Astor yacht and that one of his chief advisors for many months was the multimillionaire, Bernard M. Baruch. It seems also that a very rich man, Henry L. Doherty, was in charge of the nation-wide dance program held on the President's birthday and Mr. Doherty, be it said, is head of one of the great utility chains.

These are just samples. It may be good politics for the President to encourage these attacks without approving them, but those of us who knew the late Louis McHenry Howe, are convinced that he never would have agreed to that sort of attack, had he been alive and serving as the President's closest political advisor as he did for a quarter of a century.

Probe G-Men

There is a situation in the federal government that threatens to be quite nasty. I refer to the row that has developed between the Department of Justice bureau of investigation (the G-men) and the Treasury's secret service corps. It is all very much under cover, quite secret, but the row has come to the surface sufficiently to result in a demotion of two long-time members of the secret service.

J. Edgar Hoover has been well press-agented as chief of the G-men. Joseph E. Murphy has had almost no advertising as assistant chief of the Treasury secret service in which he has served for more than a quarter of a century. Mr. Murphy and one of his subordinates have been reduced in rank, their record stained for life.

The two departments have kept the facts well covered up. It seems that something was going on among the G-men that the Treasury secret service thought they ought to know about. They conducted their own inquiry, their own investigation into the other staff of investigators. That is as much as has been made public except Secretary Morgenthau's announcement of the demotion order. I have known each of these men equally twenty years. Each is entitled to the utmost respect. But each operates along an entirely different line—Hoover with some willingness for publicity; Murphy with an absolute policy of never letting his name get into the papers. It is unfortunate that Joe Murphy was the goat.

Action Mystifies

The board of governors of the Federal Reserve system took an action recently that probably is quite mystifying to the average person. They ordered all of the banks of the country which are members of the Federal Reserve system to keep a deposit reserve with the Federal Reserve banks 15 per cent greater than ever has been required before.

With the technical phases of reserve requirements and the mechanical operation of this particular order, I think we need not be very much concerned. But with the principle upon which this action is taken I think every one with a bank account, however small, ought to be vitally interested. They ought to be interested for the very simple reason that this action illustrates better than any words I can write how far the centralization of control of the banking structure has gone. This action was taken under the National Banking act of 1935, a statute that has been frequently criticised as a "political banking act."

In the instance I have just reported, the change in the reserve requirements probably will have no serious reaction on us as individuals. It probably will not hurt the banks because few banks in the country have had calls for loans in any quantity since business is at such a low level. But the point is that under this law, the Federal Reserve board of governors can alter banking conditions over night. It can issue new rules and regulations that are wholly impossible of understanding by the average individual, but which are almost riotous in their effect upon the management of individual banks throughout the country.

To state this proposition in another way, may I describe it in the terms of a private business enterprise. If a storekeeper in a small town were subjected to regulation from Washington and the regulatory power in the federal government had such discretionary authority as the Federal Reserve board of governors, could that storekeeper ever feel that he was managing his own business? I think not. Then, in the case of the Federal Reserve board of governors, it must be added that the president of the board is Marriner S. Eccles who is known far and wide for his radical ideas about banking. It can be further said that Mr. Eccles has the ear of President Roosevelt. This has been criticised many times of course where opponents of the Roosevelt banking policies have contended that the banks can be utilized in any way the administration desires to use them. As an illustration of this, the federal government has been borrowing billions. Most banks are chock full of government securities. While I do not say it has happened, yet because I do not believe it has happened yet, nevertheless there is a possibility that government borrowings can be forced on the banks under such conditions. That is the course of action that has ruined the currency in half a dozen European nations.

Minneapolis—Parking meters, collecting 5-cent fees from motorists parking on loop streets, will be in operation in Minneapolis by November 15, if on unforseen obstacles interfere with plans of the city council traffic committee, Alderman A. B. Fruen, chairman, forecast.

Camp Ripley—Soldiers and officers of the Third Infantry made a nine-day march from Fort Snelling to Camp Ripley. The regiment will remain three weeks for maneuvers. In the journey north, there was one night march, a forced march of 20 miles and two days of leap-frogging by trucks and hiking.

Minneapolis—Minnesota received grants totaling $1,960,875 from the federal social security board for assistance to the needy in the six months' period ending Aug. 15, according to Fred M. Wilcox, director of region, eight for the security board. The grants were spent principally for old age pensions.

St. Paul—Governor Floyd B. Olson was the third of Minnesota's line of governors to die in office. Governor John A. Johnson of St. Peter took office January 4, 1905. He died September 21, 1909, during his second term in office. Governor Winfield S. Hammond of St. James took office January 5, 1915. He died suddenly on December 31 of the same year, while on a tour of the south.

Minneapolis—Minnesota's highway patrol in the first six months of 1936 was instrumental in collecting $129,372 in motor vehicle license correctionc, Chief Officer John P. Arnoldy reported. Of the sum, $837 was for cars bearing only one plate, $79,819 for cars operating without plates; $18,170 for vehicles having plates of the wrong class, and $30,474 for cars operating without Minnesota plates.

St. Paul—Final details of the government's $10,000,000 seed buying program for relief of farmers in the drouth stricken areas of the northwest and other sections were arranged by F. R. Wilcox, president of the Federal Surplus Commodities corporation. The seed will be purchased for the government by the Farmers National Grain corporation. Mr. Wilcox indicated that actual buying will get under way shortly.

St. Paul—Allotments of additional funds to pay expenses of northern Minnesota fire fighting will be considered by the state executive council. Grover Conzet, director of the state forestry division reported to council members that the $100,000 recently allotted has been exhausted and, in addition, substantial commitments have been made for purchases of emergency equipment, and additional labor and equipment expense.

Henderson—Speed down the home stretch made L. H. Dehmer of St. Paul, sauerkraut king at the annual sauerkraut festival as a crowd of 25,000 jammed the town and cleaned up 250 gallons of the Henderson specialty. Keeping pace with the 10 other contestants through the first heat, which he finished in two minutes, 15 seconds, Dehmer opened up on the second two-pound helping and gobbled it up in a two-fisted attack in 40 seconds. Runners-up were Elmer Schatz of Green Isle and Leonard Martin of St. Paul.

Cleaning the Shoes

An Englishman has his boots or shoes blacked or cleaned. An American has his shoes shined. Inconsistently enough, an American calls the boy who shines his shoes a "bootblack," while an Englishman calls the boy who blacks his boots a "shoeblack."

STATE FAIR READY TO OPEN DOORS IN ST. PAUL SATURDAY

Everything is in readiness for the opening of the 77th annual Minnesota state fair Saturday. Placing of exhibits virtually has been completed and the $25,000,000 exposition will present a complete program the opening day. Automobile races will feature the afternoon grandstand card with the first presentation of the 1936 state fair revue in the evening.

Captain Bob Ward, noted film dare-devil has been signed as an added attraction on the afternoon programs. The famous stunt man will present a series of new thrillers, topping off his performance by jumping a passenger car with a man seated on the radiator over a truck. He also will pilot a racing automobile through a tunnel of fire.

Judging is under way in several departments, including the fine arts, women's activities, school exhibits and dairy divisions. The winners will be selected so that blue ribbons can be attached to their exhibits before the gates officially open at 6 A. M. Saturday.

The 80-acre machinery show will feature all that's new for farm, factory and home. Moving-type displays have been installed the past few days and visitors will be astounded with the improvements that have been made in labor-saving devices and equipment.

Thirty-five state departments and institutions have arranged a combined exhibit that will show how the tax payer's dollar is spent. Several special displays have been arranged, the one pertaining to safety being particularly effective.

Saturday has been designated Key Day and bargain day tickets will be offered to patrons at 50 cents. These tickets admit a person to the grounds, admit a car or to the Indian village, will be good for a seat to the afternoon auto races and two rides on the midway. Key Day tickets give a $1.20 value for 50 cents.

BABY IS STRANGLED IN ROPE OF SWING

Norwood.—The 15-months old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Graunke of New Germany was strangled to death when an ordinary swing rope became entangled about her neck. The child had gone out to play. Ten minutes later her father sent her brother out to search for her, and the lad found his sister strangled to death with the swing rope tight around her neck. No one witnessed the tragedy, so it is not known exactly how it happened but apparently the child, only a little more than a year old, had been playing with the rope, which hung about her neck. She probably became twisted about with the rope around her shoulders and became excited, the noose becoming tighter and tighter as she struggled.

BASEBALL PICNIC HERE NEXT SUNDAY

St. Hilaire is making preparations for a gala day next Sunday to mark the end of the season for all teams participating in the Northern Minnesota League this year. Members of the teams from the east district consisting of Goodridge, Oklee, Plummer and Garnes; those from the west district consisting of Red Lake Falls, Kittson and St. Hilaire, as well as ball fans and people from those communities are all invited to bring picnic dinners and join in a get-to-gether meeting at St. Hilaire tourist park at noon. Members of the local team will act as hosts and will serve coffee and cream to all comers.

Following the picnic dinner, a program of contests will be given at the ball park for a variety of prizes donated by the tradespeople of St. Hilaire.

Following the sports program, a team of picked players representing the four teams to east of the Soo Line, will play a team composed of all-star players from the Red Lake Falls, Kittson and St. Hilaire teams in the final game of the season. All the teams mentioned have some outstanding players, so this game should provide some thrills for ball fans.

If favorable weather prevails next Sunday, St. Hilaire is looking forward to entertaining one of the largest crowds to gather here in recent years.

The St. Hilaire School Band, and possibly another band, will furnish music during the day.

FIRE SCHOOL AT WARROAD

On Saturday and Sunday, Sept. 12 and 13, the Border Firemen's Association will conduct a Regional Fire School and Annual Meeting at Warroad, to be sponsored by the Warroad Fire Department of which Milton Fish is Chief.

OLD-TIME RESIDENT PASSES IN CANADA

An old time resident of Wyandotte township was called to his reward Monday, Aug. 17th, when Eric Anderson died at his home near Shaunavon, Sask., Can. He had suffered from heart disease for some time so death was not unexpected.

The late Mr. Anderson was in his eightieth year, having been born in Sweden on March 18, 1857. He immigrated to the United States at the age of 21. After spending some years in Illinois, and later working on a railroad in Ontario, he took up a homestead in Wyandotte township. He married Miss Hannah Sommarstrom at St. Hilaire on Nov. 30th, 1889, and together they made their home in Wyandotte where their six children were born. In 1910 he took up a homestead near Shaunavon where they have since made their home.

An industrious and God-fearing man, as well as a loving husband and father he is sadly missed by his wife, two daughters, Mrs. V. W. Hanna and Mrs. B. A. Ellingson, two sons, Alfred and Clarence, and nineteen grandchildren all living in the Shaunavon district. Two sons predeceased him many years ago.

Funeral services were held August 19th, in Salem Lutheran church, Shaunavon, which was filled with sorrowing relatives and friends. Mr. E. T. Einarson officiated. Interment took place in Hillcrest cemetery.

WOMAN'S CLUB MEETING

The St. Hilaire Woman's club will hold its meeting at the club rooms Thursday evening, Sept. 17th at 8 o'clock. All members are urged to be present so that a correct list can be sent in. If you cannot be present, please notify so that your name will be on the list.

Paul Roy presided at a meeting of the county board held Tuesday at Thief River Falls. The following day he and other board members motored to St. Paul to attend a conference of county commissioners from different counties of the state.

A large number of people attended the 50th anniversary observance and dedication exercises held last Sunday at the Clearwater Lutheran church in Wyandotte. Several charter members of the congregation were present. Rt. Rev. I. T. Aastad of Detroit Lakes was the principal speaker for the occasion.

Rev. and Mrs. Alex Sand and son were here last week from Annandale for a visit at the home of Mrs. Sand's mother, Mrs. Aug. Swenson, and with other relatives.

NEWS FROM THE 'HILLS OF THE DEAD'

Ancient Ruins Throw Light Upon Mayan Indian Civilizaton; Old Sculpture Reveals Rare Sense of Humor.

By WILLIAM C. UTLEY

IN THE "Hills of the Dead," long-forgotten slopes of the back country in Guatemala, the picks and shovels of archeologists from the Carnegie Institution of Washington, D. C., are discovering new answers to many mysteries of one of the most brilliant of early American civilizations. Under the direction of Dr. V. A. Kidder, these explorers into the past have come upon important new relics left hundreds of years ago by the Maya Indians.

The Mayas challenge the best minds of science. The civilization they achieved received no assistance from the Old World. It is—or was—America's own.

The Mayas were proficient astronomers. They perfected writing, sculpture and architecture to a high degree. They conducted their affairs under an efficiently organized government. Science is still at a loss to explain how they reached the high cultural achievements which they did, but the patient researches of archeological groups may some day find the answer to the riddle.

"Of first importance," according to the Carnegie archeologists, are the findings in Guatemalan hills, although they have not yet been completely analyzed. It is hoped that they may eventually reveal the whole fascinating story.

Find Four Tombs.

The area now being explored is no more than a mile and a half long, but it contains 100 mounds, beneath which are the ruins of a large Mayan community. Farmers of the region call the site Milaflores, but the Carnegie people intend to name it Kaminaljuyu, the Queche Indian for "Hills of the Dead."

Three important tombs of ancient American rulers have already been opened here, and a fourth is to be opened soon. From the evidences revealed concerning the burial practices of the Mayas, much about their civilization is learned.

"It will take months to get the collection in shape," says Doctor Kidder, "but it will prove a tremendous addition to our knowledge of Maya life, ceremony, dress and art."

Opening one tomb, the archeologists found in its center the figure of a middle-aged priest or noble, who had been left sitting cross-legged there many centuries ago. Jade beads and pendants, handsomely carved, ear plugs and ornaments of crystal and shell, together with a pile of pottery found beside the remains, gave evidence of pompous burial.

Pile Up Pyramids.

At the feet of the skeleton was found another—a slave girl entombed to wait upon her master in the world beyond. Even the dead man's small dog was sent on the long journey with him, for in a corner of the room its skeleton was also found. There were vessels for serving food and millstones to grind the heavenly corn.

The Mayas had a peculiar practice in building their tombs. One pyramid was built upon another, like a nest of jars or boxes. It is believed from the location and formation of the tombs that when one of these priests or rulers died, he was placed in a tomb covered by a pyramid which had been associated with him, indeed one which in all probability he had built himself. When the next in line died, it appears, another pyramid was built, over the first. In the recent Carnegie findings there are four tombs and four layers of pyramids.

Guatemala's lowland jungles, where most of the preceding Mayan discoveries have been made, have already been pretty thoroughly explored. But the new discoveries are in the highlands, and for that reason it is believed they may open up entire new fields of discovery. Though the pyramids were more or less common in the lowlands, this is the first to be found in the hills.

Progressive periods of the Mayan civilization, which may help to trace it back to its mysterious beginnings, are revealed in the new findings. Dr. Kidder has already discovered stratification of buildings. From the various levels of the earth have come generous quantities of pottery which definitely represents a sequence, telling something of the culture of the people over successive eras.

The pyramids belong to a period known as the Old Empire, which is of somewhat later date, flourishing during the early centuries of the Christian era. This empire included many cities in Guatemala, Honduras and southern Yucatan.

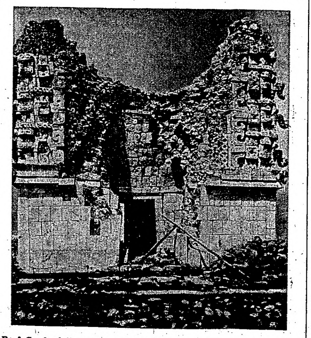
The new discoveries bear out the prediction made by Dr. Kidder a year ago, when he said:

"Apparently the highland region was much more of a highway for trade and migration than the densely jungled lowland country. Consequently intensive work on the sites of the region can be expected to provide extremely valuable information as to the chronological interrelations of the various ancient cultures, particularly as it is probable that stratified remains will be discovered."

Stone Art Reveals Humor.

The art of the ancient Mayas is notable not only for its skillful execution, but for the evidence it gives of a sophisticated understanding of human nature—and above all, a delightful sense of humor.

What some critics declare to be the finest specimen of Mayan art in stone was recently discovered by an expedition sponsored by the University museum of the University of Pennsylvania. The stone lintel was the work of an unknown sculptor.



Roof Comb of the "House of Pigeons," an Ancient Mayan Ruin at Uxmal, Yucatan.

In Mayan hieroglyphics were six dates, none of them later than Dec. 2, 757 A. D., according to Dr. J. Alden Mason, of the expedition.

Particularly amusing is the old sculpture in this, a political year. For the scene which it treats is apparently some sort of meeting in the council chamber of a governmental body, and the characters are listening to one of their number as he delivers a speech. That political oratory, then as now, was flavored with a generous helping of plain hooey is evident from the antics and postures of the listeners while the speaker is "waving the flag" in traditional enthusiasm and gusto.

Expert Reconstructs Original.

Now it has long been the custom of sculptors to present such occasions as full of dignity and always working smoothly. But here was a chisel-wielding wag who knew better and did not hesitate to interpret his characters as he knew them, even though his work was to decorate the doorway of a beautiful and dignified temple.

When it was found, the sculpture was badly worn and damaged, but attempts have been made to reconstruct it. Broken lines have been extended with the aid of the many remaining cues to poses and costumes, by Miss M. Louise Baker, expert on archeological art, who is able to visualize the complete scene in its original state.

In the bulletin of the university museum, Miss Baker directs attention to some of the amusing points of the work.

"Two of the trio," she writes, indicating a little group in the picture, "forgetful of the occasion, are entirely absorbed in their own argument, while the third, indignantly bracing himself upon outspread feet, gives a vicious bump with his hip (breaking his own obsequious pose for the moment), demanding attention.

"The seated figures are very human in manner and detail. One dignitary gently pokes the friend in front to ask what it is all about. The friend, willing to accommodate, vainly tries to peer over the intervening mass of feathers (the headdress of the man in front of him), bracing himself on his foot, in his effort to see—a taut neckline giving the cue."

From Miss Baker's description it seems that even the old Mayan Indians were acquainted with our own present-day problem of the woman who wears a large hat in the moving picture theater.

"The last man, and the only one whose face was not completely destroyed, has lost interest after a fruitless attempt to hear and his hand has probably dropped from cupping his ear to toying with his ear-plugs," Miss Baker writes.

The priceless lintel was chiseled from buff-colored limestone. It is two feet high and a little over four feet long. Modern knowledge of the ancient Mayan civilization profits not only from the demonstrated mannerisms of the characters, but from the clothing and the objects held by the Indians.

Replica of Nunnery.

"The original must be seen to be appreciated," Miss Baker writes. It shows in perfect detail even the fingernails on the hand of the chief.

According to Dr. Mason, the clothing is "Greek in quality." The clothes, also, are praised by Miss Baker.

American interest in the ancient Mayan civilization was greatly stimulated in 1933 and 1934, when millions of persons who visited A Century of Progress exposition in Chicago inspected exhibits prepared by Tulane university. Reproduced in exact detail, and beautiful in its brilliant coloring, was an ancient nunnery, remains of which were discovered at Uxmal, in the Mayan country.

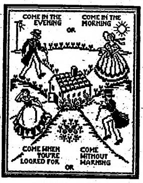
Cross Stitch Sampler



Pattern 1187

No matter what the Season—a sampler's always fun to do, especially when it offers as colorful a picture, as quaint a verse, as this. You'll find it a grand way to use up scraps of cotton or silk floss, and a design that works up in no time, for the background is plain. Wouldn't it go beautifully in a young girl's room? Perchance that Young Miss will want to do this easy cross stitch design herself!

Pattern 1187 comes to you with a transfer pattern of a sampler 12 1-4 by 15 1-4 inches; color suggestions; material requirements; illustrations of all stitches used.

Send 15 cents in stamps or coins (coins preferred) for this pattern to The Sewing Circle Needlecraft Dept., 82 Eighth Ave., New York, N. Y.

Write plainly pattern number, your name and address.

The Gift of Instinct

SURELY no instinct was ever given in vain; without an appointed end, and that end involving good. And if so, it cannot be supposed that man is so mocked of his Maker as to have been gifted with capacities for intellectual inquiry, and inspired with an inextinguishable thirst for knowledge; so constituted, also, to derive from its acquisition a pleasure quite unaccountable as that produced by the harmony of sounds—to no purpose—with no results, but that when he dies all his thoughts perish.—Mrs. Alfred Gatty.

NEW PRESSURE LAMP PROTECTS EYESIGHT

Provides 300 Candlepower "Live" Natural Brilliance For Only 1c a Night

A new mantle lamp that protects your sight with 300 candlepower "live," air-pressure light is bringing "eye-health" to thousands of homes, especially in rural communities. This lamp gives 5 times more light than any mantle lamp which has no provision for air pressure. Special laboratory tests prove its brilliance is nearest like natural daylight . . . kind to eyes!

W. C. COLEMAN

W. C. Coleman, pioneer inventor of gas-pressure appliances, has spent 36 years perfecting this lamp. It makes its own gas . . . burns kerosene or gasoline. It operates for only 1c a night! It is clean, safe, and is an ornament in any home.

Eyestrain is caused by poor and insufficient light, and often results in serious damage to the eyes. Now, nobody need take chances with their precious sight. This new Coleman Lamp is so inexpensive that no one can afford to be without it. It provides plenty of light for every home need . . . for reading, sewing, studying, playing.

Readers of this paper can get full details of this remarkable lamp, including illustrations of the many beautiful models, by simply sending a postcard to W. C. Coleman, Dept. WU-171, Wichita, Kansas.

Coincidence in Samoa

THIS is a story of three Ripleys. Back in the nineties Lieut. Charles S. Ripley of the United States navy was shipwrecked in the South seas and landed upon an island in the Samoan group. He was taken before the ruler of the island, King Malietoa, who asked the officer his name and who then astonished him by greeting him as "cousin."

The explanation was simple. Many years before, a great-uncle of Lieutenant Ripley, a native of Maine, had sailed for the Orient and had never returned. He, too, had been shipwrecked in Samoan waters, had married a native princess and founded the dynasty of which King Malietoa was the third generation.

King Malietoa insisted upon adopting Lieutenant Ripley and several years later an international commission, composed of representatives of the United States, Great Britain and Germany, then engaged in settling the question of sovereignty over the Samoan islands, settled upon him as the true heir to Malietoa's throne. Ripley, however, declined to exercise his right as king and returned to the United States to make his home in Colorado.

Coincidence in Samoa? Yes, and in the United States, too. In one of his radio broadcasts a few years ago, Robert L. Ripley, the "Believe It or Not" man, told that story. Soon afterwards he received a letter from Mrs. Charles L. Ripley in Denver saying that at the very moment his broadcast came to an end Lieutenant Ripley had died!

Sacred Harp Singers

SOMETIME in the late summer go down into the South and attend a convention of the Sacred Harp Singers. When you do, close your eyes as they sing and feel yourself transported from modern America back to Elizabethan England.

For the Sacred Harp Singers cling to the "fa-so-la" singing of that far-off period, the "fa-so-la" being the names of the notes with which the major diatonic scale began. Because they have refused to take into consideration the "do-ra-mi" and "si-do" added later, they have been called a "lost tonal tribe."

The Sacred Harp Singers have borne that name for almost a century, taking it from a book of hymns called "The Sacred Harp," published in Philadelphia in 1884. First compiled by B. F. White and E. J. King of Georgia, it has gone through many editions and many hymns have been added.

On some week-end between early July and early September, when their crops "have been laid by," the Sacred Harp Singers gather for a convention. The president opens it with a song, then a chapter from the Bible is read and the chaplain leads the group in prayer. Thereafter the Sacred Harp people frequently sing all day with ten-minute recesses every hour and a half.

"A Dollar Down and . . ."

IF YOU think buying on the installment plan is a modern custom, consider this good advice, offered the housewife in "Decorum—A Practical Treatise on Etiquette and Dress of the Best American Society" in 1877:

> Avoid Concealment
>
> Instances frequently occur of concealment with regard to money concerns; thus, for instance, a wife wishes to possess an article of dress which is too costly for immediate purchase, or a piece of furniture liable to the same objection. She accordingly makes an agreement with a seller, and there are many who call regularly at houses when the husband is absent on business, and who receive whatever the mistress of the house can spare from her expenses. A book is kept by the seller, in which payments are entered; but a duplicate is never retained by the wife, and therefore she has no check whatever.
>
> We have known an article of dress paid for in this manner, far above its value, and heard of a poor young woman who had been thus duped say to a lady, who remonstrated with her: "Alas! What can I do, I dare not tell my husband!"
>
> It may be that the same system, though differing according to circumstances, is pursued in a superior class of life. We have reason to think that it is so, and therefore affectionately warn our young sisters to beware of making purchases that require concealment. Be content with such things as you can afford and such as your husbands approve. You can then wear them with every feeling of self-satisfaction, and have a contented mind.

Colored Lightning

Colored lightning is not uncommon. Owing to rain, gases, smoke and other particles in the atmosphere between the observer and the lightning, flashes frequently occur in one solid color. During one storm, says Collier's Weekly, single flashes were recorded in such distinct colors as red, yellow, green, violet, orange and blue as well as white.

OF COURSE, children should never drink coffee. And many grown-ups, too, find that the caffein in coffee disagrees with them. If you are bothered by headaches or indigestion or can't sleep soundly...try Postum for 30 days. Postum contains no caffein. It is simply whole wheat and bran, roasted and slightly sweetened. Try Postum. You may miss coffee at first, but after 30 days you'll love Postum for its own rich, satisfying flavor. It is easy to make, delicious, economical, and may prove a real help. Most Novel Bed Room

The world's most novel bedroom is perhaps the one constructed in a tree-top in the jungle in Kenya, in East Africa. From it one can watch all sorts of wild animals, including leopards, elephants, rhinoceroses, and hyenas, as you lie in bed.

CARELESS PRISONER SETS CAR OF SHERIFF AFIRE

Chaska.—Sheriff Frank Trende's new car almost went up in smoke as the result of an arrest which he made at Carver recently. The sheriff was called to that village to take charge of an intoxicated man. The drunk was loaded into the back seat of the officer's catch, and the journey toward the county jail was begun. Meanwhile, the arrested man dropped a lighted cigarette onto the seat. Some time later, a passerby noticed clouds of smoke issuing from the sheriff's car, parked between the jail and the court house, where the prisoner was taken. Trende was notified, and efforts

BEATS RECORD OF 56 YEARS IN GRAIN THRESHING WORK

Hanley Falls.—In a recent issue of the Minnesota Briefs appeared an article on a Preston man, Mr. Rollins, 75, who has been threshing for the past 56 years. He claims to hold the record for Minnesota. Right there is where an argument started in Hanley Falls. For that town boasts a veteran thresher who has been at the game for 57 years, one year more than Rollins of Preston. The man is Sever Hellickson, who was 81 years old last spring, and this year had one of his biggest runs of shock threshing. Severson started out in 1879 with horse power and four years later startled the community with a steam rig that was fed with straw. He has kept abreast of the times ever since, and has always had modern equipment and scores of satisfied customers who have hired him year after year. So, until someone else comes forward with a better record, the crown will have to be shifted from Preston to Hanley Falls.

EASY MONEY ARTIST TRIES NOVEL GAME

Howard Lake.—An "easy money artist" gave a nice demonstration of his line of attack but failed to obtain any loot in Howard Lake last week. E. A. Dahlberg, manager of the stock shipping association, had left town to attend a funeral in Dakota. A stranger called at his home in his absence, asking Mrs. Dahlberg for $10, saying he had shipped stock the Wednesday before and needed the money. Mrs. Dahlberg said she did not have that much at home. "Give me what you got," the stranger replied. Mrs. Dahlberg told the man that if he had shipped stock he should go to A. C. McGrew, who kept the books for the shiping association. The stranger argued that McGrew had no money there, but Mrs. Dahlberg failed to fall for his "line" and the man finally departed. Apparently he hung around town long enough to find out who might be absent from his home, and then attempted to pull his sales talk on the wife of the home.

COP SAVES EASTERNERS FROM BLOODY REDSKINS

Detroit Lakes. They stood pop-eyed with excitement on the streets of Detroit Lakes, "frontier town"— a man, his wife and three children, traveling through Minnesota from the East, who had read too many Deadwood Dick tales and had not traveled enough. As they were standing in the door of a cafe glancing apprehensively southward, a police officer walked by, and the head of the family hailed him. "We can't go down there," he said in a tremulous voice. "Why not?" asked the officer. "See those two Indian bucks on the corner?" pointing to two Indians leaning on the wall of a building. "We don't dare walk past them." The officer thought he was being "taken for a ride." But one look at the frightened faces of the entire family and he knew they were deadly serious. —they were very much afraid that the Indians might pull tomahawks and that they might have to return East minus their scalps. The officer walked down to their car with them, past the dangerous Redskins, and the family leaped into their Massachusetts licensed plate car with relieved faces. They had eluded the "Indian uprising."

ASH TREE GROW IN CROTCH OF POPLAR

Sauk Center.—Nature does peculiar things, and rarest among her oddities are freaks occurring in seeding and pollenizing. In Sauk Center, on the corner of Pine and Sixth streets at the residence of Mrs. J. A. Caughren, is one of the queerist quirks of nature's sowing. Where the main trunk of a large poplar tree divides into large branches is nestled a tree of another variety. Just how the tree got its start is merely speculation, but there are mountain ash just across the street. Perhaps the seed was carried by the wind to the crotch of the larger tree; perhaps some bird scratching for seed deposited it there. At any rate, it took root and grew. It is now approximately two feet in height.

BABY FALLS 25 FEET ONTO CEMENT WALK—STILL LIVES

Breckenridge.— Wwight, two and one-half year old son of Mr. and Mrs. B. R. Nelson of Fox home, fell 25 feet, striking a cement sidewalk with his forehead and still lives, altho his condition it still critical. Wwight was playing with a number of other children at the rear of the old Columbia Hotel. The little fellow climbed the stairs to the upper floor. After walking across the floor to the front of the hotel, he found himself on a balcony, 25 feet above the sidewalk. The little fellow climbed to the top of the railing and dropped to the sidewalk. Rushed to the Fergus Falls hospital, Wwight did not regain consciousness for days and was in a critical condition.

Captain's "Aboard" Flag

There is no flag used to denote that the captain is aboard the ship. However, naval vessels of the United States display the international third substitute flag at the port main (on some vessels at the port fore) yardarm when the captain is absent.

Number 11

DISTRICT PTA TO MEET HERE SEPT. 25

A busy all-day program, with a number of Thief River Falls residents participating, has been arranged for the Sixteenth District conference of the Minnesota Congress of Parents and Teachers to be held in the St. Hilaire high school Friday, September 25. The program will be built around the theme of character education.

Mrs. B. O. Norby, district chairman, will preside over the morning session, which will commence at $9:30 in the high school gymnasium. Features of the program will include the invocation by Rev. M. L. Dahle of St. Hilaire, community singing led by Mrs. Gaston Ward, welcome by Supt. M. R. Graham of St. Hilaire, a safety skit by St. Hilaire grade pupils, and a demonstration by Mrs. A. L. Lathers, president of the state association, and Mrs. Jones, third vice president.

At the afternoon session, opening at 1:45 in the high school auditorium, Supt A. M. Sorvig of the Polk county schools will speak on "The Last Frontier". Mrs. W. J. Janda, president of the St. Hilaire P. T. A., will introduce the other numbers, including a piano solo by Mrs. Cassie M. Harrison, who also will lead in community singing; a discussion by Miss Esther McGinnis of the child welfare department of the University of Minnesota; a talk on rural library service by Mrs. Hazel Halgrim; an address by Mrs. Lathers; and music by a reed quartet. Tea will be served at 4 o'clock by the St. Hilaire P. T. A., followed by dinner at 6:30 in the Norwegian Lutheran church parlors.

Superintendent Graham will preside over the evening session opening at 7:30 in the high school auditorium, the feature of the program being an address by Supt. Morris Bye of the Thief River Falls schools. Other numbers will be supplied by the St. Hilaire band, the Hazel men's chorus, songs by a group of Thief River Falls women, vocal solo by Mrs. C. M. Ostby of McIntosh and a cornet solo by LaVaughan Skatrud of Argyle.

TAKE OVER OIL STATION

Folden Brothers of Holt, who recently purchased the local Cities Service Oil station, took possession of the place this week. They are making some alterations in the premises and intend to carry a line of Gamble products in addition to their oil business.

Mourning Dove Season Will Open on Saturday

The mourning dove season for Minnesota will begin at noon on Saturday, September 19, and end at sunset on Saturday, Sept. 27. Shooting will be permitted only from noon to sunset each day. The mourning dove season will be open in all counties of the state. The daily bag limit is six birds with 12 permitted in possession. The fee for the resident small game hunting license is $1. All hunters over 16 years of age must purchase the license. The fee for non-resident small game licenses is $25.

Quail Are Prolific

Quail are migratory, monogamous, pugnacious and skulkers, lay a clutch of about 15 eggs or more, are the most prolific of our native game birds and very valuable to agriculture, 90 per cent of their food consisting of insects.

RAISES GIANT CORN

Norman Holmes brought to the Spectator office this week, three samples of Minnesota No. 13 fodder corn raised on his place west of town. The largest cob is over ten inches in length. All are well filled and dented, and many favorable comments have been heard on them by people who have come from the corn producing area farther south.

BIG GATHERING AT BASEBALL PICNIC

A large crowd of people, estimated to number nearly four hundred persons, attended the district baseball tournament and picnic held here last Sunday. Altho weather conditions were not entirely favorable, a goodly number from Oklee, Garnes, Goodridge, Plummer, Red Lake Falls and Kittson gathered at the tourist park and enjoyed their picnic dinners at noon. Members of the local team acted as hosts, and served hot coffee to all at the grounds.

Afternoon the crowd was greatly augmented by later arrivals from the towns mentioned as well as other places, and all went to the ball park and witnessed one of the best ball games played in this territory this season.

The team of picked players representing the three towns west of the Soo had an edge on the team of all-star players representing the four towns east of the Soo, for first five innings. From that point on, the east siders gained until the score stood at 6 to 5 in favor of the west team at last half of the ninth frame, with the east siders at bat. The situation was tense when the east team had the tieing run on third base with two men down, but they were unable to put it across so the game ended 6 to 5 in favor of the west team. Following the game a short program of contests was pulled off at the grounds to round out a very enjoyable day. Bill Hallamack was on the mound for the west team for the entire game, and the Plummer pitcher did the hurling for the east team, both doing excellent work. The school band rendered a number of selections during the fore part of the game.

600,000 Fish Licenses Issued for 1936 Season

More than 600,000 fishing licenses, the largest number in the history of the division of game and fish, were sent to state auditors this year, for sale, A. C. Hanson, director, announced last week. Approximately 90,000 nonresident fishing licenses were requested by county auditors in anticipation of an unusually heavy tourist trade. In 1935 74,010 nonresident licenses were sold. This year, 527,000 individual fishing licenses were sent out; 493,325 were sold last year.

Tales About Town

Happenings of the Week, Told in Brief. News Concerning People You Know

Miss Dorothy Gunstad left Saturday for Middle River where she will teach in the village schools this year.

Miss Alice Skottem went Sunday to Climax to resume teaching in the village school. Her parents motored down with her.

Klemens Gigstad, who has been employed as substitute helper in the creamery at Oklee, returned home last week-end, and is now helping at the local creamery.

Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Shaskey and sons motored here Saturday evening from Fargo and visited until the following day at the home of Mrs. Shaskey's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Lars Loberg.

Norman Olsen, manager of the creamery at Leonard, was here Saturday for a visit with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Olsen. Mrs. Olsen joined him that evening and they spent Sunday with her parents at Thief River.

Miss Lulu Beebe expects to leave the first of next week for St. Paul after spending a ten day vacation here with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. N. E. Beebe. Miss Beebe has a nice position as stenographer for a manufacturing company at St. Paul.

Womens' Missionary meeting will be held next Wednesday, Sept. 23, at 2:00 P. M., at the home of Mrs. Adrian Anderson near Hazel. All members are requested to be present. The boxes of Blessing fund and Christmas Cheer, Inner Mission, etc., will be taken care of at this meeting.

Mrs. Henry Blaska, who came last week with Mr. and Mrs. Mark Harder upon their return from seeing the state fair, returned this week to her home at Anoka after visiting with friends and former neighbors in Rocksbury where the Blaska family resided until they moved to Anoka about thirteen years ago.

P. T. A. MEETS FRIDAY NIGHT

First meeting of the Parent-Teachers Association for the present school year will be held at the school assembly Friday evening of this week. In addition to the program and lunch, people of the community will be given opportunity to meet new members of the teaching staff.

An Oxbow Lake

An oxbow lake is a stagnant lake formed in abandoned river beds when a river cuts through the neck of one of the meanders or loops characteristic of the course of rivers of slow current. Without outlet or inlet, the oxbow lake, sometimes called a bayou, often becomes a marsh of swamp and finally disappears.

Mrs. P. E. Bergh and son, Hilding, motored here Tuesday from Erskine and spent the day at the Highland home.

Mr. and Mrs. Martin Loberg motored up Sunday from Mentor and spent the day with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Lars A. Loberg.

Mr. and Mrs. Theo. Ducharme and their son motored up Sunday from Barnesville to attend the ball game, and to visit briefly with friends. The Ducharme family resided in St. Hilaire some years ago.

HEALTH SURVEY IS UNDER WAY IN COUNTY SCHOOLS

A health survey of the rural school children of Pennington County is being conducted under the auspices of the Pennington county Public Health association. Miss Mabel Johnson, Christmas Seal nurse of the Minnesota Public Health association, began the survey Monday.

The purpose of the survey is to fill out health record cards of school children for permanent county files and also to discover boys and girls who have unsuspected physical defects or who are not physically up to standard. Slips will be sent home to parents of children in need of special attention.

Education in health is an important factor of the survey and Miss Johnson will place special stress on the importance of proper health habits and the prompt correction of defects which if neglected may retard the child's growth and progress in school. She will also discuss the importance of protective measures against preventable diseae such as vaccination for small pox, immunization for diphtheria, and the tuberculin test to seek out early infection from tuberculosis. This survey is made possible through the annual sale of Christmas Seals.

While in Pennington county, Miss Johnson will also assist in organization work for the orthopedic clinic to be conducted in Thief River Fayls October 3 as part of the state social security program conducted by the division of crippled children's services, state board of control, with the Minnesota Public Health association co-operating.

CUSTOMERS 'SPRINT' INTO TWO BENSON STORES

Benson.—"This is shocking," is probably what several customers in two Benson business places muttered to themselves as they stepped in lively fashion thru the entrances. And it was all because of what local electricians jokingly refer to as a "short circle". During a downpour of a week ago an electrical connection to a sign on one store front formed a short circuit with the iron front entrance plates on that store and those on the drug store. As the customers placed one foot on the west cement steps and the other on the iron they felt sharp shocks until an employe in one of the stores discovered the cause and cut the wire. It was believed that at least one Benson resident, Pat Lucas, could have easily qualified for the Olympics broad jump when he entered one of the places.

IS STICKER CANDIDATE

Iver H. Iverson of Rocksbury township, has announced that he will be a sticker candidate in the November election for the office of county commissioner from the fifth district. Nominees at the June primaries for this office are Isaac Wilson of Wyandotte, and O. M. Mandt of Deer Park, incumbent. Mr. Iverson, who is well known in this territory, plans to make an active campaign.

MONDAY STORM CAUSES DAMAGE

A storm of almost cyclonic proportions swept over this vicinity Monday bringing a rainfall estimated to be more than two inches. The storm did not extend very far north, nor did it strike Red Lake Falls but seemed to center south of here. Fourteen poles carrying the Northern States Power Company high line were blown down and this village was without electric service for several hours. East of town suffered the heaviest property damage. At the W. P. Wilson farm the barn was unroofed; at the Paulson farm near Hazel the barn and pump house were demolished and material scattered over the adjoining farm. Axel Johnson's barn was twisted, and some shingles were blown off his dwelling. At the Ben E. Johnson farm the barn was badly wrecked and two brooder houses were demolished. Other minor damages such as uprooting of trees, etc., are reported from several places.

In parts of the storm area heavy hail fell while in others there were only a few scattered hail. St. Hilaire seemed to be in the center of the rain area, and street drains proved entirely inadequate to handle the huge volume of water. Toward the end of the rain only the center of T. H. No. 32 was visible as water covered the walks, filled the gutters and backed out into the street. For the first time this summer season water flowed in the river as drainage ditches poured their overflow into it. While the storm did some damage, it brought badly needed moisture for late pastures; enabled many people to replenish their cistern supply of soft water for fall and winter, and it also will be beneficial for those who have plowing to do.

Please Note:—It is especially desired by the Norwegian Lutheran Ladies' Aid that as many people as possible, whether members of the P. T. A. or not, register for the noon luncheon and also the evening banquet to be given at the church Friday of next week in connection with the PTA district conference. Registration may be made with Mrs. E. D. Jensen, and everybody is welcome.

SCHOOL OPENED MONDAY MORNING

The local school re-opened Monday morning with the largest enrollment in its history. There were 97 enrolled in high school, and 65 in grades 1 to 6. Capacity of the high school assembly was taxed to handle the large number enrolled, and more are expected to come later. There are 23 enrolled for Typing and 28 in Economic Geography, the new subjects offered in high school.

Both busses were taxed for room the first day, the Hazel bus having thirty-six and the west bus 21.

Supt. Graham announces the present quota for student aid has been filled, but hopes to be allowed more later.

New teachers this year are Miss Agnes Haugen, Mr. Floyd Nelson and Miss Henrietta Bonhoff.

Extra activities are already in full swing at the school. Mr. Wollan will have charge of the regular band practices which will be held Monday, Wednesday and Friday at 2:30. Beginners classes for the band will meet at 3:15 on Monday, Tuesday and Thursday, and at 2:30 on Friday. Band beginners should consult Supt. Graham or Mr. Wollin as to kind and type of instrument and instruction books are needed before making any purchase.

The Glee Club met Tuesday and are rehearsing diligently in preparation for taking part in the P. T. A. Convention program next week.

MAGNUS JOHNSON, F. L. LEADER, DIES

Magnus Johnson, colorful figure in Minnesota politics, and who represented this state in the U. S. Senate some years ago, died Saturday at Litchfield, from pneumonia. He was apparently recovering from a second attack of the malady within a few months, when his condition took a sudden turn and he passed away. Public buildings in the Cities were closed, and state officials, in a body, attended the funeral services which were held yesterday at Litchfield.

St. Cloud.—Instead of the soft strains of Lohengrin with an outlook for a peaceful married life, 25 year old Matt Lezen sits singing the bars of the Prisoner's Song with an outlook for a stretch in the Stearns county jail. For young Matt was arrested by Sheriff Art McIntee the day before his wedding while selling stolen grain at the Ervin Mill in St. Cloud. The unobliging sheriff also found veal and chickens in his possession which had been "borrowed" for the wedding breakfast. The arrest cleared up numerous petty thefts of grain and chickens during the past, the groom having operated in this vicinity for the past four years.

Homer's Story of Trojan War Found Historically True

Legend of Achilles Had Foundation in Fact

London.—When Homer sang that Greek warrior Achilles raided the isle of Lesbos at the start of the Trojan war, he was repeating history, not legend.

So Miss Winifred Lamb, archeologist of the Fitzwilliam museum, Cambridge university, is inclined to think after excavating the ancient town of Thermi, on the island of Lesbos.

Hesitantly advancing this romantic theory in a sober and technical report of her excavations, Miss Lamb tells the evidence. She found a great fire blackened and reddened the soil around the mound where the town stood in Bronze Age days.

Evidence Is Convincing.

Pottery the towns folk used is identified as archeological evidence that the fire occurred no later than 1200 B. C. That would be just before the Trojan siege, according to the most usual dating.

"If we turn to Book Nine of the Iliad," says Miss Lamb, "we find an allusion to Achilles' raid on Lesbos, which may, as Professor Myres points out, have been a necessary strategic prelude to the capture of Troy. This event also is believed to have occurred about 1200 B. C. Readers may press the attractive coincidence or point out its weakness according to their taste."

Whether the latest discoveries uphold Homer or not, they have revealed a town not far across the water from Troy, that came under the influence of powerful Troy and acquired its styles and ideas of culture.

Largest Cyclotron Being Constructed at U. of Michigan

Ann Arbor.—Ninety-five tons of iron and copper form the giant electro-magnet which is the foundation of the world's largest cyclotron, now under construction at the University of Michigan.

Alteration of atomic structure, already accomplished with other cyclotrons, may be carried much farther with the Michigan apparatus. It will have practical application in the preparation of radio-active salts for use in the treatment of cancer, in addition to offering an opportunity for scientific investigation of the composition of atoms.

30,000 Volts Impact.

The magnetic field the electro-magnet produces, the greatest integrated field ever developed, causes the rotation of ions, electrified particles, introduced into the duants, or halves, of a flat cylinder. The speed of these ions is accelerated by a 30,000-volt impact each time they cross the dividing space between the duants.

In 200 revolutions, according to Dr. James M. Cork, who is directing the construction of the cyclotron, the ions attain a speed equal to that which would result from an impact of 10 to 12 million volts.

As an ion accelerates, its orbit grows larger, until it reaches the outer edges of the duants, where a deflecting blade diverts it against the desired target.

School Boy Discovers Traces of Dinosaur

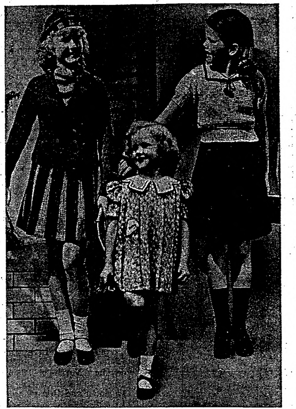
Berkeley, Calif.—To a California high school student goes the honor of finding the first evidence that dinosaurs once lived on the West coast. Western scientists have for years searched for remains of these great prehistoric reptiles, which lived in the Cretaceous period of geological time some 65 million years ago.

The keen-minded high school student was Allan Bennison, who reported his discovery to paleontologists at the University of California here. Assistant Field Directors Curtis J. Hesse and S. P. Welles of the University's Museum of Paleontology have just confirmed the discovery and made their report in the recent issue of the journal Science.

The discovery, report the University of California scientists, was made in an Upper Cretaceous rock formation near Patterson, Calif., and consisted of over 500 bone fragments which seem to have once been the hind quarters of the gigantic, meat-eating reptile, that walked around on its huge hindlegs.

"Go-to-School" Knits and Prints

By CHERIE NICHOLAS



DING-DONG goes the bell that sounds the knell of vacation as it rings in "first day of school." And again doting mothers are confronted with the problem of planning practical and as attractive as practical school wardrobes for the children of the household, for as every mother knows much of the poise and happiness of little girls in the classroom depend upon the feeling of self confidence which a pretty frock inspires.

To help in this matter of apparelling little daughter to a nicety here are two suggestions we have to offer—knits and prints. Perhaps it would be more accurate to say crochets as well as knits for as much crocheting is being done these days as knitting. Simply a matter of choice. To emphasize the vogue for crochets and prints we are showing three as cunning classroom outfits as ever a fond mother might hope to include in a little girl's clothes collection.

See little Miss Twelve posing to the left in the picture arrayed in an ensemble that couldn't be prettier if it tried. It is crocheted in two shades of blue knit-cro-sheen. For the encouragement of would-be crocheters who feel the urge to copy this most attractive outfit we are telling you that the stitch is very simple and goes like lightning when once you get started. The skirt has gores of the lighter blue and the blouse hidden by the scarf is in matching light blue. It has a stylish high neck that closes with a drawstring. There are crochet buttons to add glamor to the occasion. The cutey-cute bag, the scarf and the hat are crocheted to match.

In a many-piece crocheted outfit as just described, the practical side of the question is self-evident. The blouse, the skirt and the jacket may be worn separately, which means that any number of changes are possible, being just what is a most needful virtue for school togs.

The simplicity and practicality of the blouse-and-skirt two-piece to the right is a big argument in its favor. This crocheted suit for the grammar school Miss is a real find when it comes to appropriate dress for play or for classroom. The blouse contrasts the dark skirt which is in keeping with the present style trend to bring out striking color effects. The wide sailor collar provides a nautical touch. The gay tassel tie gives a final flourish to this most attractive back-to-school dress which is so easily crocheted of mercerized knitting and crochet cotton. We almost forgot to mention the crowning glory of these crocheted garments — they wash perfectly and with as little trouble as a gingham, a pique or any wash fabric.

Picture for yourself little daughter clad in a cunning print such as the little girl centered in the picture is wearing. The grand thing about dresses made of the new prints this season is that it is perfectly safe to buy the correct size for no longer does one have to allow for shrinkage. That is, if the fabric is one of the newer prints that are sanforized shrunk. It means a great deal to know that little daughter's gay print frock will not shrink out of fit in tubbing.

In the washgoods sections one finds the cunningest classroom prints imaginable such as fashions the little girl's dress pictured.

SQUIRREL IN VOGUE

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

A pleasing topic of conversation among fur stylists and one that is creating no-end enthusiasm, is in regard to the revival of the ever beloved youthful-looking and wonderfully flattering gray squirrel. When you go fur-coat shopping keep this in mind and look for the charming squirrel models that are making so welcome a re-appearance. Perfect for sports and for more formal wear also, is the stunning double-duty coat pictured. It brings back squirrel worked in the striking new split skin fashion.

ALIX SCULPTURES CLOTHES TO FIGURE

Outstanding among silhouettes for fall are those drawn by Alix. Her dresses are fashioned to display every curve of a rounded, feminine form through masterly manipulation and drapery of soft, clinging fabric. This season, as last, her favorite is jersey, both silk and rayon.

Some of her skirts are so full and flaring that they resemble lamp-shades or parachutes, while others are caught under the hem like Turkish trousers. Fall coats are cut with a swirling flare.

Evening clothes, particularly, would delight an ancient Greek sculptor. Fullness is concentrated in groups of folds or gathers directly in front or back, not obscuring, but, rather, emphasizing, lovely curving outlines.

Borders of four or five bright colors emphasize the flare at the hem of many evening dresses.

Luxury and Elegance to Dominate Fall Costumes

Elegance and luxury will dominate the mode this autumn if the costumes already appearing are any criterion. Magnificent fabrics, beautifully cut on exquisite lines, is the recipe for late afternoon and informal and formal evening clothes. Typical of this trend is a white dinner ensemble with a long slim skirt of white and silver blistered crepe and a simple surplice bodice of plain silver metal cloth. The shoulders, with double puffs and the tailored lapel collar, are smart notes on the short jacket that is fitted in back and open in front.

Motorist's Buttons

Among the novelty buttons that have made their appearance are those that carry the various road signs for motorists.

TWO SPECIALS FOR BANANAS

Tasty Ways of Serving One of Our Best Fruits.

By EDITH M. BARBER

AMONG the best of our fruits we rate the banana. Perhaps you question the classification of the banana as such. It has, of course, the advantage of being in season the year around. It always seems to me, however, to be at its best, so far as flavor is concerned, at this time of the year.

This is fortunate because what would the picnicker do without it? How they fill in for the hungry ones who wait for lunch to be ready! At the same time they will furnish a dessert.

Do you like your bananas red or yellow? Some like the flavor of one and some of the other. Red bananas are slightly more juicy and a little more tart. They are not so plentiful as the yellow fruit and therefore are often more expensive. By the way, I had a different type of banana in Jamaica where it is a specialty and very popular. It is too fragile for export, so you will have to go to the tropics to taste it.

On the fruit boats which bring bananas from Central and South America to New York, two specialties found on the menu are bananas, broiled in bacon and prepared for dessert with a rum sauce. This, by the way, is a good chafing dish dessert which may be prepared at the table. The bananas are sliced lengthwise, put into the dish with melted butter, sprinkled liberally with granulated sugar and then drenched with rum, which is then set on fire. While they are cooking they should be basted with the sauce formed by the other ingredients. The cooking should be short—just three or four minutes for the sake of texture and flavor.

Apricots with Bananas.

½ pound dried apricots
Sugar
3 bananas

Soak apricots in just enough water to cover for several hours. Cook until very tender. Force through strainer and stir in sugar to taste. Cut bananas in halves and arrange in a greased baking dish. Pour apricot pulp over the bananas. Bake in an oven 375 degrees fifteen minutes. Serve hot or cold. For serving hot, two tablespoons of whipped cream may be put on top of the fruit just before serving.

Fried Bananas.

Peel bananas, cut in halves crosswise or in quarters and roll in softened dry bread crumbs or in rolled cornflake crumbs. Fry in very deep fat, 395 degrees F. until light brown. Drain on soft paper and serve with broiled chops, steak or ham.

Pineapple Mousee.

1 teaspoon gelatin
2 tablespoons cold water
1½ cups crushed grated pineapple and juice
1-3 cup sugar
1 tablespoon lemon juice
1 cup cream

Soak gelatin five minutes in the cold water. Heat pineapple and juice to boiling point, add sugar, lemon juice and gelatin. Cool. When it begins to stiffen, fold it into stiffly whipped cream. Pour into tray and freeze without stirring.

Bisque Ice Cream.

1 cup condensed milk
¾ cup water
1½ teaspoons vanilla
1 cup cream
Salt
1 cup macaroon crumbs

Mix milk with water, add vanilla and salt. Whip cream until stiff. Fold into mixture. Turn into refrigerator freezing trays and freeze from three to four hours. Fills two pint trays.

English Shortcake.

6 slices buttered bread
1 quart berries or fruit
1 cup granulated sugar
Whipped cream

Trim crust from bread and line a greased bowl with the slices, cutting corners so that the pieces meet. Pour in the berries, crushed, with sugar, cover with bread, set plate on top of this, press down with a weight and put in the refrigerator twenty-four hours. Turn out of mold, garnish with whipped cream and serve.

Cardamom Cookies.

1 cup butter
1 cup sugar
2 eggs, well beaten
4 cups flour
1 ounce cardamom seeds, crushed
Rind of 1 lemon, grated

Cream the butter with the sugar until light. Add eggs. Add flour, cardamom seeds and grated lemon rind. Chill dough, roll, cut with cookie cutter and bake in a hot oven, 400 degrees F. about eight minutes.

Pleasing Dining Room

A charming old English dining room has walls and woodwork painted Delft-blue and a white ceiling cross-beamed with dark oak. The furniture is also of dark oak, while the floor covering has deep rose tones in it. The draperies at the windows are dark blue with a pattern containing the lighter blue of the walls and the rose tones of the floor.

The Household

By LYDIA LE BARON WALKER

DECORATING the boy's room is something every mother who has a son finds intriguing. The lad spurns anything that savors of daintiness. He wants a real man's room. It is up to the mother to make the room as masculine in its character as she would make her daughter's room feminine in type.

Most boys delight in boats and boating, and this suggests a nautical room for home, school or college. Fortunately there are many emblems that lend themselves admirably to ornamental use, ships and boats, anchors and ropes, sea creatures and seaweed, lighthouses and rocky shores with waves and breakers, fishermen and oarsmen, etc.

Banks of Galley Oars.

One of the ancient ornamental conceits for weaving, rug-craft, and other craft arts is the galley oarsman. When you know the motif the stylized row of oars or banks, as they are termed, is readily distinguished in what seems to be a maze of design. The motif is, of course, adapted to the necessities of the craft, such as the warp and weft, or filler, as it is frequently termed today.

A large anchor with its chain and fastening done in applique or tufting makes an excellent center motif for a bedspread, and in somewhat smaller size, for the center of sofa cushion covers. Strips of undulating applique supply the wave motif to use as bands for a border. Or if tufting is employed, the wave motif can be done in this work. In plain embroidery chain stitch done in heavy yarns is quick and correct for chains.

Fish and Seaweed.

The fish and seaweed design is just the thing to use on towels, bureau scarf, and table covers. This printed pattern for filet crochet or cross stitch by counted threads, can be had while it lasts, by sending ten cents together with self-addressed, stamped (3-cent) envelope with a request directed to Lydia Le Baron Walker care of this paper.

Wall papers come in lighthouse patterns, seascapes, and ship designs. Or a plain wall paper can be the background for pictures featuring water, wharf, and marine scenes.

Nautical Patterns Contribute a Masculine Touch to the Decoration of a Boy's Room.

what Irvin S. Cobb thinks about:

Camels and Communists

FLAGSTAFF, ARIZ.—There's nothing new about the fable. The only novelty is in the moral.

One night a camel came and begged to be allowed to poke his cold nose inside an Arab's tent.

So the Arab, being a good-hearted Arab, says yes. Pretty soon the camel claimed his ears were chilly and could he shove in as far as his ears? And the Arab said that was O. K.

Irvin Cobb

Next the camel got permission to put his neck in out of the weather, and, after that, his forelegs and then his front hump, closely followed by his rear hump, and finally his hindquarters.

When morning came the camel was inside the tent, completely filling it, and the Arab had been crowded outside and there he was—poor shivering wretch, as homeless as a ha'nt.

Moral—Every time I hear of an imported Communist smuggling himself into our midst, I think of a cold-nosed camel.

Holding the Bag.

UP TO now our government has declined all invitations to jump into the Italian-German-French-Russian-British snarl, but watch for an effort to induce America to join in when the time comes for dividing up control over poor old Spain's ports, islands and remaining colonial possessions.

Not that we'd want anything out of the grab-bag and not that they'd give us anything. They'd merely expect us to hold the bag afterwards, which would make two bags in all—this little new one and the big one we've been holding ever since 1918.

Travelers' Homecoming.

CALIFORNIA travel bureaus report an increase of incoming tourists. But then again, on the other hand, part of it may be due to returning residents who went hurriedly away when the papers started printing a certain romantic diary. If your sins do not always find you out, at least they frequently find you getting out.

It's all over now and peace and quiet have been restored to our home circles, but at the height of the rush one involuntarily was reminded of the ancient story of the Frenchman who bet with his friend he could prove every man, however outwardly pure, had a dreaded secret in his life. So, to test it, he sent to each of the ten most respected notables in Paris an anonymous telegram reading as follows: "All is discovered. Flee at once."

And next morning nine of them were gone and the tenth had committed suicide.

"Backward" British Justice.

ENGLISH news-reel producers have been fined $10,000 — and that's important money in any language — for titling a film "An Attempt on the King's Life."

Mind you, they weren't punished for any injury this title might do his majesty. Incredible though it sounds to us, the charge was: "Contempt of court for prejudicing the case against McMahon (the man who tried to shoot King Edward) before he was brought to trial."

For contrast, take a not altogether forgotten criminal case.

Possibly you may remember a certain murderer's trial and what sort of publicity went before it, and what actually occurred whilst 'twas being held, and what the aftermath has been, with attorneys and key-witnesses and—yes—actually some of the jurors peddling their private views for public consumption; and the governor of a great state displaying curious and violent activities, even when the verdict had been called a fair one by the high courts?

Backward race, these Britishers, trying people by the evidence and not by the newspapers and the moving-picture cameras.

Second, terrapin stew.

Third, rice-fed canvasback duck, with lye hominy and a baked winesap apple.

BEDTIME STORY FOR CHILDREN

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

THE ANGRY TRAPPER

JERRY MUSKRAT had about decided that Farmer Brown's Boy wasn't coming back when he heard footsteps and a moment later Farmer Brown's Boy appeared coming down the Laughing Brook toward the Smiling Pool. Jerry remained hidden where he could not be seen, but where he himself could see all that went on around the Smiling Pool.

In one hand Farmer Brown's Boy carried a bunch of things that clanked as he walked. Jerry knew what they were. He would know those things as far as he could see them. They were steel traps. Jerry scowled as he saw them. The sound of them hitting together sent little cold shivers over him. They were dreadful things, even more dreadful than terrible guns. There was nothing to fear from the latter save when they were in the hands of hunters, and any one with his wits about him ought to be able to see a hunter in time to seek safety.

The Top of the Stick Was Split and in This He Slipped a Piece of Paper.

But these dreadful traps were left hidden in the very places where a fellow had the right to feel safest, ready to seize him in cruel steel jaws and hold him to suffer pain and dreadful fright for hours and hours, sometimes for days. Jerry could think of nothing so dreadful as those steel traps, and so he shivered at the sight of them.

Farmer Brown's Boy threw the traps down on the bank of the Smiling Pool. His usually sunny face was clouded. From his pocket he took a piece of paper and a pencil. Then he sat down and began to write. When he had finished he went over to Jerry's favorite log and thrust a stick in the bank just above it. The top of the stick was split, and in this he slipped the piece of paper. Then he went back, gathered up the traps, slung them over his shoulder and tramped off in the direction of home.

All the rest of that day Jerry kept an eye on that piece of paper at the end of his favorite old log. It puzzled him. He didn't go near it. He didn't dare to. He was suspicious of it. It might be some new kind of trap. Jerry was very unhappy. Early the next morning Jerry heard some one coming down the Laughing Brook. He promptly hid where he could watch. In a few minutes the stranger whom he had one time thought his friend appeared, and it was plain to be seen that he was very angry. He was muttering as he strode along. Almost at once he saw the piece of paper left by Farmer Brown's Boy. He strode over to it, picked it up, and read it. This is what was on it:

"No trapping or hunting is allowed on this property. You, whoever you are, can get your traps at Farmer Brown's house."

The trapper turned and shook his fist in the direction of Farmer Brown's. Then, still muttering, he walked away hurriedly, but not in the direction of Farmer Brown's. Jerry didn't understand it at all, but for some unknown reason he felt better.

CULINARY THOUGHTS

IT IS just a matter of taste, of course, the kinds of foods we like; tomatoes we all admit are one of our choice vegetables, rich in vitamins and adding attractiveness to any dish by their rich color, but are we not overdoing the tomato sauce business? It is served over all kinds of meat, fish and fowl, as spanish rice, pilaf, creole sauce goulash, hungarian, and otherwise, until the sight of tomato on spaghetti, macaroni and noodles makes us wish we could get back for a while at least to the days of our grandmothers when the tomato was simply an ornament and considered poisonous to eat.

We have too many mixtures in our diets. A sliced ripe tomato served fresh and natural is a thing of beauty and a joy forever, but when we put it into all sorts of mixtures they become a mess. A few such dishes once in a great while might be really enjoyed, but served too often we lose all respect for the delightful vegetable.

Recently on the bill of fare in a famous restaurant we ordered "Old-fashioned Beef Stew." There were visions of brown juicy meat with the accompanying brown gravy, but when it appeared there were large cubes of beef floating in rivers of tomato sauce; imagine a stew called old-fashioned, served thus.

When we disguise the dish we are serving by any sauce too highly seasoned or flavored, we are guilty of a grave dietary error. When we eat potatoes, we want to have them taste like potatoes; meats should always have their own distinctive flavor paramount, and so should it be in all main dishes.

Home of Wild Sheep

Wild sheep of many species occupy mountains in most of Asia, Southern Europe and Northern Africa. Asia has by far the greatest number of species and individuals, and scientists believe it to be the region where wild sheep originated. They must have been fairly early migrants to North America, however, probably crossing from Siberia to Alaska long before the first human beings to populate the New World came over by the same route.

With Long Ruffle

An elongated ruffle which extends from around the neck down to the hem of the skirt trims Ginger Rogers' dress of gentian blue crepe printed with tiny bright blue squares. Her accessories are cream-colored. She wears a Lily Dache hat which, in design, is newer than next week. The brim is tied up by means of a blue cord which matches the net that forms the crown.

PITY THE POOR

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

Pity the poor—
  An oak they see,
And yet they but
  Behold a tree.

Pity the poor,
  When buds unclose,
Who see a flow'r
  And not a rose.

Pity the poor,
  Who sell, who lend,
Make gold, but never
  Make a friend.

Pity the poor,
  Who come, who roam,
And have a house
  And not a home.

Pity the poor,
  Who know no loss,
No crown because
  They know no cross.

Pity the poor—
  Whate'er the need,
These are the poor,
  The poor indeed.

THE PUZZLING KNOT

ASK a person to take a handkerchief by opposite corners. That done, request your friend to tie a knot in the handkerchief without releasing either corner.

The longer he attempts to tie the knot the more hopeless his task will become. Eventually, he will challenge you to perform the trick, whereupon you oblige.

Stretch the handkerchief and lay it on a table. Fold your arms, bend forward and grasp one end of the handkerchief between the fingers of your left hand; then shift and gain the other end with the fingers of your right.

Unfold your arms, holding the end of the handkerchief as you do so. A knot forms automatically in the center of the cloth.

ANNABELLE'S ANSWERS

SKULLS SHOW SKILL OF EARLY SURGERY

Trepanning Was Practiced in Eighth Century, B. C.

London—That surgeons who practiced in Judea in the Eighth century B. C. were fully conversant with the science of trepanning a skull is revealed by Dr. C. B. Mortlock through exclusive data sent him by J. L. Starkey, head of the Wellcome archaeological research expedition, now in its fourth year of excavation at Tell Duweir, Palestine.

"A large deposit of human remains was found in a disused tomb contemporary with the earlier destruction of the city (Lachish). It is suggested that these 2,000 bodies were the result of salvaging the burned city after the destruction by Sennacherib in 701 B. C. About 700 skulls were in sufficiently good condition for preservation, and are now in London awaiting study," says Dr. Mortlock.

Two Examples of Trepanning

"Besides many interesting pathological specimens and two skulls which were intentionally distorted, there are two examples of trepanning.

"These are the earliest examples of this type of trepanning. All specimens found before have shown that the operation was made by circular scraping, but the two Lachish skulls conform to a technique which was previously only known among the Incas of America. In one skull the surgeon has started the operation on the left parietal and then performed on the opposite side.

"Experts believe that in the case of Inca skulls the patient never recovered from the operation, but there is evidence that the Lachish patients survived. Anthropologists will now have the chance to study a large group of contemporary skulls from the same site, which will result in valuable deductions as to the inhabitants of Judea during the Jewish monarchy.

Shops With Goods Uncovered

"The excavations show that at the last period of occupation there was a public square within the gates, and a group of shops with their stores of goods has been uncovered. All the contents were in position when the roofs fell in from the burning of the city. They were found buried under the ashes.

"The largest shop was that of a weaver. Set in the floor was a large limestone dyeing vat; a row of loom weights marked the position of the looms and a fragment of wooden beam actually remained of the burned loom. From the same shop came a clay seal impression from a papyrus document bearing the impress of a seal 'For Hilkiah the son of Maas.'

"Close by were the premises of a corn chandler, and many jars bearing the royal stamp of Hebron were stacked in a wine and oil store.

"The XVIII-XIX dynasty temple which produced the Duweir Ewer from the later levels has proved equally interesting in the earlier period. A fine group of pottery, including a flat platter, about thirty-five dipper flasks and a painted vase imported from the Greek mainland in the Fifteenth century B. C. was found close to the early altar.

"This continuity of the history of the building is also confirmed by the development of the temple plan, which shows a continuous relationship in the three buildings covering a period from 1480 to 1260 B. C."

San Quentin Prison Has Become Real Melting Pot

San Quentin Prison, Calif.—San Quentin prison, in proportion to its size, possesses a greater cosmopolitan and international population than any other spot in the world, according to a census just completed by Ralph Thatcher, editor of the prison's publication.

Even a session of the League of Nations, meeting within the limited precincts of its own property, hardly can present a more universal international crowd than does San Quentin, he declares.

At present the prison houses about 5,000 inmates coming from virtually every state in the Union, its foreign possessions and from at least 44 countries of the world. An analysis of population shows that out of every five inmates, only one is a native of California, three come from some distant state, and one is from a foreign land.

Japan's Population Rise in 1935 Was Her Biggest

Tokyo.—The cabinet bureau of statistics announces that the increase in Japan's population last year by the excess of births over deaths was 1,028,623, the largest annual increase on record. The nearest approach to it was in 1932, when the increase was 1,007,398.

On an average 240 Japanese were born every hour in 1935, while 133 died.

For the last five years Japan's annual increase of population has been close to the 1,000,000 mark and the total is now above 69,000,000. There were 169 people to the square mile in 1931, compared with 183 in England, 266 in Belgium and 243 in The Netherlands, but Japan has much more mountainous land than the others

Baby Bunting Stuff: A lot of Broadwayites go up into Connecticut over the week-end with the intention of hunting rabbits. Whether or not they bring back any game, they certainly bring back yarns about desperate encounters with bunnies in the hills and dales of the Nutmeg State — yarns that would make Frank Buck blush. Among the more enthusiastic of the hunters is Johnny the Call Boy who is so small that, reports have it, he has to make sure his rabbit is dead before he picks it up, otherwise he would have to fight for his life. Incidentally, I've heard stories of good hunting, even if this isn't rabbit season but I haven't seen a rabbit — except those that occasionally run across the highway at high speed.

Just a Slight Drop: Up in Stamford, N. Y., which is in the heart of the summer resort section, the hotel men got together to ascertain the highest point in the town. It was discovered that 2,500 feet, which, though somewhat lower than nearby hills, is as high up as the village goes. At any rate, a hotel happened to be located at that point, so that 2,500-foot elevation was duly advertised, according to my informant. But some prospective guests wrote that their hearts wouldn't stand that altitude. So the advertising was changed to read, "Altitude, 1,700 feet" and everything is going along all right.

The mayor, so the organ-grinder said, replied that he couldn't give him a license but he could take his organ out provided he moved along whenever any one ordered him to do so. Instead of ordering him to move on, May went down with a dime and thereby obtained three more tunes—and this paragraph.

"Old Faithful" Isn't Faithful Any More

Yellowstone Park, Wyo., — The longest and shortest intervals between eruptions of Old Faithful geyser were recorded here recently. The usually reliable geyser spouted once at 11:56 a. m. and then burst into action again at 12:26 p. m., a wait of only thirty minutes. Then followed an interval of ninety-two minutes, or until 1:58 p. m. Old Faithful seldom varies from sixty-five-minute intervals between outbursts.

Shoes and Paradise

By EMILY SPEARS

© McClure Newspaper Syndicate, WNU Service.

FAY OSBORN almost ran along the street, through the early morning crowds. She had just wrenched the heel off one of her shoes. She'd have to stop at the shoemaker's and have it fixed, and that would make her late to the office—late, too, for all the other things that must be crowded into her busy day. She wanted to get in some shopping, before late afternoon, when she was to have tea with Duke; must get it in, in fact, for she wanted to look her very best. Not that Duke would notice, in all probability. He never had seemed to notice what she was wearing in the old days back home. It was three years since she had seen him. He'd changed in lots of ways, most likely, living abroad and traveling a lot and all that.

The shoemaker was bent low over a delicate little pump when Fay hurried into his shop. She explained that she must have her shoe fixed at once. She'd had to walk the last half block with one heel off, and she couldn't possibly go on that way! Her shoes were rather square, low-heeled ones, but even so it had been difficult.

"But I can't fix that now, Miss," he told her. "I've got a rush order here — two rush orders — and my daughter's getting married this noon, and I've got to go home for that."

Fay looked at him in despair.

"But what can I do?" she cried.

He glanced down at her feet, and then reached to a low shelf and held out a shoe to her. It was a patent leather, slim, high-heeled pump, and a wide buckle made it seem even narrower and slimmer than it was.

"Try this," he told her. "Just slip it on; I think it'll fit."

"I never wear shoes like that," she told him. "I wear just flat, low-heeled ones. Anyway, it isn't mine."

"No, but it's mine, to sell, maybe," he told her. "A customer of mine sprained her ankle, and she's got to wear low-heeled shoes for a year after it gets well, and she asked me if I couldn't keep all her high-heeled ones here, and maybe sell them to one of my other customers. They're beautiful shoes, Miss."

Fay glanced at the clock. Even later than she'd thought! She took the shoe and slipped it on quickly. It did fit—but how funny it looked. Oh well—she must get to the office.

At first it was hard to get used to the high-heeled shoes; then gradually she began to like the feeling of them. By noon, when she went on her shopping tour, she was wondering why she hadn't ever had even one pair of high-heeled shoes.

She was going to buy a new suit—a sensible tweed, she'd decided; the kind of suit she always bought. But the sensible tweeds all looked wrong, somehow, with that other girl's shoes.

"Just try this one, Miss," the saleswoman suggested. It was a dark blue suit, with a touch of red in the collar and cuffs, and its material was soft and clinging. Fay tried it on and marveled at the effect. In the end she bought it.

She arrived a little early at the hotel where she was to meet Duke, but he was there. He looked at her, looked away, then back again, and as she smiled, came forward eagerly.

"Fay! I didn't know you. How you've changed!" he exclaimed. "I can hardly believe it's you!"

He led her to the tea-room, where they sat in wide, deep chairs at a low table where a bowl of roses bloomed among the tea things.

"You used to be so, well, so sort of sensible looking, as if you never could be frivolous," he told her. "It sort of scared me, because I'm heavily inclined toward frivolity you might say. But now you're just the same, and yet you seem to be so much gayer."

Fay wondered what he'd say if he knew that it was her clothes, bought just that day, that had made the change in her. She was playing up to them, to the lovely suit that wasn't a "sensible tweed," to the hat, to that other girl's shoes with their beautiful buckles and their long, slim lines.

"Do you know, Fay, even your feet have changed," he told her. "You used to wear such sensible looking shoes; sometimes I wished that I could tell you not to hide your pretty feet in them."

Fay smiled at him. Why not tell him the truth?

But it was days later when she did tell him about that other girl's shoes, days of which she had spent many hours with Duke, at luncheon, tea, dinner, even at breakfast!

And days during which she had learned that Duke had always liked her better than he did anyone else, but had been scared off by his fear that she was too sensible to care for a playboy like him.

"You're not a playboy," she told him indignantly. "You're wonderful."

"Go right on thinking so, my-wife-to-be," he told her. "And I'll forgive you for fooling me so long, and keeping me out of paradise."

A woman who was having a house built detected one of the bricklayers halving the bricks with his trowel. With a triumphant gleam in her eyes she approached him swiftly and said: "Isn't that rather a primitive way of cutting a brick in half?"

The man looked up, smiled and said: 'Lor' bless yer dear heart, lidy, there's a far more primitive way than this, believe me."

"Really, and what's that?" she inquired.

"Biting it, lidy, biting it."

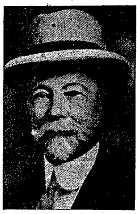
TO HONOR THE CONSTITUTION —PLANT TREES!

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

NEXT year, "we the people of the United States," will celebrate the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the adoption of the Constitution under which we have been governed as a nation for a century and a half and among other ways of observing that anniversary we're going to "say it with trees"!

At least, it is so planned by the sesquicentennial commission which has charge of the celebration. In a recent report to congress the commission said:

"A feature in the nation-wide celebration which will be a part of every sesquicentennial celebration is the planting of trees. The general plans for the tree-planting project in co-operation with the American Tree association appear elsewhere in this report. It is customary for many women's organizations to plant memorial trees as a tribute to their founders or to distinguished personages of history. During this celebration these organized groups will join in the tree planting in commemoration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the formation of the Constitution. Each state and local community will have its anniversary date when fitting ceremonies will be planned. Millions of trees will be dedicated to the memory of the framers of the Constitution.



CHARLES LATHROP PACK

"When plans were being made for the celebration of the Washington bicentennial it was intended to plant 10,000,000 trees in honor of the event. But so popular did this idea become throughout the country that in the year 1932 some 35,000,000 trees were actually planted in the United States. Therefore, it is proposed to follow a similar program in celebrating the sesquicentennial of the Constitution. As in the case of the Washington bicentennial, the President of the United States will be asked to plant a tree in the grounds of the White House, and one will also be set out in the Capitol grounds. It will be highly fitting, too, that the chief justice be invited to plant a tree in the grounds surrounding the new Supreme Court building.

"Thus inaugurating the movement, it is planned to reach every city, town, and school. The activities of the commission will be greatly assisted by the co-operation of the American Tree association. This excellent organization will also co-operate in preparing a booklet explaining the planting of trees and providing a program for the dedication.

"The millions of 'Constitution Trees' thus set out during the celebration will prove a beautiful, lasting and appropriate tribute to the Constitution of the United States."

The American Tree association has already issued the booklet mentioned in the foregoing report (it's called the Constitution Sesquicentennial Tree Planting Book) and recently several million copies were sent to club and organization leaders and school teachers throughout the country. At the same time Charles Lathrop Pack, president of the association, issued this statement:

Like a Great Oak

"The Constitution stands like a great oak. It has weathered many storms. It deserves a place next to the family Bible in every home. What could be more fitting than for the American people to begin now to make their plans for marking the sesquicentennial, September, 17, 1937, by planting trees? We are ready to distribute to school teachers or organization leaders or anyone else, this Constitution Sesquicentennial Tree Planting Book. In it is the Constitution and all amendments with every important date, as well as George Washington's letter of transmittal to the congress. With this, are given details on how to select, plant and care for trees and a suggested program for the dedication.

"As the statement of the United States Constitution Commission points out, nearly thirty-five million trees were planted to mark the bicentennial of the birth of George Washington. Now we have another reason for planting. Then we honored the Father of Our Country and now we mark the crowning achievement of his great career, the binding of the nation together under a Constitution. Historians all agree he made the Constitution possible.

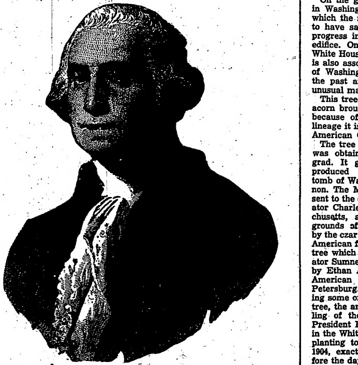
"In our planting plans we not only have the call of the commission to heed but we have the co-operation of thousands of organizations. At this year's meeting of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, Mrs. H. G. Bogert of Colorado, national conservation chairman, started a tree planting campaign reaching into every club. In the Daughters of the American Revolution, Mrs. Avery Turner of Texas, national chairman of conservation and thrift, has called upon all chapter chairmen to push the program.

"Every sesqui-year class in colleges and high schools as well as private institutions, is being asked to plant a sesqui tree as class activity. In the citizenship committees of various organizations, tree planting will be a major activity. One of the tree planting books has been sent to every CCC camp.

"In these days when we hear so much about dust storms, floods, and soil erosion causing hundreds of millions of dollars damages, the American people must become tree minded and realize the value of forests in flood prevention. The forests and their products support every industry. Commerce is impossible without these forest products. So let us plant not alone to mark this important date in our history, maybe the most important date, but also to call the attention of new thousands to the value of trees."

Ratification Day

Mr. Pack also has sent to the governors of the original states ratifying the Constitution the suggestion that "Ratification Days" in each state be marked by organizing state-wide plans for tree planting in anticipation of the big program in 1937.



GEORGE WASHINGTON

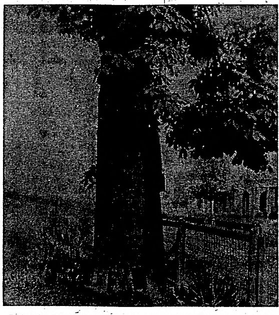
Among the thousands of trees which will be planted next year as a part of the Constitution celebration undoubtedly there will be many elms. This will be especially appropriate, in so far as this celebration also honors the memory of George Washington, since an elm tree marked an important milestone in his life. It was under a tree of this species in Cambridge, Mass. that he took command of the Continental army on July 3, 1775 and started on the career which led to the establishment of a new nation and his election as its first President under the Constitution.

For nearly a century and a half this elm was a landmark and patriotic shrine, carefully guarded and with every effort made to save it from the ravages of time. Its long and honored career came to an end in August, 1923, when the whole trunk cracked and fell while workmen were pulling a dead branch from it. It was estimated that the tree was then more than 350 years old.



LAST OF THE 13 HORSE CHESTNUT TREES PLANTED BY WASHINGTON AT KENMORE.

Numerous "Grandchildren"

But even though this historic tree is dead, it lives on in its "children" and "grandchildren" which are to be found in various parts of the United States. On May 1, 1876 a centennial tree, which had been produced from the seed of the Washington elm, was presented to the city of Cambridge by John Owen.

Two "grandchild seedlings" from the Cambridge elm under which Washington took command of the Continental army are growing near his tomb at Mount Vernon, there is one in the yard of the governor's mansion in Annapolis, Md., one in front of the Memorial church at Valley Forge, and another at Washington college at Chestertown, Md., which was named for Washington and which he once visited to receive an honorary degree. Another is thriving on the grounds of the D. A. R. Memorial Continental hall in Washington, D. C., and still another in the yard of the headquarters of the Sons of the American Revolution in the same city. And clear across the country, on the campus of the University of Washington in Seattle there is another of these "grandchild seedlings," brought there by an aluminus of the university.

Besides the two Cambridge elms, the state of Massachusetts is rich in "tree memorials" to the Father of His Country.

Just outside the town of Palmer, on the Boston-Springfield highway, stands another famous old tree known as the Mother Washington elm. It is claimed by some historians and the American Forestry association that when Washington was on his way to Cambridge, he stopped beneath this particular elm to rest.

Many "Washington Trees"

Elm trees, however, are not the only ones which we associate with the name of Washington. Deerfield, Mass., has a buttonwood tree "where Washington watered horses." A horse chestnut tree, planted by Washington, still stands in the yard of Kenmore, the Fredericksburg (Va.) home of Betty Washington Lewis, his sister. It is the last of 13 such trees which he planted there to represent the Thirteen Colonies and to shade the walk between the cottage of his mother, Mary Ball Washington, and Kenmore.

Eight years ago a "Washington Friendship Grove" of 13 horse chestnut trees was planted in the National Capital. They sprang from the seeds of a tree which for more than 150 years stood in Bath, Pa., as an emblem of friendship between Washington and Gen. Robert Brown. The latter was a frequent visitor to Mount Vernon and at the end of one such visit, in 1781, Washington with his own hands dug from his garden two young horse chestnut trees which he presented to his friend. Brown carried the young saplings across the mountains to his home where he planted them on the lawn. Only one of the trees, however survived but it grew to a height of 70 feet and had an 85-foot spread of its branches.

Tree of Two Nations

On the grounds of the Capitol in Washington is an elm under which the first President is said to have sat while watching the progress in the building of that edifice. On the grounds of the White House stands a tree which is also associated with the name of Washington and which links the past and the present in an unusual manner.

This tree is the outgowth of an acorn brought from Russia, and because of this and its unique lineage it is known as the Russo-American Oak.

The tree from which the acorn was obtained stands in Leningrad. It grew from an acorn produced by a tree at the tomb of Washington, at Mt. Vernon. The Mt. Vernon acorn was sent to the czar of Russia by Senator Charles Sumner, of Massachusetts, and planted in the grounds of the imperial palace by the czar as a symbol of Russo-American friendship. In 1898, the tree which had grown from Senator Sumner's acorn was located by Ethan Allen Hitchcock, then American Ambassador to St. Petersburg. Gathering and planting some of the acorns from this tree, the ambassador sent a sapling of the new generation to President Roosevelt for planting in the White House grounds. The planting took place on April 6, 1904, exactly thirteen years before the day on which the United States joined hands with Russia and other European countries in the greatest conflict the world has ever known—a conflict which led to the destruction of the old Russia and the assassination of the royal family. The young tree was planted by President Roosevelt himself.

In several parts of the country are trees famous for their association with Washington's friend, Marquis de Lafayette. One Lafayette tree on the battlefield of Brandywine derives its prestige from the fact that when the celebrated French general was wounded at Brandywine his injuries were given first aid under this tree. At Annapolis is a tree under which a reception to Lafayette was held, with a distinguished company in attendance. In the form of trees planted by his own hand, General Lafayette left many mementoes of his travels in America. One of these is now standing at Concord, New Hampshire. Another is at Yorktown, Va., near a house in which are still to be seen cannon balls imbedded in the timbers during the siege of Yorktown.

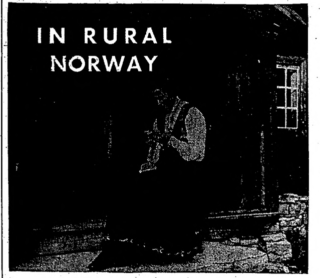
IN RURAL NORWAY



Spare Moments in Norway Are Spent on the Trousseau.

Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

AUGUST is harvest time in Norway. Since most rural families are mainly dependent for their winter's food on what they themselves prepare, it is therefore a particularly busy time.

A visit to a typical Norwegian farm at this season would imply your sharing their whole-hearted work as well as their equally whole-hearted jollity afterwards. The activities of harvesting and merry-making would keep you busy on any of the thousands of small farms which skirt the long twisting fjords or utilize what level land there is along the rushing rivers in mountain valleys.

Glance for a moment at Hallingdal, a long valley which winds through the central section of Norway. For most of its length it is only one or two farms wide, for the mountainsides rise steeply from the river bottom. This valley is familiar to those who have traveled by rail from Oslo to Bergen.

By the daily train it is possible to reach Hallingdal's villages around which cluster farms of typical rural Norwegian families. If you should visit such a family, you could participate in their harvesting—but only after being welcomed by sharing their food, even though it be just a nibble of fruit, fresh leaf lettuce, little curled anchovies, and sheets of crisp flatbread.

Clouds sweeping over the mountains and across the valley serve warning that it may rain before dusk. The hay from the high meadow should be in the barn before then. All hands must seize rakes and hurry to the meadow for a race with the weather.

Haying in Hallingdal

The Halling farmer still uses a hand scythe and never misses a tuft hidden away in the fence corner or along the river bank. Every spear of grass is valuable. The youngest child follows the workers to glean the wisps that the others have missed. They all help load the sweet dry hay into a little hayrack made of unstripped birch saplings.

This is hauled to the barn by hand, for the little pony has been sent to the mountain meadow for the summer along with the cattle, so that every bit of grass on the home farm could be made into hay for the long winter. The hayrack is not a heavy load to push except for the last little way up the log runway into the mow, which can be taken with a rush and a whoop.

Before long all the hay is stowed from that meadow, from the edge of the dark spruces on the mountainside to the dusty bank of wild strawberries by the roadside. Then everyone can hang the wooden rakes along the log wall of the woodshed and enjoy an out of doors "coffee" picnic of coffee, little cakes, and wild berries strung on grass stems. The coffee cloth has been spread out on the grass under a wild cherry tree.

While the young women of the family are busy in the fields, the grandmother who is too old to help spins wool for the winter supply of gaily patterned socks and mittens. On lonely farms, housewives eagerly watch the road and discuss the probable errand of every passer-by.

Down by the river there is a field of "green," barley to be cut while there is still sap in the stalk and the grain has just reached the milk stage. This is dried over racks in the field. Then it is very prickly to load.

Then Barley and Rye

When the hay is all in, the barley and rye grow ripe. The farmer cuts through the shimmering golden fields with great swings of his scythe. At each stroke the grain falls in a neat semicircle on the ground. Then it is bound into bundles to be shocked spirally around tall saplings stuck in the ground. There is a little red ladder to climb up with the top bundles. In this section of Norway the grain is not threshed at harvest time, but later on during the winter, when the horse is home from the mountain pastures and can be hitched to the crude treadmill in the barn.

The herds of cattle, goats, and horses during the summer grazing in the mountains are tended by either a young unmarried daughter or an old woman. The life of a summer dairy maid has been celebrated in song and saga for hundreds of years. She lives in a small log hut with turf roof, passing her days milking cows and goats, making butter and tending the huge iron caldrons in which milk is slowly simmered to make rich cheese. She sets off to the upland pastures riding a pony which is loaded with empty tubs as well as with her few belongings. Later, when a brother visits her hut to bring supplies, he will collect the tubs filled with butter and cheeses and carry them back to the homestead.

The cattle are small brindly beasts with spreading brass-tipped horns. They have not been bred for quantity milk production. Little attention seems to be paid to breeding. Often a cow will give only a quart or so at milking. If you wonder why such a cow is tolerated, you may receive such an explanation as this: "Ja, but she is small, and does not eat much, either, that cow." In a land where every spear of hay has value, this is an argument of great weight.

Food Mostly Home-Grown

Aside from the fine white cake flour, which is imported from America, most of the family food is procuced at home. Barley, rye, and oats are milled locally, the miller getting a share of the meal and flour for his work. The garden yields stores of cabbages, potatoes, and root vegetables for the winter. Potatoes, too, are an important crop for they are on the family's daily menu and, along with birch twigs, form a staple item in the winter diet of the cattle.

Nature is lavish here with a large number of berries, both wild and tame. Masses of wild strawberries grow along the roadsides. There are currants from which to make sweet wine; wild cherries, the juice of which is bottled to make soup and puddings; the little wild "mountain cranberries," which make delicious jam to serve with pork or roast ptarmigan; and, best of all, the arctic cloudberry, growing in the mountain-top sloughs. This last, when stored in great crocks, keeps through the winter, without cooking or other preservation.

Only with such a variety of provisions can the Norwegian family continue the alternation of work, rest, and eating which is farm routine. First thing in the morning, coffee and cakes are brought to the family in bed. As soon as they are dressed, there is a large breakfast with more coffee, bread and butter, and all sorts of pickled fish and sausage and goat's-milk cheese to put on it. At 11 o'clock work pauses for another snack, which is breakfast all over again.

There is a heavy dinner about one-thirty and then a siesta. Yes, you may be surprised, but this "old Spanish custom" is firmly entrenched in the rural sections of this energetic northern climate. After the nap there are more coffee and cakes before the work of the afternoon is begun.

The last real meal of the day is the evening porridge, at about 8 or 9 o'clock. This meal is unvarying except just after a slaughtering, when a blood pudding is substituted for the usual dish.

All Put in the Stabbur

The yearly harvests of cereals, the cheeses, cured meats, bread, and cakes are stored in the stabbur. The stabbur, or storehouse, is a typical feature of the Norwegian landscape. It is built of logs on high mushroom-shaped stilts as a protection against marauding insects and rats. Elaborately carved, it is guarded against the weather by a coat of wood tar. The front porch of the structure is reached by a flight of plank steps separated from the building by a sort of moat of air across which thieving animals would find it difficult to leap.

The wrought-iron key, which fits a wooden lock in the heavy carved door, takes two hands to turn. The door opens into a small dark room with heavy log walls unbroken by windows. There are large bins of various kinds of meal and flour, each with a brightly painted wooden scoop hanging above it. On shelves are stacked cheeses of many kinds. There are gay wooden boxes full of cakes which had been baked in the spring when the cream was rich. In one corner on a low platform, sheets of rye and barley flatbread with crinkly edges, temptingly brown, are piled almost to the ceiling. It has been made of stiff unleavened dough rolled into round paper-thin sheets and browned on the bakehouse stove.

"More Babies!" Europe's Dictators Cry

Soviet Russia, Germany and Italy Embark on Programs Designed to Increase Marriages and Step Up Birth Rate.

By WILLIAM C. UTLEY

MORE marriages! More babies! More people!

That is the formula of the three great European dictatorships for more power in the future. Drastic laws have been ordered to check declines in birth rates, as well as to whittle down the death rates in Russia, Germany and Italy.

In Germany and Italy, the measures taken produced a brief flurry of success, but this success appears now to be on the wane; indeed, present indications are that the birth rates in these two nations are fast slipping back to levels as low as before the program began.

Only in Russia is the program succeeding, and there it is going over with a bang. But the Soviet measures are those of a completely communistic society, and most of them would be direct offenses to the morals of a Christian country with the type of society that we know. Further, the Russians are of a stock more suited to increasing the population than the other two nations.

Multiple Marriage at Berlin in 1933.

The Soviet Russians are multiplying more rapidly today than any other people of the world. By the time the eighth Five-Year Plan ends in 1967, it is expected the nation's population will reach 300,000,000. It is 173,000,000 now, including a net increase of births over deaths equaling 4,000,000 in 1935.

Room for Expansion.

Sociological experts believe that the Soviet birth rate will continue to increase. Taken by and large, the Reds are just coming out of a primitive period and are naturally prolific.

There is plenty of space in Russian territory for any populate expansion of which the Reds are capable, and there will be plenty of food for everybody. Famines in past days destroyed millions of Russians in a year, but there will be no more of those. Irrigation projects are quenching the thirst of the drouth regions. Collective farming has been stabilized. Most important of all, agriculture has been spread over many areas, far apart, so that a drouth in one area would affect only a comparatively small portion of the crop.

Soviet laws encourage the marriage of persons we would hardly consider of the marrying age. They also permit relations between men and women which allow women to have children under conditions which would bring them shame in western countries. It is not considered a disgrace for a single woman to have a child. An unmarried father who disappears is disgraced, though. Many unmarried girls in Russia have children just because they want them.

Care of Expectant Mothers.

A state of legal marriage exists in Soviet Russia simply if a man and woman are living together. Civil registration offices—the ZAGS—will perform a simple ceremony for those of formal preferences, although there is no sentiment connected with it. The registration gives the girl some added protection and increases her chances for alimony if her husband leaves her.

Communistic nurseries aid working women to care for their children. When they are with child they are permitted to leave their positions for awhile, but their pay goes on.

As a result of these policies the U. S. S. R. in five years showed an increase of 11,500,000 persons, as compared with 850,000 for England, 1,300,000 for Germany and 650,000 for France. While the death rate is declining the birth rate is estimated at between 35 and 50 per thousand.

The program undertaken by the Hitler government in Germany is intended to control marriages and births. Definitely fixed classes suffering from hereditary diseases are sterilized. To insure the quality of its population, Germany requires persons intending to marry to go to the bureau for heredity and race supervision for a marriage-health certificate. They are forbidden to marry Jews.

Tough on Bachelors.

Every encouragement is offered to stimulate marriages. Couples are given government certificates, called "marriage aid" loans, with which they may buy household goods. These are repaid in small installments, but each of the first four children born reduces the loan by 25 per cent.

If the government is easy on married couples, it strikes a balance in its attitude toward bachelors. Their taxes were boosted 100 to 150 per cent.

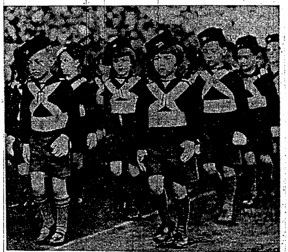
Some cities (and occasionally the Reich, if the case is very urgent) pay premiums in the form of merchandise certificates for children. They amount to 100 marks for each child, with a maximum of 1,000 marks for one family. Some municipalities give financial aid amounting to 20 or 30 marks a month for a child until it reaches fourteen. Families with children are given preference in the distribution of jobs and in housing.

The Nazi Mother and Child organization gives advice and money and provides recreation and vacations for poor mothers.

Vast Propaganda Mill.

While the married couples are given every advantage, the government deliberately attempts to make life more or less difficult for the unmarried. Married men get the jobs first. And often an unmarried man under 25 years of age is forced to "exchange jobs" with a married man. This simply means that the married man gets the job and the bachelor is sent into the labor service or "Land Help." Large families get first call on homes and benefit from greatly reduced railroad fares.

Germany is in the throes of a mild "back to the land" movement at present. Thousands of persons are being removed from "white collar" jobs and placed in manual labor. Manual laborers generally have larger families.



More Youngsters Like These Is Mussolini's Aim.

By no means least important of all the measures Hitler is using to build up Germany's population is the vast propaganda mill of the Nazi government. It is at work night and day to shape the public mind toward the favor of large families.

Hitler's program started well, but shows definite indications of failing to attain its goal. Germany had 516,973 marriages, or 7.9 per thousand population in 1932; these figures grew to 739,449, or 11.1 per thousand in two years.

There were 971,174 births, or 14.7 per thousand in 1933. These were increased to 1,261,273 or 18.9 per thousand in 1935. The growth of population in 1933 was 233,297, or 3.5 per thousand, and in 1934 was 472,074, or 7 per thousand.

Italy's Program.

And then something began to slip. There were only 650,851 marriages or 9.7 per thousand in 1935. According to estimates of conditions in the larger cities, the marriage rate has slipped back to below the 1932 level this year.

The birth rate, which rose .9 per thousand last year, is running below the levels of 1933 and 1934. The death rate is on the increase, and the growth of population, computed by subtracting the number of deaths from the number of births, has slowed up to below the 1934 point.

For nine years now, Italy has pursued a program which it hopes will make the nation's population 60,000,000 by 1950, with questionable success, at least.

For a short while in 1930, signs were encouraging to Mussolini, but with the exception of that period, the birth rate has been steadily falling for fourteen years.

Death Rate Well Reduced.

The marriage rate also is believed to be declining. The growth of population is proceeding at a slower pace than at any time within the last fifty years, with the exception of the years between 1916 and 1920 when it was affected by the World war. Yet the Fascist dicatorship is trying steadily to improve the situation, chiefly by using methods similar to those of Germany.

While the campaign to increase the birth rate has fallen far short of its mark, Mussolini's efforts to cut down the death rate have been better rewarded. The death rate stands now at the lowest point within the scope of Italian historians. This is so far offset by the falling birth rate, however, that the population of the country has remained about the same for some years.

Vast propaganda measures have been supplemented by measures of reward for the prolific and penalty for the unprolific, much as they have in Germany. There is a tax on bachelors, who can never say in Italy that "they know when they are well off." This not only makes marrying more attractive to them, but the revenue from the tax is used to give assistance to poor mothers.

Prizes for Triplets.

Parents of children are everywhere given privileges. Honeymoons to Rome are paid for by the government. Persons of small means contemplating matrimony are offered "nuptial prizes" which range from $125 to $400. Birth prizes are given on a scale which increases with the number of children—from $30 for the first child to $250 for the sixth and each succeeding one. There are special prizes for twins and triplets. An Italian Papa Dionne would be as lucky as a winner of the Irish sweepstakes.

Married men, of course, always get the best government jobs first, and single men have little license to expect promotion.

The decline in the death rate, which might ordinarily have been expected to occur with the strides made in medical science during the last few years, has been expedited by government measures.

Much credit is due the National Institution for the Protection of Motherhood and Infanthood, which is endowed and operated by the government. Its recently - built maternity hospitals, expertly staffed and equipped with the most modern devices, are to be found throughout the nation. In them, expectant mothers receive the utmost in medical service. This organization has been responsible for a sharp drop in Italy's infant mortality rate in late years.

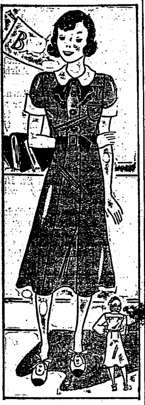
Different Forms of Lightning

The world has been slow in learning that lightning assumes a large number of different forms. As recently as the middle of the Nineteenth century the leading scientific authority on lightning—the French physicist Arago — recognized only three varieties of lightning, and his list found its way into textbooks in all countries. Strange to say, of the three kinds enumerated by this authority, one — zigzag lightning—certainly does not exist, and the existence of the other two—sheet lightning and ball lightning — is somewhat doubtful.

Shirtwaister for School Girl

Here is the frock for juniors to make for school days. A combination of rhythm in its hemline, rhyme in its color scheme and racy in its style. For late summer wear, try tub silk, linen, cotton or shantung with long or short sleeves. For autumn and winter—"tweedy" silk crepe or broadcloth.



1959-B.

The waist, gathered slightly to the shoulder yoke front and back, has a center pleat and pockets for trimming. Buttons—a matter of choice. A small collar, tie, and belt complete this most effective frock. By way of suggestion, make the collar and cuffs in contrast, and detachable to be readily removed for laundering.

Barbara Bell Pattern No. 1959-B is available for sizes 8, 10, 12, 14 and 16. Size 12 requires two and three-eighths yards of 35-inch material with one-third yard of 35-inch contrasting material and one yard of ribbon for bow. With long sleeves it requires two and five-eighths yards.

Send for the Barbara Bell Fall Pattern Book containing 100 well-planned, easy-to-make patterns. Exclusive fashions for children, young women, and matrons. Send 15 cents for your copy.

Send your order to The Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., 367 W. Adams St., Chicago, Ill.

The Famous Men Test

In the following test there are eight problems. In each one a man's name is given, followed by the names of four professions, vocations or avocations. Cross out the particular occupation or pursuit in which the man is or was most famous.

1. Cordell Hull—composer, inventor, statesman, golfer.
2. William Powell—lawyer, financier, composer, actor.
3. Robert E. Lee — football coach, inventor, dramatist, soldier.
4. John Masefield—lawyer, poet, pianist, actor.
5. John Marshall—jurist, inventor, soldier, physician.
6. Charles W. Eliot—lexicographer, actor, educator, pugilist.
7. Augustus St. Gaudens—inventor, composer, sculptor, actor.
8. John Hancock — statesman, physician, actor, pianist.

Answers

1.	Statesman.	5.	Jurist.
2.	Actor.	6.	Educator.
3.	Soldier.	7.	Sculptor.
4.	Poet.	8.	Statesman.

Supreme Court Justices

Congress may, by statute, change the number of Justices on the Supreme Court and if that number is enlarged the President could appoint new members, with the consent of the Senate. But without such authority the President has no power to appoint members unless there is a vacancy caused by death, resignation, or retirement of one of the present members of the Court.

FARM BUSINESS WILL BE STUDIED AT N. W. SCHOOL

The business side of farming and home making will be emphasized in courses to be offered at the Northwest school during the coming school year. One course in farm marketing will be presented throughout the year by Superintendent A. A. Dowell. This course will include a review of recent farm legislation together with analysis of problems confronting the farmer in the marketing of his products.

Work in farm management and comparative agriculture will be presented by Prof. R. S. Dunham, agronomist. Prof E. R. Clark will offer a course in farm accounts, which includes practical farm records for the farmers of this region. Rural economics and rural sociology will be offered by Prof. R. J. Christgau, while courses in typewriting, office training, and bookkeeping will be given under the direction of Miss Fae Hughbands.

In the home economics section, Miss Betta Bede will have charge of the work in house planning, household accounts, and home managements.

It is felt that the increasing complexity of social relationships has mutiplied problems relating to the business side of farming; consequently, courses dealing with these complex problems are of utmost importance.

MOUSE, CAT, OR CHICKEN? WHAT IS IT?

Montevideo. — Folks in town were rather astounded recently when a farmer north of Montevideo brought in a combination mouse, cat and chicken. Don't laugh, that's exactly what the strange animal looked like. At first glance it appeared to be just an ordinary baby chick covered with yellow down, but on closer inspection it was revealed to have long soft hair instead of down and the head and feet were those of a mouse. Everybody was satisfied with this explanation until the little fellow amazed them by washing himself with his tongue like a cat. Maybe all this sounds impossible, but seeing is believing; and after some of the freakish weather we've seen this year, we're ready to believe anything.

KNOCK, KNOCK, WHO'S THERE? RUMBLE SEAT TELLS

Red Wing.—A worker from the Red Wing dam chose the rumble seat of a car to take a snooze on the island road but when he awoke early in the morning he found the door of the seat had been closed and automatically locked itself. Late the previous night the worker jumped into the seat where he fell asleep. The owner of the car closed the door to the rumble, evidently unaware that there was anyone in the seat. About five o'clock in the morning the cries of the worker awoke the owner of the car who had parked it near his home. After quite a search the man was found pinned in the rumble seat.

RECORD HEAT WAVE HATCHES GOLF BALL

Hopkins. — Numerous things were hatched as Minnesota residents sweltered under 107.8 temperature recently. Eggs were hatched by the heat of the sun. Plots were hatched to kidnap the weather man and send him to south Africa. But Chester Nelson has a story that bids fair to be the pay-off: In his golf bag, standing in the rear of Nelson's Shoe Store, a golf-ball was hatched by the heat a few weeks back. Breaking through the ball's tough side as though it had exploded the inside spheroid of rubber jumped halfway out of its shell. The "hatched" ball is on display at Hopkins.

Animals Could Use Wings

There are animals which would be better with wings. The phalanger, a tiny dweller of the trees, has almost learned to fly. It spreads out its limbs and parachutes down from the trees, with the aid of loose skin which grows along its sides.

PROPERTY OWNERS IN OTHER STATES GET TAX RELIEF

While the state tax levy on homes, farms and other general property keeps going up in Minnesota, huge sums have been cut off of the property tax in other states, the Minnesota Federation for Tax Reform pointed out in a communication received here today urging local citizens to keep up their fight for relief from the property tax burden.

The state tax levy on general property being paid this year in Minnesota is 140 per cent more than the levy in 1930, Constant Larson of Alexandria, president of the federation, said, and another big increase is expected next year. The fight for relief for general property promises to be one of the big issues of the campaign and the coming session of the legislature. The last session of the legislature passed a bill which would have taken about $20,000,000 off of the general property tax in Minnesota, but it was vetoed by the Governor and did not go into effect.

A proposed amendment to the state constitution, designated as Amendment No. 2, will be voted on in November which would abolish the tax on property for state operating expenses. This would make a cut of about 10 mills on the basis of the current levy. It would effect a reduction of about 25 per cent in the taxes in the average township and make proportionate savings in the towns and cities.

ELMER BENSON TO GIVE KEYNOTE AT APPLETON MONDAY

A crowd of 15,000 people will gather at Appleton next Monday, Sept. 21 to hear the keynote address of Senator Elmer A. Benson in his campaign for the governorship, it was indicated early this week as the number of automobile caravans from all parts of the state were listed at Senator Benson's headquarters in St. Paul, and as reservations for rail transportation mounted. Milwaukee railroad officials announced the probability that the "Elect Benson" special train would run at least three sections with ticket sales and reservations for the train pointing toward the 1,500 mark.

The first section of the special train, carrying Senator Benson, Governor Petersen, all of the nominees on the Farmer-Labor state ticket and other men prominent in Minnesota public life, with 500 enthusiastic supporters will leave St. Paul at 10:45 a. m.

Those residents of the state who are unable to come to Appleton for the event will have an opportunity to hear the keynote address by Senator Benson over any one of eight radio stations that reach all portions of the state. In the radio hook-up are KSTP, St. Paul; WDGY and WTCN, Minneapolis; KROC, Rochester; WEBC, Duluth-Superior; WMFG, Hibbing; WDAY, Fargo and WNAX, Yankton. The broadcast will be on the air from 8 to 8:45 o'clock.

MIRACULOUS ESCAPE FOR TEN YEAR OLD BOY

Sleepy Eye.—Ten year old Dennis Reinharts, son of Mr. and Mrs. Edward A. Reinharts of Sigel township miraculously escaped a terrible death last week when his head became caught and crushed between the wall of a shed and a large truck, which was being backed into the shed by his father. The lad's skull was not fractured altho he sustained an ugly gash, some eight inches long, across the top of his head, over both ears. The wound required 30 stitches. Dennis was cleaning up in the shed when his father drove up, and without noticing his son backed the truck into the building. Reinharts says he heard a loud crack, as though a board had been broken. He was horrified to find the boy's head caught, between the truck and the shed wall. Altho seriously injured, Dennis, was unconscious only for a short time, having fainted from the terrible shock. He was hurried to the Lerette hospital where X-rays were taken that revealed no broken skull bones, and was able to leave the hospital in a few hours.

Liquor Tax Receipts in State Show Large Gain

A net increase of $61,683.81 in income from all sources in his department during August this year compared with August, 1935, was reported Saturday by David Arundel, liquor control commissioner. For the first eight months of this year, Arundel reported income was $494,518.92 greater than for the two-thirds of 1935. The comparative figures are: August, 1935 income, $330,659.07; August, 1936, $392,342.28; first eight months of 1935, $2,234,057.54; first eight months of 1936, $2,728,571.46.

DISTRICT PTA TO MEET TOMORROW

All is in readiness for the Sixteenth District conference of the Minnesota Congress of Parents and Teachers to be held here tomorrow. Mrs. B. G. Norby of Thief River Falls will preside over the morning session which will commence at 9:30 at the high school. A short but interesting program will be given in the forenoon, and at noon lunch will be served at the Norwegian Lutheran church parlors. During the afternoon school will be dismissed to permit use of the school assembly for the afternoon program which was outlined in the last issue of this paper. At four o'clock tea will be served at the school by members of the St. Hilaire P. T. A., followed by a banquet dinner at 6:30 in the Norwegian Lutheran church parlors. The evening program, starting at 7:30, will consist largely of musical numbers, and an address by Supt. Morris Bye of the Thief River schools. The program for the day is an excellent one, and good attendance is expected from all parts of the district.

RAISES HUGE BEET

Knute Kolstad brot in last week an excellent sample of mangel beet raised on his place across the river which is now on display in the Spectator office window. The beet when brot in, weighed eleven pounds, which is exceptionally good for this season.

Note:—Everyone is welcome to attend the P. T. A. district convention meetings at the school today whether they are registered or not. The same applies to the 25 cent luncheon at noon, and the 40 cent banquet dinner at 6:00 at the Norwegian Lutheran church. Everybody is welcome, and a good attendance is desired.

HERE FROM COLORADO

Mr. and Mrs. Albert Satterberg arrived here Sunday from Denver, Colo., to spend about ten days visiting at the homes of his brother and sisters, Adolph Satterberg, Mrs. Henry Burstad and Mrs. Herman Burstad, as well as with old friends. Mr. Satterberg left this section thirty-two years ago and has since been located at Denver.

PUBLIC INVITED TO DISTRICT SESSION

The Red River District of the Augustana Lutheran Church will conduct a series of meetings in the Augustana Churches Tuesday and Wednesday, September 29-30. Sessions at Black River and Clara Churches as follows: Tues. 10:30 A. M. Swedish Service, 2:00 P. M. Service, 8:00 P. M. Communion Service. Wednesday Services 10:30 A. M., 2:00 P. M. and 8:00 P. M. At St. Hilaire, Swedish Service Tuesday 10:30 P. M. and 8:00 P. M. Service. Wednesday 2:00 P. M. and 8:00 P. M. Service. Topics presented Man's Sin and God's Righteousness. Speakers, Dr. S. W. Swenson, Rev. Robert Erickson, Rev. Aner Bloom, Ev. John Erickson and Students P. Anderson and M. Swenson. The public is cordially invited to attend these meetings.

Mr. and Mrs. James Amble and Mrs. S. J. Amble of Grand Forks motored over Sunday and visited at the home of Mr. and Mrs. A. V. Jacobson. S. J. Amble, who has not been in the best of health lately, was unable to accompany them for this trip. His old friends in St. Hilaire community hope for betterment in his condition, and are looking forward to seeing him again.

Regular monthly meeting of the board of directors of the creamery was held Monday.

Tales About Town

Happenings of the Week, Told in Brief. News Concerning People You Know

A large crowd attended the dance given here at the Bilden & Olsen hall last Saturday evening.

Electric light and power bills may be paid up to and including Monday evening, Sept. 28 with discount.

Bob Collins and Leo Carpenter are finishing a contract for painting and repairing of the co-operative elevator at Strandquist.

A fair sized crowd attended the P. T. A. meeting held at the school last Friday night. A good program was given and lunch was served.

The barn on the Otto Johnson farm is another structure damaged in the wind storm last week. It being filled with hay saved it from collapse, but some work will be necessary to get it plumb again.

A new all-season highway is being constructed from T. H. No. 32 east to the buildings on the Norman Bros. farm south of town. The new road will be a fine improvement as it was almost impossible to keep the old one open during heavy snow winters.

Folden Bros., new proprietors of the Cities Service Station, are launching a little "get-acquainted" campaign. Some customer of their station will be awarded a free battery or a new tire at a later date at which time the station will have "open house" and will serve free lunch all day. Watch for later announcement.

Mr. and Mrs. Ira Carpenter motored up Tuesday from their home at Isle to spend a week at the home of their son, Leo, and to look after matters connected with their farm southeast of town. Altho Mr. Carpenter is well over eighty years of age, he drove up in his own car, making the distance of about 200 miles in about eight hours.

MENU FOR PTA LUNCHEON

Everybody will be welcome to partake of the 25 cent noon luncheon at the Norwegian Lutheran church basement on Friday, Oct. 25th. The following menu will be served: Chicken and noodles, rolls, jelly, pickles and peach shortcake.

Attorney Theo. Quale of Thief River Falls, was down Tuesday evening for a brief call on friends.

Fully two carloads of honey will be shipped from this point by local honey producers at the close of the present season.

Mr. and Mrs. Verner Nelson and daughter, of Warren, have gone south to spend the winter, and are now located at McAllen, Texas.

Creamery Patrons: — After October 1st, the creamery will receive cream on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays each week instead of every day.

Miss Alice Skottem, who teaches at Climax, and Miss Dorothy Gunstad who teaches at Middle River, spent last week-end at their respective homes here.

A number of neighbors and friends were entertained Tuesday evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Lars A. Loberg, the occasion being Mr. Loberg's eighty-third birthday anniversary.

Mrs. B. E. Burkee entertained a group of friends at her home Wednesday of last week, the occasion being her birthday anniversary. A very pleasant afternoon was spent by those present.

The River Falls unit of the Home Management project met Wednesday afternoon last week at the Jepson home for check up after the season's work. Lunch was served at conclusion of the meeting.

Rev. M. L. Dahle motored Monday to Fargo with his son, Manford, who joined two friends there on a trip to Chicago where all three will enroll at Rush Medical College for their advanced studies in preparation for the medical profession.

Sunday dinner guests last Sunday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Otto Johnson in River Falls were Mr. and Mrs. R. V. Barrington and son, Don, of Red Lake Falls, Mr. and Mrs. Emil Finstad and daughter, Edna; Mr. and Mrs. Holmes of Newfolden, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Johnson and daughters, Sandra and Marjorie.

WOMEN'S CLUB ELECTION

Good attendance marked the meeting of the Women's Club held last Thursday evening at the club rooms. Papers were read on "Citizenship" which was the topic for the month. Officers for the coming year were elected as follows: President, Mrs. Jennie Carter; Vice President, Mrs. V. G. Brink; Secretary, Mrs. L. F. Olson; Treasurer, Mrs. Chas. Huff. A daintily prepared lunch was served after the close of the business session.

UNUSUAL AUTUMN WEATHER PREVAILS

Without a killing frost up to this time, the present fall bids fair to compensate for the unusually hot and dry summer this year. In contrast with other years, trees are still retaining their foliage and the lawns look the best they have this year, thanks to recent rains.

While potatoes will be a short crop in this immediate vicinity, other garden truck is doing well. Late seeded carrots are coming along fine, and there is an abundance of tomatoes—more and better ones, in fact, than has been raised here in years. The dairymen are gainers too, by the mild weather as pastures have revived a lot since the heavy rain of a week ago.

AUCTION SALE, OCT. 2

Leonard Holmes has bills out advertising an auction sale of personal property which sale will be held at his farm 5 miles southwest of here on Friday, October 2nd. Mr. Holmes has a good line of machinery as well as some very good livestock to be sold. Following the sale, Mr. and Mrs. Holmes will move in to occupy their residence property in this village.

NEW SOUND SYSTEM

Manager Gannon of the Roxy Theatre at Red Lake Falls has recently installed at his popular playhouse, the newest improved sound system made by Western Electric which will add greatly to comfort and enjoyment of patrons of his shows. With popular prices as an added attraction, Mr. Gannon is enjoying a steadily increasing business. He recently finished and opened a new theatre at McIntosh, and another at Northome.

Postmaster Andy Anderson of Thief River Falls, and Postmaster H. L. Holmes of this village motored last week to St. Cloud to hear Fred A. Curtis, Democratic candidate for Governor, make his keynote speech. An old-fashioned political parade with torch lights, banners and bands was a feature of the gathering. Messrs Anderson and Holmes returned home Thursday forenoon.

MRS. AUG. SCHOLIN CALLED BY DEATH

Mrs. August Scholin, well known resident of Black River community, died Sunday at a Crookston hospital. She had undergone an operation a short time before, and was apparently convalescing when complications set in which caused her death.

Mrs. Scholin, nee Alvia Erickson, was born in Black River township, June 17, 1893 and was 43 years, 3 months and 3 days of age. She grew to womanhood in this community, and was united in marriage to August Scholin on January 8th, 1911. To this union was born four children, Leroy, Elna, Einar and Arlo, who together with their father, are left to mourn the loss of a kind and devoted wife and mother. Mrs. Scholin is also survived by two brothers, Emil and Melchior Erickson of Black River.

Mrs. Scholin took an active part in activities of the Black River Swedish Lutheran church as well as in community affairs, and was highly esteemed by everyone in Black River community.

Funeral services were conducted today by Rev. H. A. Larson, there being a brief service at the Scholin home at 1:00, and at the Black River church at 2:00. Hundreds of friends and neighbors gathered at the church to pay their last respects to the deceased, and the floral tributes were numerous and beautiful. Interment took place in the cemetery adjoining the church.

Sympathy of friends thruout the entire community is extended to Mr. Scholin and family and other relatives in their time of sorrow.

The Ladies' Aid of the M. E. Church will meet at the church Friday afternoon, Oct. 2nd. Everybody welcome.

YOUNGDAHL SPEAKS IN COUNTY SEPT. 29

Oscar F. Youngdahl, Republican candidate for Attorney General of Minnesota, who is considered one of the foremost public speakers in this state, will deliver an address at a Republican rally to be held at Thief River Falls, Sept. 29th.

The Young Republican Club of Thief River will be addressed Friday, Sept. 25 at 8:00 P. M., by Mr. Oscar Knutson of Warren. There will be an additional program of local speakers and music. The evening will be completed with a lunch.

Ardell Olson left last evening for Fertile where he will again be employed as linotype operator and compositor in the office of the Fertile Journal.

Moroccans Take Part in Spanish War

African Troops Are Resented by Loyal Spaniards

This picture of four Moroccan soldiers gives an idea of the type of fighting men imported to Spain by the rebel commander, Gen. Francisco Franco, to aid in the bloody war on the loyalist government of President Azana.

Many native Spaniards have resented the importation of foreign troops, and it is believed to have alienated the support of many rebel sympathizers. While no one can doubt the value of the Moroccans as fighting men, the invasion of the Moors centuries ago still lingers in the minds of the Spanish people.

British diplomats are making desperate efforts to prevent intervention in Spain. The failure of Portugal to join in a general pact has been a disturbing factor. Portugal has declared she must retain freedom to act should Communist propaganda menace internal security.

Japanese Priests Prepare for War

Drill Daily for Day When War Will Come

With bayonets belted to their priestly robes and rifles over their shoulders, the clean shaven young priests of the Sodo sect of the Buddists engage in military drill on the grounds of their temple in Japan. A military officer from the nearest garrison comes to drill them every morning.

Japan's successes in Manchukuo and the general belief that sooner or later war will come has aroused the people's military spirit, and the war party seems to be in full control.

The latest disturbing news from that quarter is that Japan is taking advantage of the escape clause of the London pact to increase her strength in submarines. This can be done only when one of the signatories of the pact considers its national defense in jeopardy. Secretary Swanson has declared Japan's action is a clear violation of the agreement. No official action has yet been taken by the State department.

Bob Davis Reveals

The Magic of Moonlight Shining on the Altar of Heaven.

THERE are people who will tell you that the most beautiful object in Peiping, a city so filled with beauty that it may well be classified as a serial dream, is the gem-studded Buddha to be seen in T'uan Ch'eng near the entrance of Pei Hai; others who declare that the Purple Forbidden Palace, occupying the center of the Imperial City, is the culminating triumph of earthly creations; that the marble pagoda at the Jade Fountain is the only monument in stone that exclaims its own magnificence.

You will be told that the tombs of the 13 Ming Emperors, reposing in a lonely valley out of town, are the most stately grouping in the known world; that the Nine Dragon screen in Pei Hai park is the most exquisite masterpiece left intact in Peiping. You will be escorted to the Temple of Heaven standing on a platform of white marble, its triple roofs supported by red columns and tiled in blue, the whole crowned with a golden ball.

Beyond this, southward, in the form of a circular construction, one comes upon the Altar of Heaven, by far the most beautiful memorial of its kind in the world, the final salutation to religion as expressed by the Chinese; and in the opinion of many authorities the most sublime architectural gesture ever conceived for the ceremonial recognition of invisible powers responsible for the earth's fecundity. It is at this spot that China's emperors for five hundred years have made annual sacrifices to the only superior they recognized—Heaven.

Every Detail Blends.

Memorable the night when Nelson Trusler Johnson, American ambassador to China, called me on the phone at 11 o'clock, little more than the shank of the evening, Peiping time, and asked what claims I had, if any, on "the so-called artistic temperament."

"All the traffic will stand," I responded.

"Well, in that case, jump into a ricksha about midnight and meet me at the Embassy, alone. Bring your camera."

"Can do," I replied in the Chinese vernacular, and did with all possible haste, arriving at the rendezvous to find the ambassador awaiting me in an automobile.

"But the camera?" I queried. To the chauffeur, the ambassador, who is a proficient Oriental scholar, gave a short command in Chinese, and we were off at 60 kilometers an hour under a full moon, riding in a starlit sky.

Shrine Set in Park.

Five miles to the north, arriving at a massive gate, that swung open at our approach, we entered a park containing long lines of ancient cedar trees set in formal array, through which, for a matter of two miles, we moved slowly, coming at last to an open space. A circular construction, composed of white marble sitting low upon the landscape, built in three terraces, and flat upon the crown, filled my eyes with its immaculate magic. Mute, I gazed at its pale splendor, which increased in richness as I became accustomed to its pearly silhouette against the trees breaking the horizon between this, the Altar of Heaven, and the luminous sky over Peiping under the north star.

Has 260 Balustrades.

Mounted on the rim of the furnace where the cow, the goat and the pig have been roasted for the annual ceremonials attended by the emperors during the last five centuries, we trained our lenses on the Altar of Heaven, built in three terraces of marble, the first 210 feet wide, the second 150, the third 80. The number of balustrades on the first is 180, the second 108, the third 72, totaling 260, the number of days in the Chinese lunar year. The upper terrace is reached by three flights of nine steps each. The Chinese divide the heavens into nine sections; there are nine points to the compass known as the Nine Mansions. There are nine divisions of mathematics, nine degrees of official rank and nine of family relationship. In the center of the topmost platform is a circular marble disk, surrounded by nine marble sections, and so on to the perimeter of eighty-one.

Whilst the light from Heaven was etching the Altar into our films, the ambassador and I sauntered leisurely among the carven white pillars, but never long enough in any one spot to leave our impress upon the sensitive celluloid, and gave ourselves up to the contemplation of its majesty. Higher and higher floated the summer moon, until the whole silvered landscape appeared as a setting for the trinity of marble circles like moonstones in rings of white jade, the mass becoming more luminous as the moon ascending to perpendicular brushed all aside save the ghostly Altar under the cold flood filtering steadily through space.

It Doesn't Pay—

Doing Favors for Others With Thought of Return Disappoints

"THE older I grow the more I am appalled by the ingratitude, the complete lack of a sense of obligation on the part of our fellow human beings.

"With me the people who come first are always those to whom I have any obligation whatsoever. Anything that is done for me is constantly on my mind and I am on the lookout to repay. But look about you and you will observe the most inconceivable indifference on the part of most otherwise decent people to what they owe to others. Indeed the code seems to be to cultivate those from whom some advantage may be forthcoming and neglect those to whom we are indebted. The answer to it all is to put yourself out for nobody; it doesn't pay."

The above lament was received by an international writer of note, who answers as follows:

It must have been an unusually unfortunate chain of experiences that gave this woman such an unhappy slant on human nature. But certain it is that favors done with thought of return are bound to bring disappointment. In this busy, hectic world, people are likely to be rather casual about give and take. That does not necessarily mean that they are unappreciative. They are just not punctilious. Frequently a kindness makes its mark but time passes before occasion presents itself to show appreciation, or to reciprocate. After all, if we think enough of people to put ourselves out for them, as our reader says, there must be a certain amount of faith.

If we do things for others only because we want to do them and find a certain satisfaction in it, we have nothing to lose. But the expected reward is something like the watched pot—very disappointing. In fact, it doesn't pay.

? That Third Party ? \??!! !??!

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

FOR the first time in more than a decade there's a third party in the field during a Presidential campaign and this year, as in the past, it has the two leaders guessing.

That worried look in the eye of the Democratic donkey and that furrowed brow of the Republican elephant are caused by the minds of both pondering over such unsolved questions as these:

How much strength will this new Union party develop between now and November 3? How many popular votes will their candidate, William Lemke, get and how many of them will he be taking away from my candidate?

Will he get enough electoral votes to affect the election and, if so, which way will they swing it — to me or to my opponent?

If history repeats itself this year, they have plenty of cause for worry, because third party movements in American political history have always been a headache for the two major parties. Of course, none of them has ever succeeded in electing a President and in only seven campaigns has one of them showed enough strength to be represented in the electoral college vote. But at least twice their entrance into the campaign has meant the difference between victory and defeat for one of the major parties.

How They're Born

Third parties, in the usually accepted sense of the term, are brought into being when insurgents within an old party rebel against its policies or its candidate, walk out on the parent organization, organize a new one and nominate a candidate of their own. The first of these "insurgents" was the Peace party of 1812-15, composed of Republicans (forerunners of the present Democrats) and Federalists, mostly in New England, who were opposed to the second war with England. However, this group didn't play any important part in political history any more than did the so - called Peoples party of 1824, composed of Republicans who favored having Presidential electors chosen by the people instead of having the state legislatures do it for them. The next year a Coalition party, thus designated because of the union of the supporters of Henry Clay with those of John Quincy Adams, helped defeat Andrew Jackson and elect Adams.

MARTIN VAN BUREN

But an authentic third party did not appear on the scene until the election of 1832. Six years earlier a certain William Morgan of Batavia, N. Y., who had published a book purporting to reveal the secrets of Masonry, disappeared and the members of that fraternity were accused of having kidnaped him and drowned him in the Niagara river. They were also accused of blocking the investigation of Morgan's disappearance and from western New York opposition to the Masons spread to other Eastern states.

Several young politicians, among them Thurlow Weed of New York and Thaddeus Stevens of Pennsylvania, seized upon this prejudice to further their ambitions and the result was the organization of an Anti-Masonic political party.

In September, 1830, this party held a national convention in Philadelphia, the first of its kind in this country. It was attended by 96 delegates from 10 states and out of it grew another convention in Baltimore the next year to be attended by as many delegates from each state as there were representatives in both houses of congress (the forerunner of our present convention system).

The Baltimore convention nominated for President, William Wirt of Maryland, who had been attorney-general in Monroe's cabinet, and for vice-president it named Amos Ellmaker of New York. In the election of 1832 these candidates won only the electoral vote of Vermont. Later this party was absorbed by the Whigs and lost its identity.

First Liberty Party

Attempts to organize the anti-slavery vote in the late thirties resulted in the formation of the Liberty party. It nominated for the Presidency James G. Birney, a former Kentucky Democrat and slave-owner, who sold his slaves, moved North and became an Abolitionist. However, the Liberty party didn't figure very prominently in the roaring "Log Cabin-Hard Cider" campaign of 1840 between Harrison, the Whig, and Van Buren, the Democrat, and it could muster only 7,369 votes for its candidate. Birney was nominated again in 1844 and this time he polled 62,263 votes but in neither campaign did he get a single electoral vote.

MILLARD FILLMORE

Four years later another abolitionist party was in the field. It resulted directly from a split in the Democratic party over the slavery issue. When Gen. Lewis Cass of Michigan was nominated at the Baltimore convention of that party, the "Barnburner" faction (so-called because, they were "willing to burn the political barn to get rid of the rats in it") bolted the convention and made plans to hold one of their own.

This meeting was held in Utica, N. Y., and it nominated Ex-President Martin Van Buren, who had been denied renomination by the Democrats in 1844 when they turned to the first "dark horse" in our political history—James K. Polk of Tennessee.

Later in the year a group of dissatisfied Whigs withdrew from that party and joined forces with bolting Democrats to hold a convention in Buffalo, N. Y. It also nominated Van Buren for President.

As the Free Soil party it was able to poll only 291,000 votes, but it caused the Democrats to lose New York's 36 electoral votes, which was just enough to give Gen. Zachary Taylor, the Whig candidate, the 36 votes he needed to defeat Cass.

In 1852 the Free Soilers nominated Senator John P. Hale of New Hampshire, who had been a Jacksonian Democrat and had quit the party over the slavery issue. By this time the Free Soil vote had dropped to 157,000 and had no effect on the contest between Gen. Winfield Scott, the Whig candidate, and Franklin Pierce, the Democrat, who was elected.

The Know Nothings

In the meantime, however, another third party had come into existence which, during its brief existence, figured in the electoral college returns. That was the political group known as the Native American party or Know-Nothings. It originated in New York City in the forties as a result of the large emigration from Ireland during the famine years when the potato crop failed. Out of the resentment against these "foreigners" grew a secret society, the "Supreme Order of the Star Spangled Banner" and a political party, the Native Americans, with a platform of opposition to aliens, the papacy, infidelity and socialism.

The popular name of Know-Nothings was attached to the party because when its members were questioned about it they invariably replied "I don't know." In 1847 they held a national convention in Philadelphia where they nominated Gen. Henry Dearborn for vice-president and recommended, but did not formally nominate, Gen. Zachary Taylor for President.

The Know - Nothings do not seem to have played much part in the election of 1852 but they figured strongly in the campaign of 1856. By this time they had thrown off the secret character of their organization and revealed the fact that most of their members were Whigs.

The remainder of the Whigs, along with the Free Soilers, and many Northern Democrats, had gone over into the new Republican party which nominated Gen. John C. Fremont and adopted the revised slogan of "Free Soil, Free Speech and Fremont." In February the Know-Nothings held a convention in Philadelphia where they formally renamed their party the American Party. For President they nominated Millard Fillmore, the Whig vice-president who became President when Zachary Taylor died in office, and for vice-president A. J. Donelson of Tennessee.

The Republicans polled more than 1,000,000 votes and the Native Americans nearly 900,000. But James Buchanan, the Democratic candidate, got 174 votes in the electoral college as against Fremont's 114 and Fillmore's eight—those of Maryland. By the time the next Presidential campaign came around the Know-Nothing party had been merged with the Republican.

The campaign of 1860 was marked by the paradox of two "third parties" both of which developed enough strength to break into the electoral college vote. One of them represented a split in a regular party and the other a coalition of odds and ends from various parties.

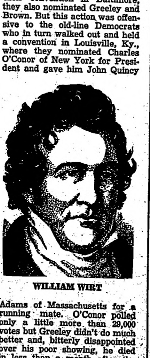
The Democratic party, divided by the slavery question in previous campaigns, was split wide open in this crucial year of 1860. The Northern wing of the party nominated Stephen A. Douglas of Illinois and the Southern, or pro - slavery wing, nominated John C. Breckenridge of Kentucky, who had been Buchanan's vice-president. Breckenridge got 72 electoral votes as compared to Douglas' 12.

The other "third party," which represented a coalition, was the Constitutional Union party, made up of old-time Whigs and Know-Nothings, who would avoid the issue of slavery and achieve the impossible goal of harmony throughout the country. Their nominee was John C. Bell of Tennessee who polled 39 electoral votes. The three candidates received a total of 123 votes and Lincoln 180.

Bolters Galore

The campaign of 1872 was a mixed - up affair with crossing over of party lines and bolters galore. A faction of the Republican party, dissatisfied with the certainty of Grant's renomination, walked out, held another convention in Cincinnati and chose Horace Greeley for President and B. Gratz Brown of Missouri for vice-president. The Democrats decided that a fusion ticket was their only hope.

Therefore, when they held their convention in Baltimore, they also nominated Greeley and Brown. But this action was offensive to the old-line Democrats who in turn walked out and held a convention in Louisville, Ky., where they nominated Charles O'Conor of New York for President and gave him John Quincy Adams of Massachusetts for a running mate. O'Conor polled only a little more than 29,000 votes but Greeley didn't do much better and, bitterly disappointed over his poor showing, he died in less than a month after the election. As a result the Democratic electors scattered their vote, giving 42 to Thomas A. Hendricks of Indiana, 18 to B. Gratz Brown and two to Charles J. Jenkins of Georgia. Grant won overwhelmingly with a total electoral vote of 286.



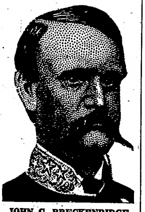
WILLIAM WIRT

To Gen. James B. Weaver of Iowa goes the distinction of being the only man who was ever the leader of two different third party movements and as the head of one of them he succeeded in breaking into the electoral college vote. Dissatisfaction of the farmers with the financial policies of President Grant resulted in the formation of the Greenback party by inflationists who wanted to issue a large amount of paper money without regard to specie payment. In the campaign of 1876 they nominated Peter Cooper of New York but he polled only 80,000 popular votes and failed to receive a single electoral vote.

In the congressional elections of 1878 the Greenbackers cast more than a million votes and when they nominated Weaver, a man from the agricultural west, for President in 1880 the Republicans were deeply concerned. But their fears proved groundless for the Greenbackers were able to muster only about 300,000 popular votes and not a single one in the electoral college.

The Populist Era

But a decade later the G. O. P. had real cause for worry. Populism, which championed the cause of the farmer and the working man, was running through the West like a prairie fire. In the state and congressional elections of 1890 the Populist or People's party carried the legislatures of Kansas and Nebraska, elected nine members of congress and forced 34 others, Republicans and Democrats, to pledge themselves to carry out Populist ideas about free silver, public ownership of monopolies, postal savings banks and an income tax.



JOHN C. BRECKENRIDGE

Then Weaver, the former Greenback, bobbed up as a Populist leader and in 1892 won their nomination for the Presidency. In the election he polled more than 1,000,000 votes in the West and got 22 electoral votes. By 1896 the Democratic party had adopted so many of the Populist principles that William Jennings Bryan received their indorsement for President although they nominated their own candidate for President, Thomas E. Watson. Eventually they were gradually absorbed by the two major parties.

After the Populist movement two decades were to elapse before there was another third party movement but when it came it unseated a party which had long been in power. The story of that third party is too familiar to need more than the barest mention here. In 1912 Ex-President Theodore Roosevelt led a revolt against the renomination of William Howard Taft, formed the Progressive or "Bull Moose" party, corralled 88 electoral votes and brought about the victory of Woodrow Wilson over Taft, 435 to 8.

Twelve years later the Progressive party, this time under the leadership of Senator Robert M. LaFollette of Wisconsin, again played a part in a Presidential campaign although it was not a decisive one. For Calvin Coolidge could have given John W. Davis LaFollette's 13 electoral college votes and he would still have won the election.

As for 1936—will it be a repetition of 1912 with this year's third party playing a part in defeating an occupant of the White House who is seeking re-election? Will it be a repetition of 1848 and aid in defeating one of the two major party leaders even though it doesn't register a single vote in the electoral college balloting? Or will it be a repetition of those other years in which there were third parties in the field and they didn't affect the result either way, even though they were represented in the electoral vote?

Hello Everybody!

"No Dice"

By FLOYD GIBBONS,

Famous Headline Hunter

NOW the moral of this story, boys and girls, is that gambling doesn't pay. Not that I need any story to convince me of it. I once bet two bucks on a horse I thought would come in first at Saratoga, and the next time I saw him was two years later, pulling the steam calliope in a circus parade in Denver.

Yep, it's risky business letting a horse invest your money for you, but not half as risky as the chances Lieutenant Tommy Griffin, of the Eighteenth infantry, Fort Wadsworth, N. Y., took when he started wooing Lady Luck that fateful July night back in 1922.

Lieutenant Tommy has gone a long way in the army since 1922. Then he was just plain Private Tommy, of the One-Hundred and Seventeenth field artillery, a national guard outfit of Goldsboro, N. C. The One-Hundred and Seventeenth was doing its regular two weeks' field work at Fort Bragg.

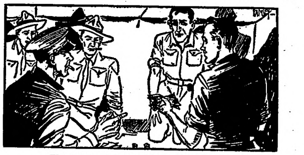
It was a hot night, and some of the boys were holding cavalry maneuvers on a blanket in one of the tents. For horses they were using little white, spotted cubes, and those "horses" were galloping back and forth across the blanket in a way that would have scared an enemy army out of at least six weeks' pay.

Tommy and Pal Are Attracted by Galloping Ivories.

Of course, an unsympathetic officer of the day might have suspected that those fellows were shooting craps, but I'm going to take Tommy's word for it that those shouts of "Come on, seven!" that came from the tent, were just the cries of excited rooters who wanted to see the Seventh regiment win.

Tommy and a friend were coming back from an evening in a nearby town when they heard the boys cheering the Seventh regiment on. There was also a lot of encouragement being given to Big Dick, who, I presume, was the captain of the Seventh regiment, and Little Joe, who must have been the first lieutenant. The rooting attracted Tommy and his pal, and they dropped into the tent to see what was going on.

There were three men in the tent—a sergeant named Joe and two privates, Bill and John. The sergeant had been drinking, and he rolled out the ivories with a sort of grim determination. He had lost several dollars, and Tommy could see that he wasn't taking it any too well.



The Argument Got Pretty Hot for a Minute.

Losing Sergeant Returns to Make Trouble.

The other two lads were in a jovial mood, though neither one of them had imbibed any alcohol. John had the dice and Tommy watched him while he set a point, made it, and picked up his winnings. And it was right there that the friendly game began to take on a serious aspect.

Joe, the sergeant, claimed that John hadn't won the money and told him to put it down. There was an argument that got pretty hot for a minute, but in the end John put the dough back just to humor him, and the play was resumed. A couple more throws and Joe left, weaving his way unsteadily out of the door. But a few minutes later he was back again, a .45 revolver in his hand and an ugly scowl on his face.

Joe was looking for trouble. That much was plain to everybody. He began to accuse John of talking about him behind his back. His finger was tight against the trigger, and looking over, Tommy could see the yellow of cartridge rims in the chamber of the gun. There was no joke about it. That gat was loaded.

Drunken Maniac's Bullet Wakes John Up.

Tommy didn't wait for any more. He made a leap for Joe and grabbed the gun. But Joe kept his grip on the revolver, too, and the pair of them rolled over on the tent floor, fighting desperately for possession of the weapon.

Says Tommy: "I wasn't sure I could hold him long, and I yelled to John to go away. He just sat there looking at me. Then suddenly Joe pulled the trigger. There was a sharp crack that deafened me for a minute, and a bullet whizzed by my head and ripped on out through the top of the tent. I should have been scared then, but I wasn't. At that moment I was too excited to feel the effects of fear."

And still John sat calmly on his cot, watching Tommy wrestle with the drunken maniac. Whether he was dazed or scared stiff or just thought it was all a joke, Tommy never learned. But he sat there until another shot rang out, and this time the Bullet hit John in the hip. That broke the spell. John leaped to his feet and streaked out of the tent. Tommy says he's never seen a man run so fast in his life.

Tommy Stares Into the Muzzle of a .45.

Tommy was tired by that time—dead tired. Joe was strong as a bull, and he knew he'd never be able to get that gun away from him. "John was gone," he says, "and I didn't think Joe would shoot me. I took a chance and let him go. He got up, drunk and furious, and for a full minute I lay on the ground staring into the muzzle of the .45. That's when I did get scared. I have never seen a gun muzzle grow to look so large. I expected every second to be my last, and I began wishing he would shoot and get it over with. But no! He just stood there, fingers convulsing on the trigger, face purple with rage. Then all of a sudden he seemed to realize that John had gone, and he ran out of the tent after him."

That was the beginning of the end. In another ten seconds the whole camp was in an uproar. They caught Joe and took him to the guardhouse, and later they found Johnny and sent him to a hospital, where he spent several weeks getting over that wound in the hip.

And Tommy says that just about the time John got out of the hospital was when his nerves quieted down and his hair stopped standing on end.

Pygmy Hippopotamus

The pygmy hippopotamus is found only in a few lakes and rivers of Liberia, the Negro republic of Western Africa, although his ancestors in prehistoric times inhabited southern Europe, northern Africa, and the islands of the Mediterranean. The pygmy is not so well equipped for swimming as the giant hippo'. His eyes are set in the side of his head, instead of on top, and his legs and tail are longer. He has a larger brain and spends more of his time on shore in dense jungle than in the water.

Colonial Dutch Ovens

The early Colonial American Dutch ovens were round, square, or oblong, with an open front. The round variety was often fitted with a spit turned by a handle on the outside, to roast meat. Otherwise the ovens were used for baking. The open side was set close to the fire, to receive the full heat. Usually they were constructed of tin which gave them the name of "tin kitchen" or "Dutch kitchen." The bake kettle, a covered receptacle on high legs to set over the fire, was sometimes called a Dutch oven.

Officers of Screen Boys' Club

Limited to youngsters under eighteen years of age who have at least three feature motion picture roles to their credit, the Screen Boys' club was organized at the home of Director W. S. Van Dyke with a nucleus of 15 charter members. It was a hilarious session—as witness this meeting of the officers. Left to right, they are: Freddie Bartholomew, president; Mickey Rooney, first vice-president, and Jackie Cooper, treasurer.

Helgoland Said to Be Slowly Melting Into the North Sea

Germany's "Gibraltar" Literally Crumbling Away.

Washington, D. C. — Germany's alleged refortification of Helgoland has attracted international attention. Again the island is accused of having as much strategic importance per cubic foot as any other comparable chunk of Europe.

"From a passing steamer, Helgoland appears as a single triangular block of red sandstone," says the National Geographic society. "Now only a fraction of a mile square, the island is literally crumbling away beneath its 2,500 inhabitants.

"This sea-bitten morsel is the remotest of the Frisian islands, which the North sea has gouged out of the northern coastline of Europe. A broad submerged rocky ledge in the shoal area around Helgoland is a clue to the island's former extent, estimated to have been five times its present size. The wave-worn western side was ringed around with a girdle of granite brought from the Danish island of Bornholm. But even thus protected Helgoland is doomed to melt slowly into the North sea.

DECATHLON WINNER

Glenn Morris, Denver clerk, who won the Olympic decathlon at the games in Berlin.

"Eye of the Empire."

"Because of its position in the North sea, the island bears the reputation of a Gibraltar. As Germany's 'Eye of the Empire,' it commands the mouths of the Weser, Jade, Elbe, and Eider Rivers, and the harbors of Hamburg, Bremen and Cuxhaven from a vantage point 28 miles from the nearest mainland.

"Shaped somewhat like a lean pork chop, it has dimensions notable for their smallness, except the height; its sides rise sheer and dripping from the North sea to a flat top 200 feet above sea level. Its three tips can be visited in an hour's stroll. Upon the triangular rock would fit the Federal Triangle buildings along Pennsylvania avenue in Washington with a little margin.

"Within its diminishing boundaries, the island has three parts: the rock table of Oberland with i's tuft of town, the shoreline shelf projecting like a cap's visor below with a second edition of town called Unterland, and the wisp of sandy Dune in tow a mile to the east. A thin green felt of pasturage across the island's top completes the color triad which inspired the flag:

'Green the land, red the rock, white the sand:
'These colors make the flag of Helgoland.'

"The money crop of Helgoland is sun tan. This is raised chiefly at the expense of visitors basking on the frail half-moon of barren beach of the Dune, or Sand island. Among the thousands of summer resorters who steam out from Hamburg was once the American actor, Richard Mansfield, then an infant comfortable in an improvised cradle of a dresser drawer. His mother, excited at leaving the island in a terrific storm, embarked without him, so that the forgotten baby was delivered to her on the high seas wrapped in an oilskin coat.

Pilots and Fisherfolk.

"Helgolanders are mainly pilots, fisherfolk, or boarding-house keepers. A rugged race of Frisians, they acquired the habit of considering themselves fishermen at the beginning of the fifteenth century, when a strange migration of herring brought them great harvests of fish for 200 years. An equally strange emigration of their source of income left them catching only a few lobsters.

"Helgoland was traded by England in 1890 to Germany for Zanzibar, 3,000 times as large. The exchange was ridiculed as an entire suit of clothes swapped for a trouser button. But the trouser button demonstrated that it could serve a purpose of vital importance when it became one of the world's strongest fortresses during the World war. Not far away, on a misty morning in August, 1914, occurred the first serious naval clash of the war, when British victory littered the North sea with wreckage."

Popcorn Orchard Foils Field Mice in Michigan

Sparta, Mich.—When Walter Umlor, peach grower near here, planted 25 acres to popcorn last spring, 15 acres of it between rows of his young fruit trees, his neighbors thought he was crazy. But when he sold his crop last fall for $1,988 they began to change their mind.

Whole-hearted endorsement of Umlor's sanity was given this spring, when it was found that while hundreds of fruit trees on other farms had been girdled by field mice, Umlor's were untouched.

After his corn was harvested last fall, Umlor left the stalks on the ground, every pile containing several ears of corn. The mice built their nests in the stalks and wintered on the corn, so felt no need of bark to dine upon.

Thought Is Urged Upon Those Who Want Strength

Boston.—Think and grow stronger, advises Dr. Frederick Rand Rogers, physical education director at Boston university.

To quote Doctor Rogers:

"The ordinary business executive is stronger than the average day laborer, just as the professors at the School of Education show a greater physical fitness index than their students."

The reason? Because thinking "puts into action that fundamental function of the brain, the co-ordinating of muscle cells of the body."

Doctor Rogers bases his assertion on results of a series of tests with a manuometer or hand dynanometer, which when squeezed in the hand registers the number of pounds pressure.

Blazing Ice Box Is Task for Firemen

San Antonio, Tex., — "Send some fireman over here—my ice box is on fire," cried an excited voice over the fire department telephone here.

The firemen, accustomed to rescuing cats from trees, and all sorts of other odd tricks were a bit dubious but made the call anyway.

They arrived at the home of Louis Martin—and sure enough found his ice box on fire.

Old Auto His Weapon in Fight on Drouth

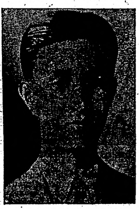
Learning his lesson from the 1934 drouth, Risinger decided to irrigate. He bought a 1928 model car, drove it to a creek on the edge of his 37-acre farm near here, and used its motor to power a water pump.

The water was pumped directly from the creek bed to feeder canals which conveyed it to smaller canals between the rows of plants. Now Risinger has four men working for him and is pumping water 10 hours a day.

Sturdy, fast-growing corn stalks sway in the hot dry wind on the 15 acres of his farm which slope suitable for irrigation. Cucumbers, squashes, peppers and tomatoes also flourish, while only a few feet away unirrigated patches of the same vegetables are parched and stunted.

"Pumping water produces a crop far above normal during a drouth," said Risinger, "but it isn't really a question of how much it increases production. Without irrigation there would have been no crop."

RICHEST IN JAPAN



Japan's richest man, Baron Kichizaemon Sumitomo, who paid an assessment of 800,000 yen on an income of 3,000,000 yen, the highest made in Japan in 1936. He is 25 years old and has been head of the house of Sumitomo since 1926. He was graduated from Kyoto Imperial university in 1933, and a year later married his cousin, the granddaughter of Prince Saionji, the last of the elder statesmen. Baron Sumitomo is president of the Sumitomo Limited Partnership; director of the Sumitomo bank and the Sumitomo trust, mine, warehouse and life insurance companies.

Felons Give Up Bonus

Joliet, Ill.—Four hundred inmates of the Illinois State and Stateville prisons received bonus checks but were forced to turn them over to prison officials immediately. Convicts who keep their money on deposit rather than turn it over to their families are permitted to spend $3 a week in the commissary.

Mill Hitched to the Moon

Caleb Hodgdon did better than that. He hitched his mill to the moon and for 111 years the moon has been running the mill for him and his descendants.

It was back in 1825 that Caleb, sailing down the coast of Maine, reached the mouth of the Damariscotta river and saw a 40-acre natural pond which opened into the river through a very narrow outlet. This perfect tidal basin was filled and emptied twice a day by the sea, and since the moon controls the tide, it is literally true that Caleb Hodgdon hitched his mill to the moon.

Caleb built a dam and a bridge which are still in use today. He installed the old type undershot waterwheel to run his mill and used it as power for grinding grain as well as sawing lumber. He bought acres of timberland, sent crews into the woods to fell the trees, snake them down to the river with oxen, then at high tide float them into his mill pond. Next he added a shipyard and built ships from the lumber which he had sawed.

Later generations of Hodgdons continued to operate the mill and shipyard, and one of the products of the latter was the schooner, Bowdoin, which Commander Donald B. MacMillan used in his Arctic explorations. Later Hodgdons also replaced the undershot waterwheel with a turbine but the principle of operation of the mill is the same with it as with the waterwheel. When the tide rises, it forces open the gates in the dam which Caleb built and fills the pond. When the tide is on the ebb the doors automatically close and the water is prevented from flowing out of the pond except through the turbines of the mill.

Go to East Boothbay, Maine, today and you can see the mill which Caleb Hodgdon built and hitched to the moon.

Double Meaning

IT FIRST appeared in a Philadelphia newspaper in 1776 thus:

Hark! hark! the trumpet sounds, the din of war's alarms,
O'er seas and solid grounds, doth call us all to arms;
Who for King George doth stand, their honors soon shall shine;
Their ruin is at hand, who with the Congress join.
The acts of Parliament, in them I much delight,
I hate their cursed intent, who for the Congress fight,
The Tories of the day, they are my daily toast,
They soon will sneak away, who Independence boast;
Who non-resistance hold, they have my hand and heart.
May they for slaves be sold, who act a
Whiggish part;
On Mansfield, North, and Bute, may daily blessings pour,
Confusion and dispute, on Congress
evermore;
To North and British lord, may honors
still be done,
I wish a block or cord, to General
Washington.

It was reprinted in many other Colonial newspapers. "That's fine!" said British army officers and Tory officials. "The man who wrote that is certainly loyal to His Majesty and he has very wisely condemned this foolish Revolution."

If any Patriot heard one of them say that, he must have smiled to himself. For if he was "in on the know," he didn't read the poem as it is printed above. He read each line as far as the comma in the middle, then he read the next line the same way and so on. Or he began reading at the comma in the first line, then dropped down to the comma in the next and so on.

That gave the poem a very different meaning indeed. Try it and see for yourself why the Patriots read it that way!

Mad Poet

ONE of the most beautifully descriptive passages in all American literature is these often-quoted lines:

Now twilight lets her curtain down,
And pins it with a star.

They were written by McDonald Clarke, the "Mad-Poet" who died in the "lunatic asylum" on Blackwell's Island, New York city.

Characteristic of his gift for combining the ridiculous with the sublime was this poem which he wrote about George Washington:

Eternity—give him elbow room;
A spirit like his is large;
Earth, fence with artillery his tomb,
And fire a double charge.
To the memory of America's greatest man;
Match him, posterity, if you can.

LETTER "C" IN HISTORY

Have we ever realized what a big part the letter "C" has played in history? Empire builders, conquerors, discoverers of great continents, history's foremost figures—most bore names beginning with "C," says Pearson's Weekly. Clive won India. Columbus discovered America. Charlemagne founded the Roman empire. Cook discovered Australia—Cabot Labrador. Cortes conquered Mexico. All-conquering Caesar set up a new order of things half across Europe, and he was "broken" by Cleopatra, most famous queen. The world's richest man—perpetuated in proverb—was Croesus. The most famous singer was Caruso, succeeded by Chaliapin.

RANKS OF AGING IN NATION IS GROWING

Trend Means More Older Workers in Industry.

New York.—Changes in the "age distribution" of the population that are occurring as the immigrant portion ages soon will present a "new challenge" to American business management, Dr. Robert E. Chaddock, professor of statistics in Columbia university, asserted.

Declaring that older persons are increasing numerically in proportion to the rest of the population Dr. Chaddock estimated that the number of those over sixty-five years old, now about 6,500,000, will be trebled in fifty years. With the population approaching a stationary level, he asserted, the general death rate soon will begin to rise.

Burden of Aged Grows

"The period of youth in our industrial organization is passing and our economic structure must be adapted to age changes," he wrote. "Institutions and agencies for the care of the aged, the burden of old-age pensions and the costs of dependency will increase rapidly.

"The increasing burden of the aged upon the productive workers need not affect adversely the standard of living, because the proportion of persons in the productive ages, twenty to sixty-four, is not decreasing and the burden of support for the young dependent group is declining."

Adaptation of the industrial structure to employ the ever increasing number of older workers, forty-five to sixty-four, will be necessary if the high American standard of living is to be maintained, Dr. Chaddock declared. Otherwise, an increasing number may become semi-dependent, he warned, thus increasing the total burden of support resting upon the productive workers.

Aged in Industry

Due to the restriction of immigration and to the aging of the foreign-born here, the percentage of those who immigrated to this country and are now over sixty-five is twice as great as that of the native Americans over sixty-five, Dr. Chaddock observed.

The net result of all population changes, he wrote, is a steadily declining proportion of persons under twenty and a corresponding increase of those over forty-five. There is little change in the proportion of the productive group, twenty to forty-four, the survey noted.

Discussing the sex composition of the population, Dr. Chaddock said that the trend is toward numerical equality of the sexes among whites.

He noted that the proportion of people twenty to sixty-four years old is much greater in the cities than in the country. In the rural districts the number of children in proportion to the entire population was found greater than in the urban areas.

Man, 60, Weds Girl, 22, Son Weds Her Sister

Helmetta, N. J.—William B. Tilton, sixty-year-old Gravel Hill farmer, married Julia Scott, twenty-two, his housekeeper, as his son Ernest, twenty-four, married her sister, Celia, eighteen.

The ceremony was performed at the Holy Trinity Catholic church by the Rev. John Budziak.

The two sisters wore white satin veils, as Tilton said they would, and the grooms were slicked up in their Sunday clothes just to please them.

Tilton, who wanted a "quiet little wedding," one that wouldn't interfere with his "business routine," found traffic blocked by a crowd gathered in front of the church when the party arrived.

Following the ceremony, the two couples left for Freehold, where they planned a wedding dinner in a hotel before returning to Tilton's ninety-nine-acre farm, where all four will live together.

The farmer saw no reason why his age and that of his bride should interfere with their happiness. He said:

"Happiness in married life depends on how much love one has for the other. Marriage is like business. You have to take a chance."

Uses First Pay Check to Repay Relief Fund

Paterson, N. J.—Amir Hassman, a forty-seven-year-old Arabian who believes, he said, that "a man who breaks promises soon breaks friendships," has started to make good a debt of $29.10 to Paterson.

Several months ago Hassman, who has been in this country sixteen years, lost his job. At first he refused to take relief because, he said, it was against his "principles."

Finally, however, Hassman was convinced that at least he should get enough so that he might buy food. So he reluctantly applied to Poormaster James O'Gorman. Insisting he needed little on which to live, he accepted a $1.80 a week food allowance. He lived on that until two weeks ago when he obtained a job at 66 cents an hour. Today he received his first pay check and went immediately to O'Gorman. He turned over $10 of his salary and promised that the other $19.10 would be forthcoming within a few weeks.

Lights of New York

by L. L. STEVENSON

If I had to draw a picture of a woman who makes her living guiding explorers and others in the jungles of British Guiana, I wouldn't choose Mrs. Violet McTurk as my model—I've been to British Guiana and looked at that sullen, brooding jungle. Mrs. McTurk is young, soft-spoken and blonde. Her attractive appearance suggests the beach and sun umbrella of some swanky club rather than the "green hell," as it has been aptly termed. Nevertheless, difficult as it may be to think of a jungle guide as young, soft-voiced and blonde, and especially one with the name Violet, Mrs. McTurk makes her living that way. From November until May she guides explorers, movie expeditions and just plain tourists from Georgetown, the capital of Demerara, to Kaietur Fall, a three-day journey up the Potaro river — and the jungle begins at Georgetown.

• • •

Born in Barbadoes, Mrs. McTurk after her marriage seven years ago, went to British Guiana with her husband, who ran freight and dug gold. Their home was on an island in the Potaro, which is a branch of the Essequibo. The island was a sort of kingdom, with friendly dians as subjects. Word passed through the bush that McTurk had married and Indians came from as far away as a hundred miles — in the jungle, a hundred miles is more than a mere bit of pleasant motoring — to look at her and touch her blonde hair and white skin. Four years ago, McTurk died. It was then that Mrs. McTurk became a guide. She averages one trip a month and when not guiding, runs a store at Kangaruma, 168 miles from Georgetown, where miners buy their supplies, the island home having become too lonely after McTurk died. She also supervises Indians who dig gold for her.

• • •

Mrs. McTurk is here on a two-months vacation. It is her first visit to New York and she is duly impressed. As a matter of fact, she finds New York far more thrilling than the jungle. Of all the excitement, riding in the subway has supplied her with the most, she said. Then she added that New York is far more lonely than British Guiana—and there is something to that.

• • •

Some way or other, I can't take down my hair and have a good cry over these wise guys down in Wall street. When repeal came along, they continued to buy their liquor from the bootleggers who had served them in the more or less dry spell. The reason was that the bootleggers sold various well-known brands at much less than was charged by stores licensed by the state. The bootleggers explained that theirs was smuggled goods and thus they escaped payment of customs and import duties, as well as taxes, and they were willing, for old time's sake to pass along the savings to their customers.

• • •

Well, everything went along all right until, as you may have seen, the government took charge of a bunch of gentlemen who had been supplying bootleggers with essential supplies, such as empty bottles with brand names, and revenue and tax stamps. Along with that came the announcement that the Wall street wise guys had been the biggest patrons of the dispensers of fake liquors. And instead of tears, there were snickers.

• • •

That reminds me of a well-known writer who took prohibition so seriously that when it went into effect, he buried a supply which he thought, at the rate of one drink a day, would last him the rest of his life. When the bootleg industry began to flourish he took to hooch, laying by what he could, figuring that in time the stream would run dry. Then came repeal and it will still be a couple of months before he gets around to digging up any of his buried treasure. His fear is that he will have completely lost his taste for the McCoy.

Cards Tumble Sign Possibly Gang Has Underrated Rivals

HAS the same sad fate which overtook our own Polo Grounds front runners for a pair of seasons caught up with the once proud Gas House Gangsters?

Definitely—for all that they were well aware of their pitching frailties—the Cards all along have been vocally confident they were the class of the circuit. When, now and then, they labored through an unfortunate series it did not seem to distress them. They merely shouted that this could be charged up to what Dizzy Dean terms "sperimentin" and then moved on to the next address.

In quieter moments all of them—manager and batboy—confided that they looked forward to the waning days of the season. Then, when experimenting had gone quite far enough, they expected to turn on so much heat that even Manhattan clients would be panicked into grudging applause.

They spoke with such great—and apparently quite honest—unconcern about the future that there is little wonder even the Giants believed them early in July. Even now—as one who picked them at the start and has abode with them in happy confidence ever since—I cannot believe they were up to some of their old sly tricks on a faithful follower.

Now that they have undoubtedly fulfilled the letter of their prophecies by turning on the heat and causing previously timid men and maids of Manhattan to indulge in ecstatic patty-cakings, I cannot believe that such miracle - working mortals were guilty of double-talking all the while.

So far as I am concerned they could scarcely have known that their boisterous antics would so sorely enrage the Boston and Pittsburgh peasants that the heat would come from such directions. Neither could they have had any inkling that the Manhattan merriment could be partly occasioned by the support they recently have been giving to one of the most amazing teams of recent seasons.

Frank Frisch

Instead, it seems that Frankie Frisch and his followers under-rated their adversaries. In spite of the fact that several St. Louis pennants have been won by mad drives down the home stretch, they seemed to feel that they never could be so sadly overtaken, as were the Giants and Cubs of other too recent seasons. So they were caught improperly arrayed for meeting visitors who sneaked upon them just as upon the Giants of a season back.

There are several reasons why the Cards still may be fortunate in the pennant chase. One of them is that the Giants started their spurt early and from very far back and so may be halted by the law of averages. Another is that there are men, especially pitchers, who can quickly be brought in from the farms, if Breadon and Rickey decide to risk a minor league pennant for the sake of a big-time success. The third, and probably best, reason is that the Cards are a set of husky, hard-bitten athletes. Only the Yankees, formed out of a very similar mold, have previously seemed able to recover as quickly from adversity. That ability to rise above defeat is most important in a flag chase. In fact, no team without this quality ever won a pennant.

Success in baseball often is almost entirely a matter of spirit. When the Braves came from the bottom to accomplish their 1914 miracle, they scarcely believed what was happening until almost at the finish. Then, when the going might have been tough, they were sustained by the conviction that, no matter how good opponents might seem to be, their own luck was considerably better. So they felt they had nothing to worry about and devoted their best efforts to playing baseball.

Somewhat the same thing happened to the Cubs last fall and to the Cards in 1934, although in both cases the short space of remaining time and utter collapse of a rival had much to do with the result. Indeed, several Cub stars quite frankly admitted that all along they felt it merely was a beautiful dream and only woke up when they found the Tigers whaling the merry blue blazes out of them in the World Series.

NOT IN THE BOX SCORE:

MRS. JOHNNY COONEY sings in the same high-class manner that her husband snares those line drives in the Brooklyn outfield . . . Pat Malone says that Tony Lazzeri is the smartest player with whom he ever has teamed . . . Johnny Evers once stole third base with a broken leg. He doubled to left, slid into the bag and came up limping. After that he went down to third and shortly thereafter discovered that a bone had been broken in his ankle.

What with salaries, the track's cut, etc., it costs the average ring book $1,200 a week to operate on New York courses. Because they pay higher salaries, the clubhouse nobles have a nut of close to $350 a day while the field hands need $63 for expenses each afternoon . . . Practically the only big fight Arthur Donovan has missed refereeing in New York during the past 30 months was the Baer-Braddock upset. Baer's advance squawk kept him out of that one . . . When viewed from a few yards away Elmer Voight, pro at Sunningdale, is almost a ringer for Paul Runyan. All of which helps explain the almost hopeless confusion of galleryites at the recent Westchester pro-amateur tourney. While playing in the same foursome, Runyan, who usually wears a hat, went bareheaded and Voight wore the type of hat Runyan usually affects.

Schmeling First Trained for Advertising Career

Max Schmeling

Max Schmeling put in three years learning the advertising business in Germany before he forgot it all and became a heavyweight boxer. His friends say he would probably have had big success as an advertising man for he is a shrewd business man . . . Pat Malone never has cashed a baseball salary check. Sends them home to the Missus . . . The average bank roll of a racetrack bookie is $5,000 to $7,500, if they operate in the main ring. Since the law does not permit bonding gamblers, the satchel slingers do not have to be annoyed by red tape. They go into action as soon as some responsible person has okayed them with the authorities . . . The picture of a celebrated tennis star is displayed on an equally celebrated transatlantic liner with the caption, "Hellen Mils Mody."

Would anybody like to bet about where you get the big news first? Six months ago (and at least four times between that date and the Schmeling-Braddock postponement) this writer definitely advised readers there would be no heavyweight championship bout this year. . . Secretary of State (N. Y.) Eddie Flynn and Mike Jacobs, the pugilistic impresario, have one habit in common. When they make notes and then slip the papers into the sweat bands of their hats you know there is no chance of their forgetting . . . There is very little wonder that the ambitious Dick Bartell loses so many of those diamond spats. Even when sparring in the dugout the Giants' mite forgets the first fight principle and leads with his right.

Bullet Berkholtz, Ohio State soph, is being tabbed as the new star of the Big Ten football firmament. They say he is a triple threat ace and one of the best ball carriers in years . . . They say Lynch is weak on pass defense and other such items even though he is a whale at lugging the ball . . . Horse players are not the only persons who get the old oil from owners. Many trainers feed olive oil to their gee-gees.

The Starved Man Returns

By SUE COLLINS

© McClure Newspaper Syndicate, WNU Service.

VINA BELLAMY had almost decided to chuck her job as associate editor of the Gray Book—the well-known short story magazine. Even though she should not be able to get something else for months, she decided she could no longer work under the editor, Mr. Harvey Doll. She had stood it four years and she was quite sure that the success of the magazine was in no small measure due to her efforts. But Mr. Doll seemed only to criticize her work and take all the credit for the publication's success as his.

As she sorted through the drawers of her desk, Vina came across a manuscript, typed on cheap manilla paper. It was obviously written by a beginner. Then Vina suddenly recalled the circumstances by which she had acquired that manuscript. A tall, lean, almost ferocious young man had pushed his way past the receptionist into her office "to see the guy that bought the stories for the Gray Book." He had been surprised to see a young girl of twenty-two in the office but it hadn't crushed his spirit.

That had been three years ago. Vina felt sorry for the young man. He actually had looked hungry as he tossed his manuscript down on her desk.

After a glance through the manuscript she thought it was worthless but she bought it. That is, she made out a fake pay slip, walked down the corridor with it, where she took thirty dollars from her pay envelope and brought it back, pretending she had been to the cashier's office. The man had thanked her and disappeared without leaving his name.

Well, here was the manuscript turning up again to revive the memories of happier days. She had read the manuscript after the young man had left and finding it quite unusual, she had passed it on to Mr. Doll in hopes he would find it usable and thus she'd get repaid. But Mr. Doll had found it not suited and returned it to her with the suggestion that she had better pick out better stories.

But as Vina read the story over after a three-year interlude, she decided to try her luck with the story again. It really was an unusual bit of writing. So she typed the manuscript on expensive paper at home that night, leaving it just as the young author had written it, not changing a comma or question mark. The next morning instead of informing Mr. Doll that she was considering leaving she handed him the manuscript, saying it had just been received. Mr. Doll did not remember the first time he had read the story. Instead, after lunch he walked into Vina's office and told her that the story was "amazing," that it was certainly just what he had been looking for for the November issue. "It's just the sort of writing Harold Bell does," Mr. Doll stated. "Put through a voucher to the cashier. We'll accept it for two hundred."

But Vina didn't have the slightest idea of how to find the author, and she didn't even know his name.

Vina awaiting developments decided to stick to her job until the November issue was off the press and to see if the author turned up. Mr. Doll decided to publish the story with a great splash as the manuscript of an unknown genius, unpaid because neither his name nor address were known. The November issue of the Gray Book was a sell-out because of the story and critics applauded Mr. Doll's pioneering work for unearthing such a great writer.

Then one day the illustrious Harold Bell rushed into the office, brushing aside the receptionist and office boy and making his way directly to the editorial offices. Mr. Doll was dumbfounded at a visit from the great writer. But Harold Bell paid no attention to the editor. He was engrossed in conversation with Vina Bellamy.

"That's my story," he said eagerly, "that everyone's talking about. And you're the girl that bought it from me three years ago. I've been on the watch for you for some time."

There were explanations on both sides. The now successful writer explained more leisurely than at the time of his first visit that he absolutely had been starving when Vina had bought the story. He'd been in and out of every editorial office in the city peddling the story but he couldn't get in to see the editors. Later, when he had managed to break through and had become successful, he had wanted to locate the girl who had actually saved him but he had forgotten where the offices were and even the name of the publication because of his condition.

Vina smiled. It certainly hadn't been a crazy act for her to give that ferocious looking young man thirty dollars of her own three years back. Look what had become of him—nothing could have made her happier.

But two weeks later when she resigned from the Gray Book, Vina was happier. She had a plausible excuse for quitting—she was going to marry Harold Bell and tour the world on a honeymoon.

Thinking Men Oppose Change

Prefer Security of Roosevelt's Sound Foreign Policy; Seeking Farm Vote

By EARL GODWIN

WASHINGTON. — We ought to be proud of the fact that the diplomats and rulers of the world look on Franklin Roosevelt as a master hand in the art of minding America's business in such a way that we are now about as free from entangling foreign alliances as we have ever been. This is important to the people of America because there is no doubt that in the eventual next world war the powers will endeavor to bring us into the scrap—as before.

Because of Roosevelt's strong position and his keen grasp of international affairs, plus the grave danger of the wrong man in the White House in a time of international stress, thinking men are talking against any idea of a change of administration. Landon has not, at this writing, given any inkling of what his views may be on these international matters; and for all I know he hasn't any—but it is well to remember that the series of little wars we inflicted on our small southern neighbors for years were the outcome of the so-called "dollar diplomacy" of the Wall street investors who used to run the state department.

We had an idea once that there was a manifest destiny which sent this country into every South American and West Indian cane brake and jungle to see whether or not we couldn't make a little money in some of these foreign enterprises. Then, to back up the American enterprises in these regions, we used to have a part of our navy and marine corps down there acting as policemen. This used to irritate these South American and West Indian countries beyond description and was the reason for the eternal ill feeling those folks used to bear toward us. There never was any reason for us to be backing up this type of dollar diplomacy which kept us on the verge of small warfare in Cuba, Nicaragua, Mexico and other neighboring lands. There may have been reason for us now and then to act the part of an armed arbiter in some hot-headed island where the natives were running wild—but by and large the wisest thing this country ever did was to drop all ideas of the big stick in other people's countries and start on the Roosevelt idea of being a good neighbor to everybody.

We are working up trade agreements that are showing up the old selfish high tariff policies; we have certainly gained a great foothold in Canada that way; also in several other countries. We are about to stage a great western-world conference in South America which ought to lead to the establishment of a solid North American bloc of countries to stand together, mind their own business, and resist European and Asiatic influences. It may be the new world against the old world sometime in the future, and we can start right now to get ready.

Roosevelt sees a long way ahead in these world matters; it would be a shameful thing to sidetrack him now just as he is getting the United States in a leading international position as a peace maker.

Roosevelt has been keeping his weather eye open on European affairs for a long time past; and the country should realize that it has been far seeing statesmanship which has placed us right now in a strong neutral position with respect to every one of the European snarls—including the Spanish horror. Otherwise you would have seen us gradually edging our way into a European war through the device of moneys loaned or munitions sold to one side or the other. But Roosevelt's neutrality policies, backed up by congress, have made it clear to the world that we will have none of Europe's dirty mess.

COURTING FARM VOTES.

The farm vote is the exciting prize in this campaign; and it is interesting to know that the Roosevelt campaign in the Middle West farm belt is to be conducted educationally by a non partisan, or possible omini-partisan committee of farm leaders who have been hammering on New Deal principles for years past. Headed by William Settle of the Indiana farm bureau federation, this committee is now being organized throughout several states and has some well known names connected with it at this writing. There is Frank Murphy of Minneapolis, attorney for several large farm organizations, and remembered for the fact that although he was a delegate to the G. O. P. convention which nominated Hoover, he bolted that outfit and led 5,000 farmers to Houston demanding a farm plank that meant something.

Another well known Mid-West farm leader on this committee is Homer Hush of Iowa, who makes the plain statement that "the farmer who deserts Roosevelt is a sucker." Others are Paul Weis of Wisconsin, a Progressive; Sam Fishman, Kansas Republican read out of that party by Chairman John Hamilton of the G. O. P national commit- of the founders of the nonpartisan league.

This committee will have its headquarters in Chicago; you will see the result of its efforts in the way of educational matter in the form of booklets, pamphlets, cartoons and exhibits. One of the Republican efforts it is now engaged in combating is the G. O. P. hatred of the reciprocal trade treaties. As I have told you in this column, there is a grave danger in farmers being beguiled into believing the reciprocal trade treaties are a menace to agriculture—and vote for the Landon administration without realizing they are voting to build a tariff wall which will bring back all the old evils that pestered and ruined them before. A Republican tariff has always worked wonders for the industrialists who put up the prices of everything they sold to farmers—while the farmers got nothing at all out of it.

NO WASTE HERE.

It is a sad commentary on the selfish political tactics of the New Deal's enemies that they continually refer to the "waste" of the Public Works program and never yet have given credit for such enormously helpful things as the 4,115 schools which have been built this past two and a half years with Public Works money. Thus providing facilities for 1,200,000 children who otherwise would have either not been provided for or who would have been crowded into completely inadequate rooms or buildings.

There is no wastefulness in such a program. It was an employment-creating drive, which not only gave jobs, spread millions of dollars where they were needed, but provided a great investment in American citizenship.

These schools, which range from one-room buildings to whole new high schools, are scattered over half the 3,071 American counties in all the states. These buildings represent 70 per cent of all the new school buildings in the country in the past two and a half years. This 70 per cent cost $462,000,000, of which the federal government gives more than half. Some of the money, about $90,000,000, was loaned to the communities by the government and will be repaid. The rest was raised by the taxpayers in the communities benefited. There is no waste and no local kick; why then does a man who knows as much as Frank Knox go roaring around the country belaboring Roosevelt for a program that has done as much as this PWA school building program? It reflects on a man's intellectual honor to make charges like Knox makes.

The figures I have reported here have just come from Secretary Ickes; they do not include $30,000,000 spent by the federal government on federal schools among the Indians and at the military and naval academies.

In addition, the government has loaned nearly $60,000,000 to universities which have built new gymnasiums, cafeteria for students, much needed dormitories, etc. The actual expenditures so far (there being a lot yet to come) total $200,000,000 and have provided 800,000 months of work for laboring men at the local sites, and 4,000,000 months of labor per man at various factories. PWA, thus far, has done a tremendous job in resuscitating the school-world from the low level it had fallen into during the depression years, especially the period 1930 to 1933.

ANOTHER QUESTION.

That old question "what is the Constitution between friends" gives way now to the question "what is the Supreme Court among the governors of drouth-stricken states." That is a local matter, and as the result of this there was a great deal of political hot air blown this way and that by various gentlemen seeking to oust Mr. Roosevelt from the White House. They declared he was violating states' rights and what not—but I notice that the minute he and the responsible officials of the drouth-stricken communities got down to brass tacks, they had no other idea about solving agriculture's drouth problem than on a national basis; not a state basis; and mainly with federal and not with state funds.

In that way of course the President has injected the Constitution into the campaign. He did not do so in any political argument on his trip through the drouth area; and his trip was entirely official and not political. Yet the consequences must have a bearing on politics and on the campaign. It strikes me the situation is a complete practical answer to the legalistic and I think the erroneous conclusions of the Supreme Court.

The President's general program for agriculture and federal spending to aid the distressed millions, therefore, seems to have everybody's approval; and that means Gov. Alf Landon, too. I don't see how the Republicans can make an issue of federal spending, or how anyone can split hairs on whether or not agriculture is a local or a national matter.

Curiously enough, the Landon managers are hoping to make a great vote getting impression among the crowded millions of the eastern cities; and one of their arguments with the city folks is that the New Deal's agricultural policies have raised food prices and thus increased the living costs of the city dwellers.

STAR DUST

Movie • Radio

By VIRGINIA VALE

HENRY FONDA'S marriage to Frances Seymour Brokaw will increase the little circle of smart society women who, married to motion picture actors, reside in Hollywood. Richard Barthelmess, Gary Cooper and Fred Astaire all married into the Social Register.

Incidentally, Mrs. Brokaw's life story is rather like that of a movie. Born in a small town in Massachusetts, she was the poor cousin of the wealthy Rogers family. Very pretty, very charming, she had everything but money.

She met George T. Brokaw, who had both wealth and social position, fell in love with him, married him, in 1931. Mr. Brokaw died nearly two years ago, leaving his widow and their small daughter well provided for. She never forgot what it meant not to have plenty of money. She has done notable things in charity work. Henry Fonda, whom she met this summer in Europe, is a fortunate young man.

Bette Davis

Bette Davis may seem to be a temperamental star when it comes to battling over stories and salary, but away from the studio she is most decidedly just another human being.

Not long ago she and her husband were traveling through the Canadian Rockies, on the first part of that vacation trip she's taking. She did rather startle the other guests at the hotel in Lake Louise by wearing a very low-cut evening gown—but she startled them still more by taking the bus to Banff the next day, instead of being exclusive and going in a private car.

Here's a new way to break into the movies. Marjorie Gage, a young society girl, likes to fly. She entered her own plane for the Ruth Chatterton Flying Cup race—and first thing she knew, had been engaged for a picture "The Flying Hostess".

Simone Simon does so well in "Girls' Dormitory" that she is being pushed right ahead. An American girl who, just for fun, acted in a French film made in Salzburg summer before last, declared when she came back that Simone was the cutest thing she ever saw.

"Her face and her figure are both cute," she announced. "And her mind's cute too." Take that as a compliment or the reverse just as you please. Anyway, Simone will be seen next in "White Hunter," with Warner Baxter.

A short story which has attracted much attention, "Beyond the Sound of a Machine Gun," has been purchased by a leading studio, and in it will appear George Raft, Cary Grant, Randolph Scott and Fred MacMurray.

We're to have still more Dickens on the screen. "Pickwick Papers" will be the next Dickens picture. Paramount intended to make it with W. C. Fields, but that plan has been abandoned, and Metro has taken it on.

Jean Muir

Jean Muir decided recently that she'd like her hair better if it were brown, instead of blonde. Also, she cut off her bangs. Then she made some tests for Warner Brothers. They objected to the changes. And as a result of a lot of argument, the hair stayed brown but the bangs returned. Some movie fans are betting that eventually Jean will return to blonde hair. They point out that it was as a petite blonde that Jean first attracted attention and that its appeal is one of her big assets.

The cycle of war pictures is well under way. Twentieth Century-Fox launched it with "The Road to Glory," and continues it with the forthcoming "King of the Kyber Rifles" and "The Splinter Fleet."

ODDS AND ENDS . . . The young Dionnes are learning some English words for "Reunion," their next picture . . . Eleanor Powell plans to drive East in October, see some new plays in New York, pick up her grandfather and grandmother and drive back to the coast . . . Pretty good for a girl who learned to drive so recently . . . William S. Hart may return to the screen . . . Did you know that the John D. M. Hamilton who is so prominent in the Republican party is a brother of Hale Hamilton, who once was a movie star? . . . Ruth Chatterton plans to return to the stage this fall, no matter how many motion picture companies want her to work for them.

Maine Is Captured by the Republicans

MAINE, the "barometer" state, is back in the Republican column at least so far as its state ticket is concerned. The G. O. P. captured the United States senatorship, the governorship and three congressional seats. Senator Wallace H. White, Republican, defeated Gov. Louis J. Brann, who sought to unseat him. Lewis O. Barrows, Republican, won the governorship by a substantial majority over F. Harold Dubord, Democrat.

The vote cast broke all records for size and interest in the election was intense. The state had been visited by both President Roosevelt, as he returned from his vacation cruise, and Gov. Alf M. Landon, the Republican Presidential nominee, who made speeches there only a few days ago. Colonel Knox, vice presidential candidate on the Republican ticket, also had canvassed the state. Brann, who was elected governor in 1932 and re-elected two years later, was the first Democrat to hold that office in Maine and was personally popular. White was elected senator in 1930 after ten years in the house of representatives.

Communism Is Denounced by Pope Pius

POPE PIUS XI may be physically weak, as recent reports say, but age and illness have not lessened the vigor of his opinions and his way of expressing them. In greeting and blessing some five hundred Spanish refugees who were received at Castel Gandolfo, the holy father took occasion to denounce strongly the "mad" forces of Communism which, he declared, menaced, in Spain and elsewhere, "the very foundations of all order, all culture and all civilization." He urged the constituted authorities of all nations to oppose "these great evils with every remedy and barrier that is possible" and prophesied that there will be utter chaos if "those who have a duty in the matter do not hasten to repair the breach—if, indeed, it is not already too late."

Pope Pius XI

The pope spoke especially of the situation in Spain, but said the crisis there is "a school in which the most serious lesson is being taught to Europe and to the whole world—to a world now at last wholly steeped, ensnared and threatened by subversive propaganda, and more especially to a Europe battered and shaken to its very foundation."

For forty minutes the pontiff spoke passionately, his voice at times broken with emotion, and his address was transmitted by radio to all the civilized world.

Reichsfuehrer Hitler, too, took another hard whack at the Communists at a ceremonial tribute to the World war dead in Nuremberg. Before 120,000 uniformed Nazis and 50,000 others he boasted of Germany's armed strength and shouted:

"Our old enemy, bolshevism, is vanquished within Germany, but still active around her borders. But let no one be deceived. We are ready at any hour. We all have one wish—to maintain peace — but with it goes one firm decision: Never to surrender Germany to that enemy we have come to know so well."

If Hitler, as some think, tries to lead the coming five-power Locarno conference into forming an anti-Soviet alliance, he will be firmly opposed by France. Foreign Minister Yvon Delbos says so, and declares France will under no circumstances abandon her military pact with Soviet Russia.

According to Pravda, authoritative newspaper of Moscow, Hitler plans to attack and partition Czechoslovakia before he embarks on a war against the Soviet union.

Benito Mussolini and his cabinet appropriated large sums to build up Italy's army, navy and air forces to greater strength and planned to carry on vigorously the campaign for self-sufficiency in raw materials.

It looked as if the dove of peace was preparing to leave Europe, and as relations between Japan and China grew more strained every day, she probably will have to take refuge on the western continent.

British Workers Reject Alliance With Reds

BRITISH organized labor will have no truck with the Communists. The trades union congress at Plymouth rejected, by overwhelming votes, three resolutions favoring the formation of a "popular front" alliance with the reds, similar to the combinations that captured the governments of France and Spain.

In this action the workers were largely influenced by the fiery words of Sir Walter Citrine, international labor leader, who has just returned from a visit to Russia. Said he:

"After years of derision of the principles of the Socialist movement, after abuse of unions as the pillars of capitalism, we now have the curiously incongruous spectacle of Communist organizations wanting to come into our midst and be a part of the movement they have so derided.

"I do not know whether you are so credulous as really to believe that there is a sincere conversion to the principles of organized labor. However, for myself and the national council of labor I say without hesitation that the single, simple explanation of the tactics of the Communist movement today is the obvious, abject failure that has accompanied attempts to capture the Socialist movement for Communist principles."

San Sebastian Captured by Spanish Rebels

THE Spanish rebels scored their greatest victory to date when they captured San Sebastian, capital of Guipuzcoa province and famous Bay of Biscay resort. Santa Barabara fort, dominating the city, was first taken and the city's war council then decided to abandon the place, despite the opposition of the anarchists. The more conservative Basque nationals prevented the reds from burning the city, only a paper factory and two residences being destroyed, and the defending forces retreated toward Bilbao, accompanied by thousands of civilians and foreigners.

The municipal governor, Antonio Ortega, and his staff boarded a yacht to go to new headquarters at Zumaya, about 15 miles west of San Sebastian. The new line of defense was established at Orio.

Farmers Will Meet to Plan Conservation

SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE WALLACE is arranging a series of community meetings of farmers for the purpose of laying out the "agricultural conservation program" for next year. He said the AAA planned the meetings in the farm areas in order to discuss crop insurance and possible maximum limits of benefit payments to each farm. He explained the program aimed at providing "greater abundance for the average American home," and should "help to check soil erosion, improve fertility, encourage better land use and maintain farm income."

Fleet Will Maneuver in North Pacific Waters

BACK at his desk after an illness of six months, Secretary of the Navy Claude A. Swanson immediately made an announcement that will be of deep interest to Japan. The annual fleet maneuvers, which last May were shifted to the Canal Zone as a conciliatory gesture to Japan, will be held next year in North Pacific and Hawaiian waters, and probably the Tokio press will yelp again.

Sec. Swanson

With the announcement Secretary Swanson asserted Japanese plans to retain overage submarines and destroyers involve a "violation" of the London and Washington naval treaties, which are to expire December 31 by Japanese abrogation. He followed up his charge with the statement that the United States has completed plans for two new battleships and is prepared to begin construction "at a moment's notice."

The fleet maneuvers, officially designated as "fleet problem No. 18," will be held during late May and early June. The area of operation, it was indicated, will be the triangle between the Aleutian Islands, Hawaii, and Seattle, where the fleet problem of 1935 was conducted. Vessels and planes probably will work as far west as the Wake Islands.

Armament of the new battleships is at present limited to 14 inch guns, but Admiral William H. Standley, chief of naval operations, said frankly that if Japan does not agree to this limitation by next April, "the sky is the limit."

Sabotage on American Warship Revealed

OUR navy's intelligence department has discovered that a recent small fire on the cruiser Indianapolis while she was being overhauled in the New York navy yard was caused by the driving of phonograph needles and nails into an electric cable; and other suspected sabotage on war vessels is being investigated. The work on the cruiser was being done by civilian employees and Capt. Charles A. Dunn, industrial manager of the yard, said the placing of the nails in the cables was "undoubtedly" a deliberate attempt to damage the cruiser.

Workers Undernourished, Says the A. F. of L.

IN ITS monthly survey of business the American Federation of Labor asserts that, despite increased industrial profits, there is widespread undernourishment among the wage earners. It adds that industry can well afford to raise the wages of the workers.

A study of employed workers' incomes in North Atlantic cities, the federation said, showed that only 26 per cent met the (income) requirements for an adequate diet, while 30 per cent did not have enough food to meet minimum requirements.

Asking "what income will assure a satisfactory food budget for a family of four?" the survey said:

"The figures for Detroit indicate that families with less than $1,900 a year, for father, mother and two half-grown children, do not spend enough for food to buy the adequate diet at moderate cost."

Says Foreign Power Hired Him to Shoot King

GEORGE ANDREW McMAHON, on trial in London for drawing a revolver on King Edward during a parade last July, made the astounding assertion that he had been hired by representatives of a foreign power to shoot the monarch and they agreed to pay him 150 lbs. The man already had been acquitted on two of the three charges against him when he made the confession. It will be remembered that instead of shooting at Edward, he threw his revolver toward the king, who was mounted.

On the third charge, of unlawfully producing a pistol near the king with intent to alarm his majesty, McMahon was given one year in prison.

Discord in the World Power Congress

HUNDREDS of delegates, from many nations, were present when the third World Power conference opened in Washington, with President Julius Dorpmueller in the chair. Prospects were good for a useful discussion of the problems connected with the industry, but discord crept in early in the proceedings. At a round table debate on public regulation and ownership of utilities, M. P. Davidson, representing Mayor Fiorello La Guardia of New York, said the only way to reduce electric rates is by threatening public ownership. Three prominent private utility men promptly "took a walk," and John C. Dalton, manager of the County of London Electric Supply, criticized Davidson's talk as a "tirade."

Julius Dorpmueller

The discussion started in connection with a paper by John E. Zimmerman, president of the United Gas Improvement company, who held that power "yardsticks" such as the TVA and Boulder Dam cannot be compared with private utilities unless operating conditions are similar. Such yardsticks, he said, will lead to competitive methods already proved "wasteful and unsatisfactory."

In papers taking the opposite view, Prof. William E. Mosher of Syracuse university, and James C. Bonright of the New York State Power Authority, held that public competition with private companies is "indisputable evidence" of declining faith in regulation.

Magnus Johnson, Former Senator, Dies

MAGNUS JOHNSON, who came from Sweden as an immigrant about forty years ago and made himself a power in Minnesota politics, is dead of pneumonia at the age of sixty-five. Johnson was an early enthusiast for co-operatives and for the Farmer-Labor movement and served in both houses of the Minnesota legislature. In 1923 he was elected United States senator to fill out the term of the late Knute Nelson. Defeated for the governorship in 1926, he retired to his farm, but in 1932 he was elected to congress. He was defeated for re-election in 1934 by Harold Knutson, and in the primary last June lost the farmer-Labor gubernatorial nomination to Elmer Benson.

Brazil's Babassu Oil Worries Dairymen

AMERICAN dairymen are protesting vainly to Secretary of State Hull against the reciprocal trade treaty with Brazil which, they assert, is seriously injuring the industry by encouragement of the manufacture of imitation butter. Under the treaty Brazilian babassu oil, unknown in United States markets prior to 1935, now is being used at the rate of more than a million pounds a month for manufacture of a butter substitute.

Mr. Hull referred the protests to Assistant Secretary Sayre, who pointed out that the provision for free importation of the nut and oil was authorized by congress in the trade agreement act of 1934. He added that the success of the program was of vital interest to the American dairy farmer, "who has more to gain from the re-establishment of prosperous domestic markets for his products through the restoration of an abundant foreign trade than by a policy of excluding even the most remotely competitive products."

Wrap-Around Apron Frock

Here's the style of apron-frock you've been wanting, a wrap-around that affords unhampered freedom of movement whether you're scrubbing the floor, or hanging drapes.

The wide contrasting ruff collar is feminine and trim while three bright buttons do their share for the bodice closing. Short puff sleeves are cleverly styled, simple, and comfortable and there's a conveniently large pocket to hold what nots. A narrow adjustable belt supplies that refinement known as "center poise" and helps "coverall." Truly it fits like the proverbial glove.

Barbara Bell Pattern No. 1961-B is available for sizes 32, 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, 44 and 46. Size 34 requires 4⅝ yards of 39-inch material plus ⅞ yard of contrast.

Send for the Barbara Bell Fall Pattern Book containing 100 well-planned, easy-to-make patterns. Exclusive fashions for children, young women, and matrons. Send fifteen cents for your copy.

Household Questions

When making bread and butter pudding, sprinkle each slice of bread and butter with desiccated coconut instead of currants, and strew some on the top. This will make a change from the ordinary pudding and will be found very tasty.

Brothers Were Strangers

The recent death of an aged man in a little one-room cabin near Canisteo, New York, disclosed the fact that he and his brother had lived there together as strangers—divided by a chalk line and silence pact—for the past 62 years. During all this time neither had ever crossed the line or spoken a word to the other.—Collier's Weekly.

Accidents Kill More Young Than Three Diseases

Auto Crashes Lead in List of Fatalities

Washington.—More than twice as many children under 15 years are killed by accidents as by three common communicable diseases, measles, scarlet fever and diphtheria.

This fact emerges in a study of fatal childhood accidents which has been undertaken by the U. S. Public Health Service here. First section of the study relating to automobile accidents, has just been reported by William M. Gafafer, senior statistician of the federal health service.

For children under one year of age mechanical suffocation leads the list of fatal accidents. At one and two years burns caused most fatal accidents. Automobile accidents and burns lead at three years.

The Dangerous Age.

At four years and from then up to fifteen years, automobile accidents rank first as cause of accidental deaths and also outnumber deaths from the three diseases, measles, scarlet fever and diphtheria. The study was limited to the year 1930, the most recent year for which accurate population enumerations exist.

Mr. Gafafer divided the country into three geographic regions, Northeastern, North Central, Southeastern and Western, and reviewed the fatality figures region by region.

The Northeastern region had most childhood automobile deaths per hundred thousand children. Next greatest number was found in the Western region. Then followed the North Central and finally the Southeastern with fewest deaths per hundred thousand children.

"Blanks" in Mind Occur Several Times a Minute

Chicago.—Your mind "goes blank" several times every minute. During these blank periods you involuntarily stop work for a couple of seconds. If you are tired, the stops occur oftener—maybe eight or ten times each minute—and they may last twice as long.

This automatic putting on of brakes by the brain was discovered in experiments conducted at the psychology laboratory of the University of Chicago here, under the direction of Prof. Arthur G. Bills.

Mind Stops Work.

The "blocks," as Professor Bills calls these blank periods, are not complete, he explains. The individual does not lose track of what is going on, but he must mentally stop work on the task at hand.

Blocks partly account for the "er-r-r" and "Ah" which public speakers put between words. These blanks are particularly conspicuous when a person is doing rapid calculating. Every so often, he is unable to proceed and stalls. Fatigue increases both the frequency and the duration of the blocks, causing bunching of responses or spurts of work.

How Stutterers React.

Stutterers block about twice as often as normal persons and their blocks last longer, it was found.

"It is safe to assume that there is a common neurological basis between blocking and stuttering," Professor Bills concluded.

Mental blocks are enforced resting periods, he explained. They may account for the fact that continuous mental work does not impair mental efficiency to nearly the same extent that muscular work impairs muscular efficiency, he believes.

First "Quake" Recorder Is Placed in Museum

Philadelphia.—The first earthquake recorder in the United States, placed in service at Lick observatory at the University of California in 1886, will soon go on display at the museum of the Franklin institute here.

The Lick observatory instrument was one of the few in California at the time of the disastrous 'quake in San Francisco on April 18, 1906. The observatory is only 45 miles away from San Francisco. The original record of this severe and damaging shock is still preserved and shows that while the vibrations threw the recording mechanism off the tracing paper, the apparatus functioned unharmed.

The Road of the Transgressor

THE youngest reporter slumped in her Pullman chair and pulled the article she was writing on crime from her bag. With the check that she hoped to wring from some soft-hearted editor she planned to buy a new coat. Of course the article was still in its swaddling clothes, as it were. She really had not progressed beyond the title, "The Road of the Transgressor." The trouble was that she couldn't decide whether the road of the transgressor was hard or soft. Some transgressors she knew were in clover.

She glanced around the car, hoping to spot a criminal type that would start the fount of inspiration bubbling. But the car was filled with respectable middle-aged ladies who looked as though they might be the past presidents of their local women's clubs. There were two men in the car, one stout and prosy with a long black ribbon dangling from his nose glasses. The other had swung his green chair - back squarely in her face.

"Are there no one-eyed desperadoes left with daggers in their socks?" mourned the Youngest Reporter, her eye on the back of the green plush chair. Then, as though conscious of a thought hovering around it, the green chair slowly revolved and revealed a young man, lean, tanned and abominably good looking. Glorious Apollo, thought the reporter, as he looked at her for a brief moment, then swung his chair half way around and stared at the landscape.

"Gosh," she moaned to herself, "here I am with 50 miles of a cindery train ride ahead of me and an interview with a funny old woman who's running for mayor of a funny old town, on a clean-up plank or platform, or whatever it is they run on. And I can't say boo to the only good looking person on the train simply because it is not conventional. But hang it, I'm going to, just the same. Here goes!"

"I'm quite sure we've never met before," she began in her most Ethel Barrymoreish voice.

The young man turned abruptly and smiled.

"There are a good many wasted years behind us," he agreed pleasantly.

"I'm looking for a man with criminal tendencies," said the reporter, rustling her yellow scratch paper. "I want to dissect him and write him into an article so I can buy a new fur coat."

"You're barking up the right tree," said the young man cheerfully. "If my criminal tendencies were laid end to end on the front page of a morning paper I'd be lynched."

From then on they progressed by leaps and bounds, which may have been the reason the reporter could not keep her mind on Mrs. Minerva Locke, the mayoralty nominee of Mechanicsville, who was running for office on a clean-up plank or board or something.

"Politics is the dirtiest game in the world," stormed Mrs. Locke, pacing angrily up and down her mulberry and taupe living room, whose western windows overlooked the mill city of Mechanicsville in the hollow. "Look at me!" she went on, tapping her stout person with a stubby finger. "I am a good woman! I am running on a cleaner-and - better Mechanicsville plank. And what happens? My opponent, Peter Hinman, and his henchmen start a whispering campaign that threatens to ruin me politically. The story that I am a woman with a past, a former dancer in a Western mining town dance hall, is spreading up and down the political highways and byways. And what can I do? Nothing!"

"Can't you deny it?" asked the reporter idly, her mind wandering to the young man on the train. He, too, lived in Mechanicsville. He had asked her her name and destination and she had told him. He had been strangely silent then and had proffered no return information about himself and she had been too proud to ask. He had promised to call her at Mrs. Locke's house before she went back to Boston.

"Deny it!" raged Mrs. Locke. "You can't deny a thing until you're openly accused, child. It would smack of a guilty conscience if you did and spread the tale even further. Of course, my friends laugh at the story. But there are a good many women in this town who would like to believe the worst about another woman. And I need all their votes."

"The way of the transgressor is hard," quoted the reporter bromidically. "Peter Hinman will be punished."

"The way of the transgresssor is a bed of roses, compared with the lot of a woman who tries to get anywhere in Mechanicsville on a clean-up platform. Why, let me tell you—" She was off on a long harangue, during which the Youngest Reporter's mind wandered again to the man on the train. Would he call tonight or tomorrow morning? Who was he, anyway? She adored the way his hair grew thick and smooth off his forehead. An uneasy premonition smote her that she was about to make a fool of herself over this man.

"Don't you agree with me?" asked Mrs. Locke suddenly.

"Oh, my, yes," said the reporter, wondering what the woman had been talking about. The reformer's little red-brown eyes were on her suspiciously.

"Why don't you fight fire with fire?" struggled the reporter, improvising as she went. "Start a counter whispering campaign against Peter Hinman. Give him a purple past and a purpler present. Make it hot for him."

Mrs. Locke dropped into an over-plushed chair and sat in deep thought for a minute or two. Two little flames were flickering in her eyes as she turned to the girl.

"Will you help me?" she asked.

"Of course!" agreed the Youngest Reporter enthusiastically. If she had known what she was letting herself in for!

"We'll do this," began Mrs. Locke, her fat cheeks purpling with excitement as she laid her scheme.
